Senate packs chamber to consider expulsion

WASHINGTON (AP) — A packed Senate was urged Wednesday to cast out one of its own for the first time since the Civil War, on ground that the Abscam crimes of Harrison A. Williams Jr., (D-N.J.), "sullied both his reputation and that of this institition."

Williams, a 23-year veteran of the Senate, "traded on his office" for personal gain, declared Sen. Howell Heflin of Alabama, the ranking Democrat on the Ethics Committee.

"At any point in this drawnout, sordid affair, Sen. Williams could have said 'Wait a minute. What you're proposing is wrong. This is not what I had in mind. I can't be involved in this'," Heflin said.

"But he didn't. He stayed; he discussed; he agreed; he promised; he pledged - to abuse his office, his public trust for which now he must be expelled," Heflin said.

One colleague, Assistant Democratic Leader Alan Cranston of California, fought for a lesser penalty, censure, by which Williams could escape banishment from office.

But the Ethics Committee's report said Williams' conduct was "ethically repugnant and tends to bring the Senate into dishonor and disrepute... "Only the most severe sanction is appropriate."

The 62-year-old Williams, dressed in a dark gray suit, blue shirt with white collar and a red tie, sat in the second row of seats to the right of the chair from which Vice President George Bush presided. Nearly all members were present for the debate, which could last until Tuesday.

Shortly before the session opened, Williams told a crowd of reporters outside the capitol that he was eager to present his case.

"I have an opportunity to prove that I should be staying in the Senate," he said. "That's what this is all about as far as I'm concerned. I did nothing wrong."

Senate Republican Leader Howard Baker Jr. urged the entire membership to attend throughout the debate. To help keep their attention focused, an anteroom room where newsmen usually interview senators was placed off-limits.

Williams' wife, Jeannette, watched the proceedings from the gallery as the debate opened shortly before 2 p.m.

Democratic Leader Robert C. Byrd of West Virginia called on his colleagues to "cast aside all feelings of friendship, collegiality and camaraderie" in considering the resolution.

Sen. Malcolm Wallop, (R-Wyo.), and Heflin explained the committee's report.

The Senate's options short of expulsion include censure, returning the case to a committee for further study or deferring it until Williams' legal appeals are exhausted.

Expulsion requires a twothirds vote of the Senate; censure can be decreed by a simple majority.

The last Senate expulsion was in 1862 when Jesse Bright, (D-Ind.), was ousted for conspiring to sell guns to the Confederacy.

park permits.

— Allow the new community of Bel Aire in Sedgwick County to issue bonds as other cities can do while its attempt to incorporate is tied up in litigation by the city of Wichita, which is fighting its incorporation.

THE HOUSE KILLED, 26-51, during debate a bill which would have given the money derived from the sale of stray livestock to the general fund of the county in which the sale occurred, rather than crediting it to the state Livestock Brand Fee Fund.

Opponents said the money is needed by the state Livestock Commission, who estimated it would lose $13,000 revenue annually. The Kansas Sheriffs Association sought the change.

Rolfs urged the House to let Junction City proceed with annexation of part of Fort Riley, but Rep. Ivan Sand (R-Manhattan) successfully opposed it.

"I believe the annexation should move ahead," Rolfs said. "All I'm asking you to do is to move it back to the county line and let the elected officials back home fight it out among themselves."

HIS AMENDMENT would have allowed annexation up to the Riley-Geary County line.

"I do not think it is good government for a city to annex parts of military reservation when it will provide no services ... and never will," Sand said. "Without this bill ... Junction City will annex the 110,000 acres of land which constitute the Fort Riley Military Reservation. There are no laws on the book to stop it."

That annexation would come by April 6, Sand told the House.

He said Junction City hopes to gain between $100,000 and $1 million in extra tax revenue by the annexation.

That money now is going to other governmental units in the Fort Riley area, he said, so Junction City is just taking it away from other counties and cities.

The post straddles Geary and Riley counties, but about two-thirds of the personnel stationed there live in Riley County.

Dissect

"It is fun working with things instead of doing book work," Glen Olberding, freshman in engineering, said.

But more than being "just fun," Olberding said he liked the dissective course because it related to real things in life — putting into perspective what he could expect in future courses and situations.

"Dissective engineering gives students hands-on experience with things that have already been designed," Nesmith said. "Kids today don't have the experience that kids had before World War II."

One of the reasons today's youth don't have that experience is that manufacturers are producing products that won't have to be repaired or fixed, he said.

But today many products are manufactured to be thrown away. Lighters, razors and coffeemakers are all included in the work."
throw away group.

"I suspect primarily that labor and automation have reduced the need for repairing items," Nesmith said. "Because of mass production, it can be cheaper to throw things away instead of repairing them."

"When you take a Timex watch in to be repaired, they throw it away and give you a new one. They do this mainly because it costs more to repair the old one," Nesmith said.

If something needs to be fixed, a skilled person can figure out what is wrong with the product, repair and reassemble it. For objects that cannot be thrown away, it "almost takes an expert to work on them," he said.

"Any kid can take a one-speed bike apart because of its simple construction. But an expert may need to be called in to work on a 10-speed bike," Nesmith said.

The most unusual characteristic of the Concepts of Engineering course is its ability to provide industrial experience as well as a formal education, he said.

Through dissective engineering, Nesmith said he hopes to provide students with practical hands-on experience in the engineering sector.

To promote skin beauty you must have skin health. That means skin maintains a slightly acid film at all times, known as its "ACID MANTLE." For instance, the pH of normal skin measures around 5.5. This alkaline content tends to destroy the skin's protective "ACID MANTLE," causing it to lose its delicate moisture balance.

Senate process for allocations begins Thursday

Preparations for the tentative allocation process in Student Senate will begin at tonight's meeting.

Senate will hear five-minute presentations from 14 groups that plan to request funds during tentative allocations in April.

The groups that will be represented are: Off-Campus Student Association, FONE Crisis Center, Sexuality Education and Counseling Services, University Learning Network, Legal Services, Women's Resource Center, University for Man, Rest Period, Recreational Services Council, Infant and Child Care Center, Students for Handicapped Concerns, Fenix, Phi Theta Kappa and Student Governing Association.

"The groups will tell about the activities they've done this year, what they do and why they are asking for funds," said Geri Greene, senate chairman and junior in journalism and mass communications.

She said another 13 or 14 groups will appear before senate next week for their presentations.

Senate will also vote on a resolution for the acceptance of the new Associated Students of Kansas campus Director John Kohler, junior in economics and political science.

Greene said Kohler was appointed by the state organization of ASK and will serve for a year.

"I see my main duties as being a broker of information," Kohler said. "I will see the stand that students are taking on issues and relay that to the executive director of ASK. I will also get information from him on the status of legislation concerning K-State and give the students feedback about where we are in the legislative process."

Kohler served as legislative affairs director on former Student Body President Angela Scanlan's cabinet. He was also chairman of ASK's Social Issue Task Force and a K-State delegate to the ASK Legislative Assembly in February.

Senate will vote on another resolution for the approval of the FONE Crisis Center's assistant coordinator. Jose Luis Rivera, junior in marketing, was chosen by the senate personnel committee to fill the position.

First reading of a bill will be heard for the allotment of funds totalling $42,000 for the operation of six services during the summer session. The groups requesting funds are the Union, Student Publications, Recreational Services, University for Man, Summer School Artists Series and K-State Players.

Additional nominations and voting for the positions of senate vice chairman, Faculty Senate representative and parliamentarian will also take place at the meeting.

Ants' release breaks from tradition

By KENT HERMES
Collegian Reviewer

Review

It's difficult for most Americans to comprehend and accept the sociological circumstances that have caused the dandyism movement in Britain.

How could a "normal" guy wear makeup and dress in clothes straight from the 16th century?

Fair question. The eccentric leader of Visage, Steve Strange, was asked why he fancied historic garb.

His reply: "Why not?"

Another prince of dandy, Adam Ant hasn't exactly pranced his way into the heart of many an FM programmer or rock journalist in the states. Like many, he's remained a strong concert draw without the help of narrow-minded commercial radio.

Adam and the Ants' debut, "Kings of the Wild Frontier," carried the cry of the new romanticism taking place in a portion of English music and society. Unlike the punks, violence is avoided and self-destruction to be replaced with celebration.

The newest Adam and the Ants adventure, "Prince Charming," breaks away from the "Ant music" sound. The unrelenting rumble of drums and frantic pace have taken a back seat to more creative style and content.

"Scorpios" toys with a Latin-style rumba, complete with a wall of trumpet-horn arrangement. The mood is contradicted by lyrics like, "and if by chance you cling to hate, just rest assured it's your mistake," and, "look pretty, look young, be fearless like the Scorpion/look pretty, have fun, don't listen when you're told there's none."

The title track is the new dandy anthem. It drags with a chant-like feel, another contrast to content. "Silk or leather or a feather/respect yourself and all those around you," and "Don't you ever stop being a dandy, showing me you're handsome."

They also give a try at satire of country and funk music with "5 Guns West," and "Ant Rap." The tunes work well with excellent production. The semi-successful "Stand and Deliver" is remixed with a softer edge on the new LP.

If the previous Ant efforts had you unplugging the jukebox, then you'll no doubt enjoy the latest from the dandy highwaymen.

Higher fire protection rating reduces insurance expenses

At a special City Commission meeting last night, Manhattan Fire Chief William Smith revealed that many property owners in the city will be eligible for lower fire insurance rates as a result of a higher fire protection rating Manhattan received last month.

After an intense study of the fire protection available in Manhattan, the Insurance Services Office increased the rating from a Class 6 to a Class 4. According to Smith, the ratings are measured on a one-to-10 scale with one representing the highest amount of protection available. Smith said Manhattan has been in a Class 6 rating for 61 years.

Smith said homeowners will not be affected by the decrease in insurance rates, but rates for large property owners and commercial building owners will decrease by about 20 percent. The rates take effect April 1, according to City Manager Don Harmon.

In other business, commissioners adopted a Resolution of Intent authorizing the issuance of $425,000 in Industrial Revenue Bonds to Varney, Mills, Rogers, Burnett and Associates. The organization is planning to have an office building built at the corner of Humboldt and Juliette.

Commissioner Suzanne Lindamood opposed the resolution because she said she believed it would be difficult for such an office building to meet the requirements necessary to receive Industrial Revenue Bonds. Qualifications necessary to receive bonds include an increase in employment for the city, expansion of job skills or utilizing key skills and promoting economic growth for the city.

Commissioners spoke at length concerning a proposal allowing the open burning of grass, leaves and garden residue for two weeks in the spring and fall in Manhattan. Commissioner Dave Fiser requested the ordinance after several citizens asked to have a specific period in which they could burn leaves.

Lindamood opposed the ordinance because she believed it would increase the likelihood of fires getting out of control. She also expressed concern about a possible increase in air pollution as a result of the ordinance.

Layoffs from Kansas companies keep employment outlook dark

TOPEKA (AP) — The Goodyear plant in Topeka announced the layoff of another 170 workers Wednesday because of declining sales and the plant manager said the outlook for quick improvement is not good.

In unrelated job actions announced Wednesday, 250 workers at the Manville Building Materials Corp. in McPherson were notified of a two-week layoff and 35 nurse's aides and technicians at Stormont-Vail Regional Medical Center in Topeka were fired.

Meanwhile, Amoco Oil Co. announced it would close its Sugar Creek Refinery near Kansas City, Mo., this summer, leaving about 480 people looking for other jobs.

The latest layoffs at Goodyear is in the earthmover tire division. Plant Manager Jerry Wolf also said there would be a 10 percent reduction this month in the production of other tires — primarily tractor tires and bias truck tires — at the Topeka plant. He said thoseoperations would shut down for two of 23 production days this month.

Wolf blamed continued depressed market conditions for the layoffs and said the market slump was under-estimated in January when 175 workers in the earthmover division were laid off. He said the new layoffs are for an indefinite period and would be staggered over the next week.

Wolf said the Topeka plant has about 2,100 workers on the job and will have 1,300 on layoff with the latest announcement. The layoffs started in April 1979.

"It's just in line with the economy, the depressed economy," Wolf said. "The demand for earthmover tires is down. We sell them to the mining industry and construction industry, and nobody is buying tires now."

"We had layoffs in January and anticipated an upturn in the second quarter," Wolf said. "Now I'd be very hesitant to make a projection of a turnaround. Our present forecast now is on the pessimistic side. We're expected to stay at this reduced level for about six months."

He said Goodyear would begin recalling workers in the radial truck tire division when an expanded plant for the division is ready for production later this year or early next year.

Manville Building Materials in McPherson, which produces fiberglas insulatiion, will close for two weeks beginning March 14, leaving 250 workers out of jobs, plant Manager Les Renck said Wednesday. He said the plant would reopen March 29.

Renck said the two-week layoff is the result of excessive inventories left by the slump in housing construction.

Stormont-Vail in Topeka, which employs 1,600 doctors, nurses and technicians, announced Wednesday that 35 nurses aides and technicians were being terminated.

A statement by the hospital said the aides and technicians were hired to help care for patients during a critical shortage of nurses in 1978 but that 100 more nurses have been hired in the past two years.

The hospital statement said the decision to dismiss the aides and technicians was made after a review of the current year's budget inlight of an anticipated loss of $1.2 million in federal funds.

Secretary of state proposes experimental mail balloting

TOPEKA (AP) — Kansans could vote in the comfort of their home in certain elections under a proposal being pushed by Secretary of State Jack Brier.

Tuesday Brier presented an "experimental" voluntary program for mail balloting to a receptive Senate Election Committee.

Mail ballots, under Brier's plan, would only be used in non candidate and non-partisan elections such a bond issues for counties, cities or school and minor elections such as those in cemetery, sewer, fire, hospital and water districts.

Brier said mail ballots, in many instances, would increase voter turnout and also reduce election costs.

A registered voter would receive a ballot by first class mail from the county election officer anywhere from 10 to 20 days before the election. The voter could mark the ballot, enclose it in a return envelope which he would sign.

Senate bill affects campus police, increases jurisdiction off campuses

By DOUG WARD
Collegian Reporter

Getting involved — it's a legal problem facing some university police departments in dealing with off-campus situations.

However, a bill introduced to the Kansas Senate dealing with this situation would have little or no effect on the operations of K-State Security and Traffic, according to Art Stone, director.

The bill would extend the official authority of campus police to fraternities, sororities and any other student group associated with the school. It would also give them jurisdiction on streets, highways and property immediately adjacent to campus.

The bill would also allow officers to go off campus in pursuit of individuals who have committed a crime, and to carry out investigations within the county dealing with crimes that occurred on campus.

But according to Stone, his office has this jurisdiction through cooperation with the Riley County Police Department.

All Security and Traffic officers are commissioned as reserve officers of RCPD and in the event of an emergency, there is no question that they have authority to investigate, Stone said.

"In all honesty," he said, "the bill wouldn't affect us at all. We have a unique situation where we and RCPD have an open line of communication and are not afraid to talk."

With this type of relationship, Stone said that the two departments work together and support each other when the need arises.

Although the bill would have no major effects at K-State, it would clarify the cooperation that is already found in Manhattan, Stone said. It would also guarantee the departments continue operating in the same manner.

"We don't want problems," Stone said.

AT WICHITA STATE University, Milton Myers, chief of campus police, said the bill would clear up legal problems concerning campus police involvement.

"We have no jurisdiction on property that is not owned or operated by Wichita State University," Myers said. "If one of our officers saw a crime being committed on property adjacent to campus, there is really a legal question as to how much we could get involved.

"We will take whatever action is necessary, though, to prevent the loss of private property or injury to persons," Myers added. "We do get involved."

Officers at WSU are commissioned as deputy sheriffs of Sedgwick county, they work closely with Wichita city police when conducting investigations off-campus and currently don't have a problem, he said.

Myers said that he is concerned though, that if there was a change in the sheriff's department, this working relationship might not hold up.

"If this happened we would have a problem," he said. "The proposed bill would prevent us from having to rely on our deputy sheriff commission."

Vic Strnad, lieutenant in charge of investigations at the University of Kansas, said extended jurisdiction would be a boon to law enforcement.

"We get along well with the city police department, and they (city police) will often request us to assist them in situations close to campus," Strnad said.

OFFICERS AT KU believe they are restricted when dealing with areas adjacent to campus, Strnad added, and extended jurisdiction would make the job easier.

"I feel that our hands wouldn't be tied if we could get more involved," Strnad said.

Another advantage to increased jurisdiction, according to Strnad, would be campus police being called to deal with students' problems.

"From my experience, the student body prefers to deal with campus police rather than city police," Strnad said.

"Students respond more to campus police," Stone said, agreeing with Strnad. "This could be because we are part of the University community and better understand things, and also because many of our officers attend the University."

Poland offers one-way ticket for union leaders

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Poland's martial law authorities on Wednesday offered passports to interned Solidarity union activists and their families interested in leaving the country permanently, the official PAP news agency reported.

The order appeared to apply to everyone who has not been tried or jailed for violating martial law decrees, and comes in the wake of an appeal by Roman Catholic bishops for release and amnesty for interned or jailed unionists.

Meanwhile, heavily armed troops backed by police dogs were deployed at a Polish-Soviet soccer match in Warsaw that the Soviets won 1-0.

Riot police also guarded the area around the U.S. and French Embassies about a mile from the stadium. There had been fears of violence from the 25,000 fans, the largest gathering since martial law was imposed, but no incidents were reported.

PAP, in its report on the internees, said, "Persons interned, staying in isolation centers, and interested in leaving Poland permanently, as well as their families, can submit motions to the passport authorities for issuance of passports."

The phrase "isolation centers" could apply to Solidarity chief Lech Walesa who has been detained in the Warsaw area since the start of martial law Dec. 13.

POLISH LEADER Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski raised the possibilty of such one-way exits during a speech to Parliament in late January and his fellow military council member, Interior Minister Gen. Czeslaw Kiszczak, seconded the motion in a weekend interview.

The plan appears to be one solution to the authorities' problem of how to handle the 4,000 or more Poles interned since martial law was imposed and the independent union Solidarity suspended.

Jaruzelski returned Tuesday from a visit to the Kremlin, and a high-ranking Polish official told foreign reporters Wednesday that the trip reversed Poland's deep economic dependence on the West.

It was the first trip to the Soviet Union by Jaruzelski — the premier, defense minister and Communist Party chief — since he declared martial law.

THE OFFICIAL, who requested anonymity, said the Soviets' plan to offset Western economic sanctions, help Poland overcome growing unemployment due to shortages of raw material and provide new avenues for participation in the Soviet bloc's economic alliance Comecon.

He said that many Polish political leaders, engineers and technicians had been "disappointed" that Poland — which owes Western creditors an estimated $26.5 billion — was "too deeply" dependent on the West for economic aid.

Western political observers here said the visit was pivotal in Polish-Soviet relations and that it indicated the Soviets have given full approval to martial law, as well as Jaruzelski's leadership.

Martial law apparently has demonstrated for the first time in Soviet bloc history that orthodox Communism can be revived from within, rather than from outside a country, and could serve as a model for any future such upheavals, the observers said.

Buckley mission to talk about Soviet sanctions

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan has decided to defer any new economic sanctions against the Soviet Union until an American mission returns from talks with the European allies, the State Department said Wednesday.

The mission, headed by Undersecretary of State James Buckley, will leave for Europe late next week.

After the group returns, State Department spokesman Dean Fischer said, Reagan will decide whether to further tighten credits, to block exports of U.S. oil and gas technology, and to try to delay a planned pipeline carrying Siberian natural gas to Western Europe.

Fischer said the Buckley mission will hold talks on all three aspects of possible administration action. The talks will be held, the spokesman said, to have "a coordinated, effective policy."

The Europeans allies share U.S. concern over Poland's martial law government and its suppression of union activities; several have sharply condemned Moscow. But they are reluctant to go as far as the administration in punishing the Soviets with sanctions.

Buckley will discuss with the Europeans their resistance to interrupting construction of the 3,000-mile pipeline designed to supply up to 1,400 billion cubic feet of gas a year. West Germany, Italy and France have already signed contracts for construction.

Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger is known to favor taking a hard line with the allies, a position with which Secretary of State Alexander Haig disagrees.

Meanwhile, business representatives and Republican senators urged the administration to approve the pipeline equipment sales.

E.C. Chapman, executive vice president of Caterpillar Tractor Co., which says it lost sales of up to $500 million because of similar restrictions imposed by the Carter administration, told a Senate committee such trade limits have damaged his company but not the Soviets.

Carter imposed the earlier restrictions in retaliation for alleged Soviet human rights violations.

Sen. Ted Stevens of Alaska, the Republican majority whip, said Tuesday he may introduce a resolution calling for withdrawal of 337,000 U.S. troops from Western Europe to protest the allies' participation in the $10 billion gas deal.

Commissioners Gene Klingler and Fiser said two weeks in the spring and fall would not cause too many problems in regard to air pollution. The current policy forbids any burning of leaves in yards. The second reading of the ordinance will be at the next commission meeting.

The rezoning of a tract of land located on the west side of Hylton Heights, near West Loop, from a residential zone to a restricted business district was also discussed. According to Joe Gerdom, city chief planner, the rezoning was proposed to provide a location for a doctors' office building.

Fiser opposed the ordinance because he believed the business district would be situated too close to the residential area.

Poland offers one-way ticket for union leaders

WARSAW, Poland (AP) — Poland's martial law authorities on Wednesday offered passports to interned Solidarity union activists and their families interested in leaving the country permanently, the official PAP news agency reported.

The order appeared to apply to everyone who has not been tried or jailed for violating martial law decrees, and comes in the wake of an appeal by Roman Catholic bishops for release and amnesty for interned or jailed unionists.

Meanwhile, heavily armed troops backed by police dogs were deployed at a Polish-Soviet soccer match in Warsaw that the Soviets won 1-0.

Riot police also guarded the area around the U.S. and French Embassies about a mile from the stadium. There had been fears of violence from the 25,000 fans, the largest gathering since martial law was imposed, but no incidents were reported.

PAP, in its report on the internees, said, "Persons interned, staying in isolation centers, and interested in leaving Poland permanently, as well as their families, can submit motions to the passport authorities for issuance of passports."

The phrase "isolation centers" could apply to Solidarity chief Lech Walesa who has been detained in the Warsaw area since the start of martial law Dec. 13.

POLISH LEADER Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski raised the possibilty of such one-way exits during a speech to Parliament in late January and his fellow military council member, Interior Minister Gen. Czeslaw Kiszczak, seconded the motion in a weekend interview.

The plan appears to be one solution to the authorities' problem of how to handle the 4,000 or more Poles interned since martial law was imposed and the independent union Solidarity suspended.

Jaruzelski returned Tuesday from a visit to the Kremlin, and a high-ranking Polish official told foreign reporters Wednesday that the trip reversed Poland's deep economic dependence on the West.

It was the first trip to the Soviet Union by Jaruzelski — the premier, defense minister and Communist Party chief — since he declared martial law.

THE OFFICIAL, who requested anonymity, said the Soviets' plan to offset Western economic sanctions, help Poland overcome growing unemployment due to shortages of raw material and provide new avenues for participation in the Soviet bloc's economic alliance Comecon.

Man recovers from cancer through antibody treatment

BOSTON (AP) — Doctors experimenting with antibody treatment, a promising technique that uses the body's natural defenses, have reported their first success in achieving a long-lasting remission of cancer.

The researchers said the monoclonal antibody treatment was "remarkably effective" in halting a form of cancer called B-cell lymphoma in a 67-yearold man with an advanced case of the disease. The cancer attacks cells which produce antibodies.

The results are the most positive yet in this new field of research. However, the researchers cautioned that much more study is needed before the work has any practical use in treating cancer patients.

"The improvement of this patient's lymphoma with monoclonal antibody administration is a single observation that must be confirmed in other patients before we can draw any conclusions about the effectiveness of this technique," Dr. Ronald Levy, who directed the research, said in a statement.

The research was conducted at Stanford University and published in Thursday's issue of the New England Journal of Medicine.

The therapy uses large batches of antibodies — the disease-fighting proteins produced by white blood cells — to attack a single enemy molecule.

To produce monoclonal antibodies, researchers fuse antibody-producing cells called lymphocytes with cancer cells. The resulting cells, called hybridomas, retain the ability to make antibodies.

Under lab conditions, the hybridomas can be coaxed to turn out limitless quantities of specific antibodies, which are attracted to cancer cells when reintroduced to the body.

The Stanford patient had failed to respond to standard chemotherapy and interferon, another experimental treatment. However, his cancer disappeared after eight doses of antibody over four weeks.

First his fever and nighttime bouts of sweating ceased. Then his enlarged lymph nodes gradually became smaller. His liver and spleen returned to normal, and tumors on his scalp went away.

The doctors emphasized that chemistry involved in this treatment is slow and tedious. Monoclonal antibodies must be custom-made to fit each patient's cancer, and the process takes six months.

So far, the Stanford doctors have tested monoclonal antibody therapy on 10 patients with varying results. However, the case reported in the New England Journal is the first in which long-lasting remission was achieved.

Men netters lose two top players

By LAUREY WRIGHT
Collegian Reporter

Everything was coming up roses for the men's tennis team with tennis player Tim Downey leading the men's singles team to victories this past fall.

Added to the flowery arrangement was a full scholarship offered this spring to standout recruit Blaine Patton.

With Downey's past performances and the promise of Patton's success this spring, the outlook was good, according to men's tennis Coach Steve Snodgrass.

Then the disease of ineligibility hit, taking Downey and Patton.

According to NCAA rules, a competing athlete must enroll in at least 12 hours per semester, and pass at least eight.

Downey couldn't meet these requirements.

Patton, a junior college transfer, needed to complete 24 hours at his school (Saddleback Junior College, Mission Viejo, Calif.) to be eligible for competition his first semester at K-State.

DOWNEY TOOK responsibility for his ineligibility upon himself, "I didn't pass the required number of hours and that's my fault," he said.

'With both gone it will be tough, but I haven't written off the season and I'm not going to lay down and die.'

Patton had a different story.

"I was told six weeks into the semester I lacked one hour, and (was) ineligible for my scholarship, and to play tennis," Patton said.

Athletic Director Dick Towers, said the guidelines are clear.

"The cold hard fact is, you don't have the required number of hours, you don't play — no matter who it hurts," Towers said.

Patton maintains K-State should have informed him that he was ineligible prior to the beginning of the semester. Towers holds that until the transcripts arrived there was nothing they (the Athletic Department) could do to determine Patton's ineligibility.

"It is a two-way street. K-State did everything in its power to get Blaine here, now he is trying to point the finger back at us and I'm a little sick of it," Snodgrass said.

IT ALL BEGAN in the fall.

Snodgrass contacted Patton at Saddleback Junior College and offered him a full scholarship (which covers basic education expenses).

He said he assumed Patton had enough hours to be eligible in spring. Snodgrass had only talked with Patton by phone.

Because of the privacy act, Patton's transcripts were unavailable for Snodgrass to see until the end of the semester, according to Towers.

During the semester Patton said he dropped two hours. He said he was unaware of NCAA eligibility requirements, and thus did not notify Snodgrass.

Patton came here in January at his own expense, assuming he would receive the promised scholarship.

"Snodgrass guaranteed me a full-ride scholarship before I ever came here," Patton said.

THE ATHLETE is recruited before ever being admitted to the University, Towers said, on the condition that when his transcripts arrive (and the hours requirement is met) the money will be awarded and the athlete admitted.

K-State received Patton's transcripts Feb. 8. Towers said the transcripts were reviewed by Richard Elkins, director of admissions, and it was discovered that Patton was lacking one credit hour.

Jim Epps, academic adviser, and Towers, suggested Patton take out an emergency student loan for out-of-state tuition, which is $1107, as he was no longer eligible for the scholarship.

"They want me to pay back the loan money and I don't think I should have to," Patton said.

'The cold hard fact is, you don't have the required number of hours, you don't play — no matter who it hurts.'

PATTON HAS the responsibility to pay back half the tuition, because Patton dropped out on the last day on which he could receive a 50 percent tuition refund, according to Epps.

Taking the advice of Towers and Epps, Downey is continuing his education at K-State. Patton has left for California.

Patton said he chose to go home to California.

"As of right now, I can't go to school, so I'll have to find a job. Hopefully, I will go to summer school and become eligible for a tennis scholarship," Patton said.

Snodgrass said the loss of the two players will hurt the team, but he said his 'Cats will survive.

"With both gone it will be tough, but I haven't written off the season and I'm not going to lay down and die," he said.

Battle begins Sunday, 48 schools will receive NCAA tourney berths

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Call it "Mission Roulette." The wheel spins — 'round and 'round she goes — and where she stops, nobody knows. Or, at the very least, it's anybody's guess.

On this wheel, there are 48 slots, one representing each berth in the NCAA basketball tournament. On Sunday, only a few miles from the NCAA headquarters in Mission, the field will be drawn.

The site of the drawing will be a suite in the Hyatt Regency in Kansas City, Mo., and, for the first time since the tournament began in 1939, the draw will be televised nationally.

The stakes are high. A team gets $121,000 just for getting picked, and the pot gets richer with each ensuing spin of the wheel. A cool half million goes to each of the Final Four teams.

SO, WHERE will the wheel stop this year?

Only three teams have clinched tournament berths so far — Oregon State of the Pacific-10 Conference, Pepperdine of the West Coast Athletic Conference and Alabama-Birmingham of the Sun Belt.

Of the 48 tournament berths, 28 are decided automatically by conference champions, laving only 20 to be parcelled out on an at-large basis.

The Pac-10 and WCAC are two of only five conferences who didn't hold post-season playoffs to determine their champions. The other three are the Big Ten, Ivy League and Western Athletic Conference.

The remaining 23 conferences with automatic bids are decided by post-season tournaments.

Therein lies the fallacy in this game of roulette.

ALABAMA-BIRMINGHAM was no surprise in the Sun Belt tournament — the only conference playoff completed — but these conference tournaments have a history of upsets. And upsets can result in headaches for the NCAA Selection Committee.

Last year, for example, Mississippi won the Southestern Conference tournament after compiling a record of 8-10. That left teams like Kentucky, Tennessee and Louisiana State, the league's top three teams, to rely on the benevolence of the committee and its computer ratings. All three received at-large bids, and all were seeded higher than Mississippi. LSU eventually made it to the Final Four.

"The committee does not have the flexibility it should have," Wayne Duke, Big Ten commissioner and former selection committee chairman, said.

"If you look at the current conference races, some of the teams have good leads," Duke said. "If, for example, some of those leaders are upset in their league tournaments, the committee is going to face a difficult problem...."

Once conference champions and a representative selection of runners up were placed in the tournament last year, there was room for only two major independents — Notre Dame and De[illegible]ette, with a 20-11 record, and Southern Mississippi, 20-7, were headed for the National Invitation Tournament.

Minnesota quarterback seeks help in California for alcohol problems

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Minnesota Vikings quarterback Tommy Kramer began treatment of an alcohol problem in a California hospital Wednesday, the National Football League club said.

The Vikings said in a statement that Kramer voluntarily admitted himself to Care Unit Hospital in Orange, Calif., to be treated by Dr. Joseph Pursch, a retired Navy admiral and former head of the Navy Alcohol Rehabilitation Service.

"The Vikings will have nothing further to say on the subject and neither will Tommy until his release," the statement said. "The Vikings do not know how long Tommy will be in the hospital."

Kramer's parents and other family members flew to California Tuesday to be with him. Kramer flew from Minnesota with General Manager Mike Lynn, Coach Bud Grant and Vikings owner Max Winter.

Lynn was asked whether the treatment was suggested by the club.

"The only thing I'd like to say is that people should write to Tommy," he replied. "We're supportive of him and we hope others would be."

Kramer's father, John J. Kramer, said, "The only thing I would like to add is that I have the greatest admiration for the Vikings organization. To do what they did today for our son and our family is great.

"This support and this assistance makes them tops in our family's book," he added in a telephone interview from his home in San Antonio, Texas. "One of the reasons we were there is the comfort and support and love of our family. What we found out today is that Tommy has another family — the Vikings."

Swilley suggested that Kramer's upcoming marriage may have had something to do with his decision to seek treatment. "Tommy's marrying a super nice girl and if he's trying to clean off some cobwebs for her, it's worth it," Swilley said.

The Vikings reportedly had been concerned about news reports of Kramer's free-spirited lifestyle, especially the criticism of his frequent visits to nightspots. Kramer shrugged it off, saying, "Winning'll shut people up — winning'll take care of everything."

It did until the second half of the 1981 season, when the Vikings slid from a 7-4 start to a 7-9 season record. It was one of the few seasons since Grant became coach in 1968 that the Vikings had failed to make the playoffs, and talk began to circulate that Kramer had a drinking problem.

Valenzuela turns down Dodgers' contract offer

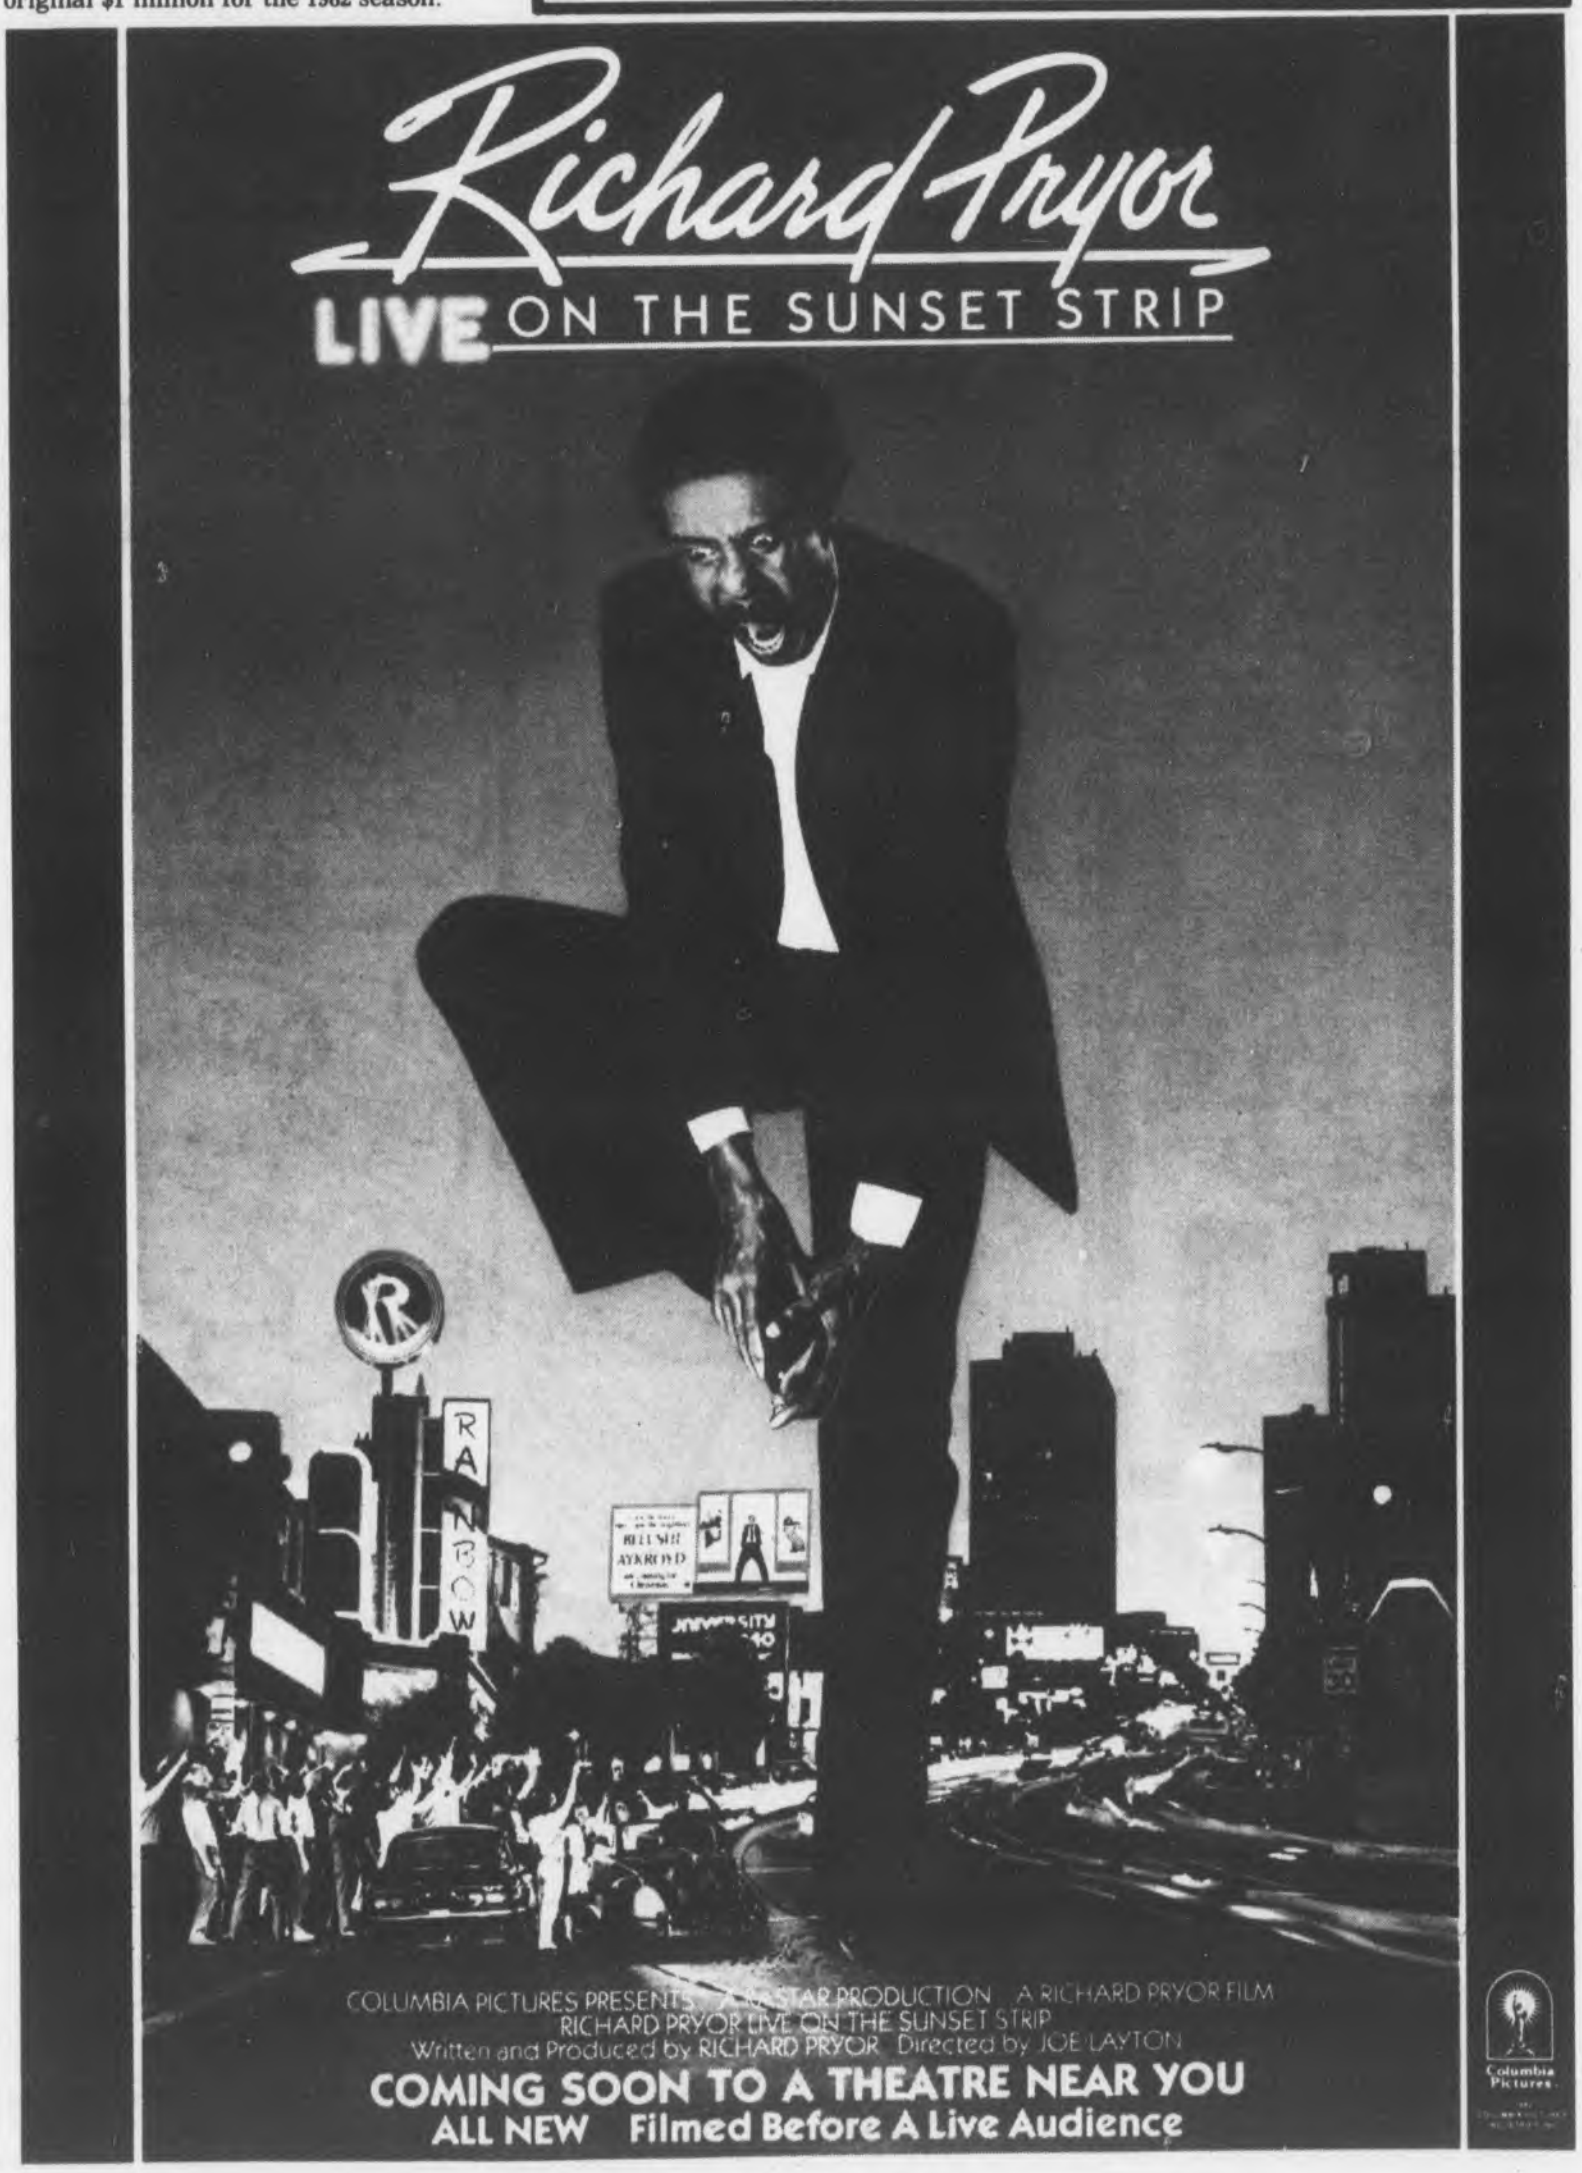
By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Fernando Valenzuela's agent said Wednesday that the young Los Angeles Dodger pitcher will not accept the club's 1982 contract — an automatic renewal of last season's pact with an estimated $280,000 salary boost for the young left-hander.

"After reviewing the terms of the contract, and after discussing alternative approaches, we have made the decision that the contract is not acceptable," said Tony DeMarco, the 21-year-old Valenzuela's agent. "... Fernando will not report to spring training until an appropriate agreement is reached."

At an afternoon news conference, DeMarco read from a prepared statement that he said reflected the views of Valenzuela, himself, and attorney Dick Moss.

The Dodgers had exercised their option to renew Valenzuela's 1981 rookie year contract, leaving him just two alternatives — accept the terms or sit out the 1982 season.



The contract reportedly would have given the left-handed pitcher $325,000 for 1982.

The pitcher and his negotiating team, however, reportedly had lowered their original demand down to $800,000 from an original $1 million for the 1982 season.

Supreme Court upholds ordinance to regulate paraphernalia sales

WASHINGTON (AP) — Communities trying to curb illegal drug use won Supreme Court permission Wednesday to regulate the sale of drug paraphernalia at so-called "head shops."

But the unanimous decision appeared to leave unresolved whether the courts will allow an outright ban of such businesses.

The justices resurrected a Hoffman Estates, Ill., ordinance that requires such shops to obtain licenses for selling items "designed or marketed for use with" illegal drugs, such as marijuana or cocaine.

A federal appeals court had ruled that the ordinance was unconstitutionally vague. The Supreme Court disagreed.

"Many American communities have recently enacted laws regulating or prohibiting the sale of drug paraphernalia ... We hold only that such legislation is not facially overbroad or vague if it does not reach constitutionally protected conduct and is reasonably clear in its application," Justice Thurgood Marshall wrote for the court.

Whether Marshall's mention of laws "prohibiting" such sales is a hint as to how the court would view a total ban likely will be the subject of future legal fights.

"Today's decision is not of much importance," said Kevin Zeese, executive director of the National Organization for the Reform of Marijuana Laws. "It does not close down head shops, it merely regulates them."

Nevertheless, the decision stands as an important, if preliminary, victory for communities seeking total bans of head shops. If the court had ruled against the Hoffman Estates ordinance, more stringent measures would have been in legal jeopardy.

Almost half the states and dozens of local communities have gone beyond the Hoffman Estates ordinance by enacting laws that totally ban such shops and make it a crime to sell items intended for use with illegal drugs.

Hoffman Estates, a Chicago suburb, adopted its drug-paraphernalia ordinance in 1978.

It requires that the shop owners obtain a license, priced at $150, and make all sales records — including the names and addresses of customers — available for police inspection. The sale of any regulated item to anyone under 18 is banned.

Violations are subject to $500-a-day fines.

The Supreme Court said Wednesday that the ordinance is not too broad.

Conservative defense study calls for killer satellite plan

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States should station a network of 432 killer satellites in orbit to knock out attacking Soviet nuclear missiles, a conservative group recommended Wednesday in proposing a new national space strategy.

The strategy, named High Frontier, also calls for deployment of a defense system around U.S. ballistic nuclear missile silos, an advanced manned space shuttle to open up industrialization of space and development of solar power satellites to beam energy to Earth.

The seven-month study was commissioned by The Heritage Foundation, a conservative, Washington-based public policy research institute. It was drawn up by a team of scientists, space engineers, economists and military strategists headed by retired Army Lt. Gen. Daniel Graham, former chief of the Pentagon's Defense Intelligence Agency.

High Frontier, Graham said at news conference, would "nullify or substantially reduce the growing threat posed by an unprecedented Soviet military buildup; replace the dangerous doctrine of Mutual Assured Destruction with a strategy of Assured Survival, and provide both security and incentive for realizing the enormous industrial and commercial potential of space."

Graham, a military adviser to Ronald Reagan during his 1980 presidential campaign, said the Soviets are conducting a strong military space program with a goal of dominating this "ultimate high ground ... We must make certain the Soviets don't gain that high ground."

He cited stories published Wednesday about Pentagon expectations that the Soviets may begin deploying laser weapons in orbit as early as next year, posing a threat to American military spacecraft.

Graham said the Soviet Union's long-range missiles are a dangerous threat. With 432 U.S. killer satellites in orbit, he said, at least one-fourth of them would be in position at any time to repulse an attack. Each would carry 40 or 50 rocket-launched interceptors with conventional explosives.

Graham said the plan had been submitted to the White House, members of Congress and to the Defense and State Departments. He said he hopes the White House will incorporate it in an overall space policy it is formulating.

The estimated cost of the project, he said, is about $50 billion over 10 years. Of this, $35 billion would be defense money, the rest from the National Aeronautics and Space Administration.

Chemical dump site leaks waste; residents fear rise in diseases

WILSONVILLE, Ill. (AP) — Stan Katich remembers when, as a child, he rode his bike to Vassi Spring, which bubbles to the surface a mile south of this tiny southern Illinois town. Its water was "cold and clean" — good to drink.

That was before thousands of gallons of toxic chemical wastes were buried in a landfill above an abandoned coal mine between the town and the spring.

Then the chemicals began leaking — moved by subterranean water from trenches where people were told the wastes would be safe for 500 years or more.

The 130-acre Earthline Corp. landfill, its gate at the end of the town's five-block main street, has frightened the 700 residents of this town 25 miles northeast of St. Louis.

Townspeople argued in a 1977 suit to close the landfill that the ground wasn't stable around the abandoned coal mine.

Many of them, or their fathers, had worked in the deepshaft mine from its opening in 1917 until its closing in 1954. They knew its tunnels, held open by rotting wooden beams, could collapse, causing the earth to heave and shift.

But Earthline, its Boston-based parent, SCA Services Inc., and the state and U.S. Environmental Protection agencies thought otherwise.

They said geologic studies showed a 10-foot-thick wall of clay would keep wastes from leaking out of landfill trenches.

Earthline "is a well-designed, secure...disposal site," the EPA told Macoupin County Circuit Judge John Russell in 1978, during the trial on the town's suit.

Arguments over Earthline "boil down to emotionalism on one side, and the scientific state of the art on the other," manufacturers who store waste at the site said in a letter — a month after Russell on Aug. 14, 1978 closed the site and ordered its toxic wastes removed.

Chemicals are still leaking from the landfill. They include highly toxic ethanes, used in industrial paint solvents.

Earthline is a case of government regulators relying on a regulated industry's word without challenging its basic assumptions, said Gwen Molinar, 57, who led the town's fight against the landfill.

What started the fight was disclosure in the spring of 1977 that dirt contaminated with polychlorinated biphenyls, or PCBs, a flame retardant and known cancer-causing agent, was shipped from Missouri to Earthline.

"When they told us there were PCBs there, we said, 'So what are PCBs?'" said Molinar. "When we found out, we got riled."

SCA contends in papers filed Feb. 19 with the Illinois Supreme Court that leaks resulted from "an isolated engineering flaw," caused by an unpredicted, continuous layer of easily permeated sand.

It says a plastic-like wall 2,000 feet long and 50 feet deep could plug leaks; that there's no need to unearth thousands of 55-gallon drums of liquid waste or tons of powder and contaminated steel.

"We don't think it'll work," said Rick Verticchio, Wilsonville's attorney.

A layer of sand doesn't explain leaks and a plastic wall won't stop them, says First Assistant Illinois Attorney General Richard Cosby, who has helped direct the five-year legal fight against Earthline.

Henry Mason III, an lawyer for SCA, declined to comment on the company's proposal to contain the leaks.

The state Supreme Court in May unanimously upheld Russell's order, and on Monday court ordered SCA to remove immediately all chemical wastes and contaminated earth from the landfill.

An attorney for SCA said would "seriously consider" asking the U.S. Supreme Court to delay enforcement of that order. SCA has also said it intends to ask the U.S. Supreme Court to review the case.

Katich, 32, says he wouldn't drink water from the spring and he's warned his 11-year-old son, Chris, not to play by it.

"I don't think the kids would drink from it anyway even if parents didn't tell them not to, now that they've found the leaking," said Katich.

There is no evidence the spring or the creek have been contaminated by anything buried at the Earthline site, Cosby said, although no one has monitored either since Earthline opened.

All that does little to ease the minds of Wilsonville residents, who on Feb. 2 filed a $225 million damage suit against SCA. It is now pending in federal court in Springfield.

On Feb. 19, it was announced that EPA test wells found new leaking from different trenches than those found leaking in December.

"I was so frustrated when I heard that," said Molinar. "I don't feel we have to prove anything anymore."

Molinar said she doesn't like to talk about it, let alone think of it, but she and others in town think they've noticed a surge in the incidence of cancer among old-timers.

"Maybe it isn't so, but you can't help but wonder. The big question on everybody's mind is, 'What's it doing to me?'" she says.

The state Public Health Department acknowledges it hasn't examined any residents for cancer, although the agency said it would if asked by the village board, individual residents or the state EPA. So far, no one has stepped forward.

Severance

already has held hearings on a version of Gov. John Carlin's 5 percent severance tax proposal, so it need not dawdle long in making its decision on the House bill. It could take it up next week.

THE 70 House votes for the bill came from 27 Republicans and 43 Democrats. The 54 votes against it were cast by 44 Republicans and 10 Democrats.

Rep. Keith Farrar, (R-Hugoton), a strong severance tax opponent, was absent for the final vote. He voted against it Tuesday.

The issue over the severance tax has locked th Legislature and the governor in a classic philosohical battle.

mph — a speed significantly less than that of the initial speed of the ball.

One of the most common, but serious eye injuries resulting from racquetball, being treated at Lafene is hyphema, according to Ecklund.

Hyphema is bleeding of the anterior chamber of the eye, causing blurry or cloudy vision almost immediately following the injury and possible occular pain.

Treatment for hyphema is bed rest for at least five days with patches on both eyes. Drops are put into the injured eye to paralyze the iris and put the eye at rest. This treatment minimizes the chance of rebleed, which can cause further injury to the eye, Ecklund said. Once a person has had hyphema, he has an increased risk of having glaucoma in the future.

If an eye injury is not treated immediately, it can cause permanent damage, such as cataracts.

"If you receive an eye injury from racquetball, have it checked as soon as possible and do not take aspirin. It only prolongs the bleeding and makes it worse," Ecklund said.

Some ways of preventing eye injuries while playing racquetball are to avoid looking back to watch an opponent returning the ball, give an opponent plenty of room, especially toward the end of the match when you are tired, and make sure the thong of the racquet is securely wrapped around the wrist while playing.

Down with the clock... Tom Brown, junior in anthropology and Deb Rolph, freshman in pre-law, chained themselves to what they call the "fascist" mid-campus clock Thursday, in a protest against the erroneous times the clock has been displaying.

'Fascist,' four-faced clock is target of student rally

A minor protest against a "fascist" clock out of step with time beggared smiles of disbelief at the antics of persons who acted like revolutionaries. Others fearing that integrity was at stake cornered their mouths down and shook their bent heads, trying not to laugh.

It would be hard not to laugh at several students who made the four-faced clock in mid-campus their cause Thursday. The students chained a bicycle lock around the pole and held onto it yelling, "Down with the Fascist Clock!" while handing out pamphlets.

The break between 11:30 and 12:30 classes made the area around the clock a forum for a message. The message was centered on the clock whose four faces have been in disagreement on the time — one by several hours. But the issue was about taking one's self too seriously.

It was brought up now because the arguments in the Union and in Collegian advertising about the Iranian issues, according to Bill Brown, sophomore in education. "It came as a reaction to all the hollering and yelling on different sides of the Union. It wasn't what they said, but their whole attitude," he said.

Although intended humorously, the protest may have an effect. Floyd Clark, electrical maintenance supervisor, said that he were unaware of the clock's wrong times and it would now be repaired.

Fort Riley annexation foes fight to hold 'bottom line'

By ANNE SCHMITZ
Manhattan Editor

Opposition is mounting against Junction City's proposed annexation of Fort Riley. That was the consensus expressed at the Riley County Commission meeting Thursday morning.

Representatives from county and city commissions in both Riley and Geary counties gathered to voice their opposition to the proposal. A delegation of officers from Fort Riley was also present but declined to take a stand on the issue.

Keith Devenney, chairman of the Geary County Commission, opened the discussion with a statement describing the alleged damages to Geary County and Geary County citizens' reaction to the plan.

"I'm here to let Fort Riley know how the community (Geary county residents) feels about this," Devenney said. "We are concerned that Geary County losses of revenues (as a result of the plan) would be sizeable."

DEVENNEY QUOTED a figure of $150,000 plus in reference to lost revenues. Over the course of five years, Geary County stands to lose over $300,000 in revenue, should the annexation occur, he said.

"We hope good relations between Geary County and Fort Riley would remain the same," Devenney said. He added that should Junction City gain Fort Riley's population of 20,000, the surrounding cities would be the losers. Therefore he opposed the plan.

"We (Geary County) will lose over $180,000 (a year) if this transaction is completed — that's the bottom line," Devenney said.

Commissioners and other officials from surrounding cities also voiced opposition to the annexation.

Riley County commissioner Darrell Westervelt said, "We don't want to lose territory or tax revenue in any case." He said he liked Fort Riley and Junction City "just where they are."

Mayor Russell Reitz added that the city of Manhattan stands to lose $61,000 annually. "This formula (for annexation) would take money away from all the cities, so our (city) commission stands against the program."

MAYORS OF SURROUNDING cities, including Randolph and Ogden, said their cities could not afford to lose any additional revenue because their budgets were already stretched to the limit. They also said believed they were at a disadvantage because they did not have the budget or the people to research the proposal thoroughly.

Col. Mason Ashby, who acted as spokesman for the delegation of Fort Riley officers, attempted to explain the Army's position in a situation such as this.

"As far as the Army is concerned, there are two ways they (Junction City) can expand, and that's with consent or without consent," he said. "We, the Department of Army, would have to demonstrate there is a great injury to us if this (annexation) would happen. That is a severe test."

THE PLAN to take over the military reservation, which Junction City revealed in February, has prompted the introduction of several bills in the Kansas Legislature designed to block the takeover. A bill prohibiting any form of annexation of the fort by Junction City authored by Rep. Ivan Sand (R-Riley), as well as backup bills by Sen. Merrill Werts (R-Junction City) and Rep. Jim Braden (R-Wakefield) have been introduced. The latter bills are designed to prohibit Junction City from receiving state-redistributed funds from Riley County should the annexation take place.

According to the Associated Press, the Kansas House Thursday passed the bill introduced by Sand which prohibits Junction City from annexing the fort. The bill now moves to the Senate for consideration where Werts will become one of the principal legislators.

Rochat to take interim job as University Relations head

An acting director of University Relations was appointed Thursday by President Duane Acker.

Carl Rochat, longtime head of the news bureau, assumes the duties of Bob Bruce, who has been named director of University Relations at the University of Nebraska, Lincoln.

As acting director, Rochat will coordinate University news, publications, photographic and printing services. He will also serve as media relations adviser to Acker.

"We're fortunate to have a person on board like Carl Rochat who is well-respected on campus and recognized throughout the state to handle these responsibilities," Acker said.

Acker has not yet named a search-and-screening committee for a new director.

Rochat, 63, was first appointed director of the news bureau in 1953. Recently he has served as news editor and assistant director for the Office of University Relations.

"This (acting director position) will just be additional duties to fill in until they fill the position," Rochat said. "All I want to do is serve the University as best as I can."

Although Rochat's temporary position will increase his workload, temporary appointments will be made to relieve some of the burden, he said.

A native Kansan, Rochat was raised near Wilsey. He received a bachelor's degree in journalism from K-State in 1940, and a master's from the University of Illinois, Urbana, in 1948.

He has been a reporter for the "Herington Times" and "Effingham (Ill.) Daily Review" and editor of the Tuscola (Ill.) "Review," the Laurens (Iowa) "Sun" and the Gonzales (Texas) "Inquirer."

Student Senate hears requests for tentative allocations of funds

By BETH TURNER
Collegian Reporter

Presentations for tentative allocations for the 1982-83 year began last night at Student Senate when 13 campus organizations presented requests for senate funding.

Bill Rogenmoser, student body president and senior in secondary science educaton, presented Student Governing Association's request for $34,684.63. About $2,500 of this money is spent on photocopying and typewriter maintenance, said Geri Greene, senate chairman and junior in journalism and mass communications.

Off-Campus Student Association (OCSA), whose allotment for last year was $425, requested $1,250 this year. Charles Knight, OCSA president and sophomore in industrial engineering, said the increased funding was needed to aid in communicating with the 11,575 off-campus students.

FONE Crisis Center requested $10,765.16, a $169.96 decrease from last year's allocation.

SEXUALITY EDUCATION and Counseling Services requested $3,833.36. Their allocation for last year was $3,603. This money is used to educate students in the areas of sexuality, such as pregnancy, dating and interpersonal relationships.

Mike Remus, director of University Learning Network (ULN) and graduate in education, requested $9,398.95 for ULN. Last year ULN received $5,905.85.

Student attorney Kathy Lungren requested $21,180. This was a $5,000 increase over last year's allocation. Four thousand dollars of the increase would be for Lungren's salary. She pointed out that K-State has the lowest paid student's attorney in the Big Eight.

University for Man requested $14,770, a 10 percent reduction from last year's request.

Raydon Robel, director of Recreational Services, requested $80,541 from senate. This amount is in addition to a $2.50 line item fee already collected.

Joel Torczon, senior in accounting, presented a $4,025 request for Students for Handicapped Concerns. Torczon said the money is needed to help with communication between administration and handicapped students and to help maintain a shuttle service.

PHI THETA KAPPA, an alumni organization for community college students, requested $896.50. The organization was refused funding by senate last year.

Women's Resource Center (WRC) requested $577.10 to fund work-study students and cover the costs of advertising. The center helps women deal with their changing roles in society, Shelly Crosby, WRC director, said.

Fenix, an organization for adult students, requested $150.

State song proposal hits sour note

TOPEKA — A proposal to scrap "Home on the Range" as the official song of Kansas hit a sour note with a Senate committee Thursday following a hearing that resembled a music appreciation class.

Emil Stawitz, 69, of Topeka, appeared before the Senate Governmental Organization Committee with sheet music and a tape recorder, to try and sway the panel to adopt "Kansas, Dear Old Kansas" — a tune written by Stawitz's late father George — as the new state song.

A postal employee for 37 years, George Stawitz wrote three songs during his lifetime, including "Kansas, Dear Old Kansas," which he wrote in the 1920s. The elder Stawitz died some 10 years ago at the age of 82.

But the popularity of "Home on the Range" may cause legislators to refrain from changing it. Committee Chairman Sen. Ben Vidricksen (R-Salina) said he "doubts very much" there is support on the committee to change songs.

'Forgotten income' could aid federal budget

WASHINGTON — It isn't ofen that Congress finds a non-controversial, painless way to raise money. But in this time of growing budget deficits, Senate Finance Committee Chairman Bob Dole thinks he has done just that..

Dole (R-Kan.) says the government will miss out on some $80 billion in 1984 just because of Americans' tendency to forget some of their income when it comes time to pay taxes on it.

Dole has assembled a package that could get back up to $5 billion of that amount just by making sure more people pay the full taxes they are supposed to pay. He scheduled a news conference for today to announce details of the proposals.

Dole has vowed an attack on the "underground economy," a term he uses to encompass everything from illegal income from prostitution and drugs to legal income garnered from yard sales and other unreported sources. The government will lose $80 billion in 1984 from unreported legal income alone, the IRS estimates.

Official supports competency tests

TOPEKA — The chairman of the state Board of Education urged the Senate Education Committee Thursday to endorse a bill requiring new teachers to pass a competency test before they are certified in Kansas.

Floyd Grimes of Paola, chairman of the board, said the testing program was one part of the board's effort to ensure Kansas schools have quality teachers.

The measure, which would take effect in August 1984, would require new teachers from that date to pass a standardized test on general curriculum matters.

In addition, some teacher applicants would have to take specialized subject tests. The board's plan is to have 21 special tests covering everything from art education to Spanish.

Marketing plan seeks higher grain prices

WASHINGTON — A bipartisan group of western and mostly wheat-state congressmen Thursday urged the nation's farmers to reduce planting this year and withhold commodities from the market until prices rise substantially.

"There are a thousand reasons why it won't work," admitted Rep. Charles Stenholm (D-Texas), author of the so-called voluntary orderly marketing program. Among those appearing with Stenholm were Democrat Dan Glickman and Republican Pat Roberts, both of Kansas.

Others agreed the chances of success are slim. But Stenholm said his optimism for success was based on the hope that farmers, facing one of their worst financial years in decades, will realize they're better off selling less of their crop at a profit than all of it at a loss.

At the heart of Stenholm's plan is a voluntary agreement among the nation's farmers not to sell any non-perishable commodity at below the cost of production.

Senate panel approves Agent Orange bill

TOPEKA — A Senate committee approved a bill Thursday requiring the state to compile information on Vietnam veterans thought to have been exposed to Agent Orange, a defoliant which is alleged to have caused health problems.

On a voice vote, the Senate Public Health and Welfare Committee endorsed the bill and sent it to the Senate for debate.

It would require physicians to submit reports to the state Department of Health and Environmment about the medical problems of Vietnam veterans who may have been exposed to the herbicide, which was used to strip jungle foliage to expose enemy positions.

The reports would include symptoms of the veterans, diagnosis and any prescribed treatment.

The information would be compiled annually into a state research report "on the effects of exposure" to the chemicals. The report would be submitted to the Legislature, the federal Veterans Administration and the various veterans' organizations.

Night schedule looks profitable

The Big Eight athletic directors have meet in Kansas City to continue discussions on proposals to equip each football stadium with lights, according to the Associated Press. The lighting will enable games to be held at night and increase the Big Eight's opportunities of cashing in on television revenues.

None of the Big Eight stadiums are equipped with lighting strong enough for television and the University of Oklahoma's Owen Field is the only one with "discussions...already under way."

The prospect of having night games brings up several considerations. First and foremost among the athletic directors is the money available through television. The AP reports that ABC will split $800,000 for national games and $600,000 for regional games. The NCAA has also signed a contract with WTBS of Atlanta for night football telecasts on cable television, further increasing the revenue opportunities.

Switching the game times may prove advantageous to some and a hindrance to others. The night time slots may offer area Saturday workers a chance to enjoy college football, many of whom are the businessmen that help support university athletics. But, the many alumni and loyal fans that drive in from across the states will face a long drive home, at night, or additional expenses to stay in the area. In Manhattan, the increase in commercial accomodations may alleviate past availability problems but the choice, for some, may not financially exist at all.

Night games during the early part of the seasons schedule will alleviate the unfavorable conditions present when the temperatures rise, a point that both players and marching band members should approve of.

As for the students, opinions will differ. It is hard to except a change in tradition or schedules. The victory celebrations, or as with K-State the simple celebration of a football game being held, will occur later. This may lower Saturday profits for the area drinking establishments and entertainment businesses.

But overall, taking the gamble on television revenue should pay off. However, networks tend to prefer televising teams with winning records that will draw large numbers of viewers. There is no guarantee that the revenue will come in but, as other sources dry up with the tightening of budgets, the odds seems to be in the Big Eight's favor.

On putting foundations under dream castles

Earlier in the semester I sat down in the Union with one of my professors to chart the route I will be taking through graduate school. Eventually the conversation strayed from classes and thesis topics to travel. As we rose to leave, the professor remarked that he often felt like a "captive of duty."

I remember that phrase on the weary nights when I come home from work. The streets are empty and the houses in the neighborhood are dark. As I get out of my car, with backpack and keys in hand, I pause to sniff the wood smoke hanging in the air.

Suddenly I am no longer in Manhattan, Kan. My mind transports me to California where I am sitting by a campfire in the High Sierras. It's a cold night and I shiver in spite of the fire's warmth and my layers of clothing. The frigid night air carries the smell of snow from the surrounding mountains.

WEARILY, I SHAKE myself from the trance and go inside. The business of being a student, coupled with financial responsibilities, weigh heavily on me tonight. Like a robot, I go through the routine of getting ready for bed. First I pour a glass of milk and eat some brownies. Calories don't matter at this time of night.

Then I pull on my nightgown and proceed to brush my teeth. My eyes insist on sticking shut as I wash my face. I pry them open and stare at the stranger in the mirror.

Finally it's time to crawl in bed. Have I set the alarm? Yes, it will rouse me at 6:15. I turn off the light and close my eyes, waiting for sleep to come. But my frenzied mind refuses to rest. Suddenly I'm back in California. This time I'm running across a mountain meadow in slow motion. The sun is warm and winter is easing its icy grip on the countryside. Spring is almost here and I'm alive, gloriously alive.

The scene shifts and I'm standing in Yosemite Valley watching the waterfalls plunge over the cliffs. Nearby, gorgeously tanned young men are playing hackey with a pine cone. My camera is ready to capture all kinds of scenery on film.

ALL TOO SOON, the alarm rings. I am no longer the carefree vagabond of my dreams. I have an 8:30 class. Duty is calling and I answer. I'd better hurry so I can get to the Union in time to find a parking place.

I go through the motions of being a student wishing I could be anywhere but here. In my mind I'm watching the hang gliders soar over Yosemite Valley. Or I'm standing on a mountaintop in Virginia trying to count the haze-shrouded ridges in the distance. Or I'm soaking up the sun on Padre Island, far from the cares of school.

Why do I feel so restless? I wonder. Then I smile. Perhaps I've come by it naturally. At home I dig out the atlas to keep me company while I eat lunch. Instead of turning to California or Quebec, I find the map of North Carolina. I have to look carefully, but I find the village of Mill Spring in the mountains southeast of Asheville.

MY GRANDFATHER left Mill Spring in 1907 to earn his fortune in Montana. Herding sheep and driving a team in the logging forests were hardly lucrative professions, I'm sure. Somewhere in a trunk at home are the postcards he scribbled to a young woman. The writing has faded, but the postmarks of such towns as Kalispell and Whitefish are still legible.

Grandpa returned to North Carolina three years later to marry this young woman. Together they set out for Montana, but by the time they reached Kansas City, Grandma was so trainsick they decided to lay over for awhile.

My grandfather wasted no time finding a job driving a street car. The brief layover stretched into years and the restless young man became a captive of duty. Eventually the call of the land was too great and they moved to the farm south of Kansas City that my family still calls home.

Grandpa always talked about going back to Montana, but he never did. By the time he could have afforded it, his health had deteriorated and Montana lived only in his dreams.

I keep this in mind as I go resolutely about the business of being a student. And I also remember what Henry David Thoreau said in the conclusion of "Walden:" "If you have built castles in the air, your work need not be lost; that is where they should be. Now put the foundations under them."

FALN beliefs are true

Editor,

There was an interesting inconsistency in your editorial concerning Puerto Rico (March 2, 1982). At one point you remark that "the majority of the current 50 state's population is either unaware of or uninformed about" the possible move to make Puerto Rico the 51st state and the Reagan administration's support for that move.

Shortly thereafter you remark that "it is unfortunate that terrorists such as the FALN believe that violence is the only effective method of bringing such an issue and its alternatives or solutions to the forefront." It may be unfortunate that they believe that but, by your own admission, what they believe is true.

It would have been more accurate to say that it is unfortunate that we are so insulated (from the fact that the U.S. possesses a "real live" colony) that it takes violent action by the colonized to make us notice what we are doing.

Stateroom seating policy clears air

Smoke gets in your eyes. Well, maybe not as much as it used to if you are in the Union Stateroom.

The designated non-smoking areas in the cafeteria have been doubled in size, according to Walt Smith, director of the Union. These changes have resulted in approximately half of the seating area being off-limits to those who wish to smoke, he added.

The new designations were made to not only expand the non-smoking areas, but also to further clarify where they are. Before the change, the original non-smoking areas were not well-marked and were ignored, Smith said.

Another problem was that the air circulation system drew smoke through the non-smoking section before it was exhausted, he said.

"One of the faculty pointed out our problem with the air system," Smith said. "There were also some complaints early last semester about people ignoring the areas.

"The Union Governing Board decided in the fall to make the change, but we had to wait for our new signs to come in."

The success of the new sections will depend on those people who use the cafeteria, Smith said. "Basically, it's up to those people who use the area to monitor it. The only way to do it is to use peer pressure. If someone is smoking in the wrong area it will be up to the non-smoker to let him know about it."

Even with the visible signs, people can still be seen puffing away in non-smoking areas, and reactions to the recently enlarged area vary.

Steve Higgason, junior in engineering technology, said, "Personally, it doesn't bother me either way. I think it's too restrictive, but I guess if you look at the number of people who smoke compared to those that don't, it probably works out."

"I'm really glad they did it," Fritz Behrhorst, junior in construction science, said. "I hate to eat with cigarette smoke around. I think it's great."

Charles Boisvert, junior in engineering technology, said, "It really doesn't bother me when someone smokes in here (the Stateroom). I think the tables are far enough apart to keep the smoke away. I think it's too limiting to those who smoke."

Gary Schultz, a visiting district school superintendent, said it was a sign of "a little bit of intelligence" because it means less people are smoking.

"I think it's poor manners to inflict smoke on others. Then again, it's poor manners to make me sit outside just because I smoke," he said.

Tests fault de-icing machine in Washington plane crash

WASHINGTON (AP) — Mechanics who de-iced Air Florida Flight 90 said Thursday they thought they were applying the correct chemical mixture and were unaware of a faulty nozzle that is believed to have given them incorrect readings on the solution's strength.

The federal investigation into the crash that killed 78 people revealed that the mixture of glycol and water applied to the Boeing 737 shortly before it crashed probably was much weaker than was indicated on the de-icing machine.

Tests conducted by the FBI showed that a sample sprayed from the same de-icing truck that serviced Flight 90 contained only a 12 to 13 percent glycol content even through the nozzle setting was at 25 percent. American Airlines tests showed slightly lower discrepancies, according to documents provide investigators.

The de-icing procedures on Flight 90 dominated the fourth day of testimony for a panel of the National Transportation Safety Board. Witnesses included the two American Airlines mechanics who de-iced the plane about 50 minutes before it departed from National Airport.

Flight 90 failed to gain proper speed and altitude and crashed into the Potomac River a mile away, killing 78, on Jan. 13. Investigators have theorized that ice on the wings and on a key engine sensor played a major role in the crash.

Investigators believe that no single factor will be blamed for the crash Jan. 13, but increasingly it appears that a combination of circumstances — many related to the poor weather conditions, pilot actions and the long delays — led to the disaster.

American Airlines spokesman Art Jackson said the airline since the crash has changed its procedures for keeping ice off planes nationwide. The airline now requires a 40 percent glycol-water solution that is stored in the tank of the de-icing truck and no longer mixed at the nozzle.

City officials attend Washington meetings

By KIM REHM
Collegian Reporter

Manhattan city officials returned Wednesday from a three-day trip to Washington, D.C. and said they were encouraged by the city's financial prospects for the coming year.

In Washington, they attended the National League of Cities Conference (NLCC) and met with federal officials.

According to Mayor Russell Reitz, Manhattan officials met with Sen. Nancy Kassebaum (R-Kan), Rep. Jim Jeffries (R-Atchison), Vice-President George Bush, members of Sen. Bob Dole's (R-Kan) staff and 23 other delegates from cities throughout Kansas.

"Major attention was given to the president's concept of federalism which is a revision and elimination of some federal programs, and the transfer of some of the power to the states," Reitz said.

THE TWO REASONS for making the trip were to attend the conference and talk with federal officials, Reitz said.

Gary Stith, Manhattan community developer, said the NLCC is an annual conference that brings state and federal officials together to discuss current conditions in the federal programs and budgets and how they might affect the states.

"We wanted to meet with Housing and Urban Development (HUD) officials in regard to the downtown development," Stith said.

"We felt that we had made a lot of progress, but the developer has to get commitments from two major department stores for funding. Penney's has made a commitment, but the other major store is not in Manhattan at this time," he said.

According to Reitz, during their discussions with HUD officials, the consensus was that the next major step in the downtown development process is to secure a commitment from a second major department store.

City Manager Don Harmon said he believes that Manhattan is "in pretty good shape for next year. We haven't received any funds this year for community development through the government, so we weren't affected by the budget cuts.

"It looks like there will be more money going to smaller cities next year," he said.

HARMON SAID THE two main purposes for the conference were to find out what the national picture looks like and how it affects Manhattan.

"We were encouraged by what we heard," he said.

City commissioner Eugene Klingler said he believed the atmosphere at this year's meeting was "kind of up-beat" compared to the previous year.

"We had a good hearing and plenty of time to talk with people. At times it was a three-ring circus and you wanted to be in more than just one seminar at once. But between the five of us, we got the job done," Klingler said.

Reitz believes Manhattan has some good friends in Washington. "We're on a first-name basis. We can't expect everything but they were very courteous and respectful," he said.

ACCORDING TO STITH, the proposed budget cuts by the Reagan administration should not affect Manhattan in a big way. He said there will be no additional low-income housing programs because the program is shifting over to the voucher system. The new system will replace the old housing program. Low- income families will receive a voucher to subsidize their housing needs. Reitz explained that the level of an individual's income will be evaluated and upon eligibility, he will receive a voucher.

"I haven't decided on whether I like the programs Reagan has proposed," Harmon said. "The objectives are pretty sound, but it's a question of whether the methods to obtain them will work."

Harmon also said he believed the trip was worthwhile.

"There are always those who say we're on a junket. I'm tired enough to say this was no junket."

Student pilfering hurts bookstores

By JULIE MAH
Collegian Reporter

Furtively he scans the aisles for helpful employess, the last thing he needs to deal with now. The time is ripe, he snatches a textbook, stuffs it into his jacket, turns and strides out the door. Another day's loot is tucked securely under his arm.

This is almost an everyday occurrence at bookstores that serve the University.

"Yes, we have a problem with theft," said Jon Levin, manager of Varney's.

Mickey Schnedler, manager of the Union Bookstore, said, "We would be naive to think we don't (have thefts). It doesn't happen as often as it could. People that steal from you will determine the easiest way. We are aware of organized pilfering that goes on everywhere."

SHOPLIFTING FIGURES are higher than they have ever been and show no signs of slackening, according to Sgt. Gene Yarnall of the Riley County Police Department. He said $24 billion in merchandise was shoplifted in the United States last year.

"Most young people don't steal because they're afraid of getting caught," Levin said. "If they think they're going to get caught, they're less apt to steal. Anybody takes the chance of jeopardizing their future whether it appears on record or not. There are many job opportunities that require references."

MERCHANTS WHO have been robbed have the same reactions to theft as anyone who has been robbed, Levin said.

"Most people, when something is stolen from them, feel they've been violated," Levin said. "The same is true for merchants."

One publicized method merchants use to recover losses is to spread the added costs to other shoppers.

According to Levin, there is a "certain amount of truth to that (raising prices to alleviate theft)."

"It's probably a combination of the merchant partially absorbing it and partially passing it on to the consumer, which is what we're doing." Levin said. "It's not just because of theft, we're having to pay more for items."

Schnedler said if shoplifting continues, there is a "distinct possibility" the Union Bookstore will have to raise prices. We haven't raised prices based on that fact alone."

SCHNEDLER ESTIMATES that roughly $15,000 in 1981 was attributed to "shrinkage." Shrinkage is the "difference between what you should have in the store and what you physically count at the time of inventory," he said. "This results from many factors: shoplifting, mismarking of merchandise, stuff going out the back door as well as the front and bookkeeping errors.

"We anticipate the percentage of total sales with the shrinkage factor," he added.

Estimated losses at the Union Bookstore total $40 to $100 per month for stolen merchandise that is accounted. Schnedler is not certain this is accurate because the Union Bookstore lacks a perpetual inventory system. Varney's Bookstore also lacks daily inventory records.

ALTHOUGH SHOPLIFTING is a problem, the bookstores are hesitant about instituting stricter policies.

"We really don't want to intimidate our customers," Schnedler said. "We're a part of the academic community. We serve the students and professors. We don't want to go with Big Brother is watching them."

"I don't really care to challenge anybody to beat any system that we might have," Levin said. "Nor do I want to give the impression that we are not alert to the possibility of theft happening."

The Union Bookstore does not want to be forced to enact more stringent policies, Schnedler added. "We are attempting to modify our returns policy and be more aware of these types of problems so that we will not have to raise prices in the future."

SCHNEDLER ALSO SAID the Union Bookstore plans to "look into different procedures controlling people coming into the store. Our best security now is making our customers aware that our clerks are aware of their presence."

Varney's Bookstore apprehended five or six shoplifters last year, and the Union Bookstore, six to seven. Both stores prosecute most shoplifting cases.

"If we catch them we'll call the police," Levin said. "What we try to be aware of is what people have in their hands when they come in. We're aware that something like that can happen, so we try to stay alert so that type of theft is kept to a minimum. We have security measures that we can activate if we so choose to."

THE MAXIMUM PENALTY for shoplifting can be one year's confinement and a fine up to $2,500 for a class A misdemeanor, petty theft under $100. Anything $100 and above is treated as a class E felony, Yarnall said.

Yarnall, who has a special interest in shoplifting, speaks to businesses and gives them advice on preventive merchandising, that helps prevent easy access.

"The only real deterrent outside of preventive merchandising is prosecution," Yarnall said. "We've had 30 cases reported this year so far that are confirmed and all are being prosecuted."

Both bookstore managers have plans to eliminate some shoplifting, but declined to comment as to what those plans are.

"There are some things we are going to do in the future, but I'd rather not comment on it at this time," Schnedler said. "It would be telling shoplifters how to do it."

Williams' arrest didn't stop killing; more may fit pattern, lawyer says

ATLANTA (AP) — Wayne Williams' defense lawyer made a big point of claiming, in his summation, that the murders of young blacks had not stopped with his client's arrest.

"Black men of Mr. (Nathaniel) Cater's and Mr. (Jimmy Ray) Payne's ages are still being murdered in this community," attorney Alvin Binder told the jurors, who a few days later were to convict Williams of killing Cater, 27, and Payne, 21.

Binder's statement was correct. Georgia Crime Information Center statistics show that from June 1 through Dec. 31, 1981, 29 black men age 30 and younger were slain in Fulton County, which includes Atlanta.

But Atlanta Public Safety Commissioner Lee Brown said none of those killings fits the pattern of the 28 slayings that were assigned to a special police task force over 22 months before Williams came to police attention last May.

The task force cases were "young people, black, from low-income families, were reported missing, and we found their bodies away from where they were killed," Brown said in an interview Thursday.

"We see absolutely nothing that connects these (later) cases," he said.

Williams, a 23-year-old black free-lance photographer, was sentenced to two consecutive life prison terms following his conviction Saturday night.

On Monday, police announced that the task force was being disbanded and that they had linked Williams to 21 other slayings — including 20 on the task force list and the stabbing death of a 30-year-old black man whose case never was assigned to the task force.

Police left seven cases open, including the September 1980 disappearance of 10-year-old Darron Glass, who has never been found.

The 23 victims linked to Williams all were black males, ages 9-30. Sixteen were strangled or asphyxiated, two were stabbed, one was bludgeoned and the cause of death was undetermined for four others.

Williams' attorneys don't contend that all the 29 more recent killings are related, but Binder said on national television Monday night that at least five unsolved killings of young black men since Williams' arrest could fit the task force pattern.

A defense source, who asked not to be identified, cited five unsolved cases as fitting the pattern:

—Clarence Davis, 16, a black youth shot to death in July 1981.

—Stanley Murray, a 21-yearold black man also shot to death in July.

—An unidentified 22-year-old black man killed in August. The cause of death has not been determined.

—Kenneth Johnson, 18, a black youth shot to death in November.

—Roderick Williams, a 23-year-old black man shot to death in December.

Chet Dettlinger, a private investigator who did some work for the Williams defense, admits that most of the later cases involved shootings, while none of the victims linked with Williams was shot.

According to the Georgia crime center statistics, 26 of the 29 young blacks killed from June through December were shot. One was stabbed and the causes of death for the other two were undetermined.

Dettlinger also contends that some later victims have geographical links to task force victims.

Arson outbreak leaves no leads for fire officials

There are no suspects or leads in association with 12 arson fires set in the Manhattan area early Wednesday morning, according to Fire Chief Bill Smith, of the Manhattan Fire Department.

The fires, beginning at 2:16 a.m. and spanning a two-hour period, were started in trash dumpsters and grass piles, Smith said. The only damage resulted from a fire set in a trash dumpster next to Mosburg IGA at 517 N. Third. Damage was estimated at approximately $100, Smith said. "They (the arsonists) started in one area of the town and then went to the other side," he said.

The last city fire was at 4:12 a.m. Later, two fires were started outside the city limits in the Thompson residential district, Smith said. Both fires in the residential district burned a 5- to 6-acre area, according to Delano Petty, fire chief of the Riley County Fire Department.

"This type of thing has occurred every year," Smith said, "but it is usually slight — two or three dumpster fires at the most."

Police and fire officials urge the public to call the police department if they know of any information relating to these fires.

Question marks cloud women's season finale

Question marks surround the K-State women's basketball team heading into the season finale tonight against Central Missouri State at Ahearn Field House.

The Wildcats practiced most of the week without starter Barbara Gilmore who is hampered by a sprained ankle. Reserve Erin Schreiber also missed practices due to illness in her family. K-State Head Coach Lynn Hickey said she is unsure of the status of the two players for tonight's game.

"We don't know at this point if they will be able to play. I don't know how we'll play because of it," Hickey said.

The Wildcats, 23-5 on the season, have won 14 consecutive games. The most recent win was a 68-63 decision over Wichita State Saturday.

Central Missouri State, 19-6 overall, is a team that took the 'Cats to the wire earlier in the season before submitting 66-64. Jean Roise hit a bucket in the closing seconds to give the Wildcats the victory.

Hickey said the Jennies are not a big team, but can make up for it in other areas.

"They are a fine team that plays very aggressively. In the first game I don't think we played well but maybe that was to their credit," Hickey said.

Carla Eades is the team scoring leader for Central Missouri State. She averages 18 points per game for the Jennies. Sara Figg adds 15 a game for the school located in Warrensburg, Mo.

K-State's attack is paced by Priscilla Gary's 17 points a game. She also has nabbed 67 steals on the season for the 'Cats. Tammie Romstad averages 16 points and seven rebounds each time she takes the court.

K-State is ranked 19th in the polls this week. The 'Cats will find out Saturday when and where they will play in the first round of the NCAA tourney which begins March 12. The field will be composed of 32 teams selected by a NCAA committee. The 'Cats received an automatic bid by winning the Big Eight tournament in January.

'Cats, OU square off in league grudge match

The men's basketball squad finds itself right in the thick of the Big Eight Post Season Tournament once again.

The Wildcats square off against the Oklahoma Sooners for a grudge match tonight in the nightcap of the semifinals at Kemper Arena, Kansas City, Mo.

Tonight's second-round game between K-State and Oklahoma can be deemed as a grudge match, as the two split in regular season play. In the first game, the Wildcats won in Ahearn Field House, 47-42, on Jan. 20. The Sooners returned the favor in Norman Feb. 10 with a 68-58 win. Along with the 'Cats and the Sooners, Missouri and Nebraska will be featured tonight in Kemper.

Ranked fifth in the Associated Press Poll, the Tigers will take on Nebraska in the opening round tonight at 7:10. Missouri advanced by defeating the Colorado Buffaloes 72-60 in Columbia Tuesday night. Nebraska beat Oklahoma State 60-49 in Lincoln. Oklahoma defeated Iowa State to advance, 71-67.

The 'Cats and Sooners will take the court at 9:10 p.m. K-State will be going for win No. 22 against six losses. The Sooners are 18-9.

Women's soccer club will kick off third season

By JOE SASENICK
Collegian Reporter

The Kansas State Women's Soccer Club lost its founder and only coach to graduation last semester. With a little luck the team has found a new coach and is prepared to open its spring season and third year of existence at Topeka Saturday.

Becky Cook, a graduate in physical education, started the women's soccer team in the fall of 1979, according to Jan Rutter, junior in management and assistant coach of the team.

Cook said her husband, Dennis had a lot to do with the formation of the club for women.

"I could have never formed a soccer team if it had not been for Dennis," Becky Cook said.

DENNIS TALKED WITH Dean Campbell, distributor for Anheuser Busch in Manhattan and sponsor of the men's team.

"After Dean gave us the go ahead I put an ad in the paper announcing the start of the women's soccer," Becky Cook said.

Now, Busch sponsors the club and donates all expenses but travel.

With the help of the men's soccer team, a roster was filled. The first team posted an 11-2 record that season.

The loss of Becky Cook to graduation was a problem until Bob Black, junior in finance, assumed the position with Assistant Coaches Vivian Bliss, senior in consumer affairs and gerontology and Rutter.

"We needed to have somebody who could be a third party and not worry about yelling at us and making us work hard," Bliss said.

Julie Ruiz, junior in modern language and business, and a member of the women's team, met Black through a conversation in a Spanish class. Ruiz offered him the chance to coach women's soccer, and Black accepted. "He just came out and started helping us," Ruiz said. "What we needed was direction. We needed someone to guide us and teach us how to play strategically."

"With Bob it will be more objective and fairer since he is an outsider," she said.

THE SQUAD BEGAN spring training Feb. 8 and moved outdoors a couple of weeks later.

The team scheduled four homes games this season with the first one set for April 3. The 'Cats will also compete in two tournaments — one in Lawrence, and another in Wichita.

Women's games are scheduled in accordance with the men's soccer team, Rutter said.

"We try to work out the schedule with the men's schedule in mind," she said. "This way we can cut down on travel expenses and both teams can support each other."

A major concern, according to Rutter, is in letting the students know that K-State has a women's soccer team.

"We are having some of the same problems the men's team is having," she said. "The school does not do much for us."

For this season, Black feels the Wildcats have winning potential.

"We have a really good goalie" he said, "and I feel we should have a pretty strong offense."

But the 'Cat mentor said he must get more of a team environment at practice. "We have to get people to know each other. I think we need a little more enthusiasm," Black said.

Men's soccer team opens season at home against WSU Wheathawks

By JOE SASENICK
Collegian Reporter

Soccer is a growing sport which receives scant support from the University, and for the time being the club relies on the sponsorship of Budweiser.

The team opens the season this weekend at home, according to Reid Nelson, junior in English and head coach. K-State will play the No. 1 team from Wichita — the Wheathawks — Saturday at 2:30 p.m. in KSU Stadium.

Without the sponsorship of Dean Campbell, a local distributor of Budweiser, the team would have difficulty staying afloat, Nelson said. "They give us money for tournament fees, uniforms, warm-ups and soccer balls. Basically, they pay for everything but traveling expenses."

BUDWEISER HAS SPONSORED the team for about five years, he said.

"The University does let us use Memorial Stadium for practice and games, but that's about it," he said.

"It would have been nice to see the Student Senate give us some funds," Nelson said. "It's not so much the money, but it's symbolic of a formal recognition. It's important for the club that we be formally recognized by the school.

"Besides that, we're virtually the only Big Eight school that is not funded by the University," he said.

"What upsets me is that we represent the University and always have, but the University has never given us anything but the title of KSU and the use of Memorial Stadium in return," Nelson said. "There is no funds, uniforms or traveling fees."

THE SOCCER TEAM has been around since about 1965, Nelson said. Until the early 1970s the team was almost completely made up of foreign students and was generously funded by the University. The team received about $4,000 a year, he added.

"Now the team is composed almost exclusively of Midwestern players," Nelson said, "but we have some foreign players that are crucial to our performance."

One player who has been a great asset to the team is sophomore goalie Akram Al-Ani, Nelson said. He was voted Most Valuable Player in the Big Eight tournament last spring.

"The goalie is a very important position," Al-Ani said. "It's like the quarterback in football. There is a lot of pressure. When I make a mistake, it's a goal and it will affect the whole team."

ANOTHER KEY PLAYER, Nelson said, is senior center-forward Kurt Krusen. He was the Big Eight's leading scorer last year.

"He is very good at taking advantage of the other team's mistakes," Nelson said. "He is a great hustler and never gives up on the ball."

Even with the best goalie in the Big Eight and leading scorer in the league, he said the team will improve more in the future.

"In about four years you will see a great improvement in the play of soccer," Nelson said.

The reason is because a few men got together in 1975 and developed a plan to get young kids involved in soccer in the Kansas City area, Nelson said. The man responsible was his father Stan Nelson.

THE ELDER NELSON said the only league around in 1975 was the Kansas City Soccer League (KCSL) which only offered the sport to older kids.

He said he wanted to start a youth league because a lot of kids were "not getting involved in football, and for many kids baseball was very boring. It was too inactive."

The first club in the Kansas City metropolitan area was formed in 1975, according to Stan Nelson, and was called the Northeast United Soccer Club (NUSC).

About a year later, he said, the Johnson County Soccer League (JCSL) was formed.

Tooey Miller, a corporate lawyer who is president of the JCSL, said the league was actually formed in the spring of 1977. During the first season, there were 60 teams, he said. Currently there are 17 clubs in the JCSL which adds up to about 7,000 players.

Baseball lettermen, rookies start season against Baker

By MACK McCLURE
Collegian Reporter

Coming off its best season since 1976, the K-State baseball team will host Baker University this afternoon with a pair of seven inning games at Frank Myers Field

"We've got the nucleus of our ballclub back," Dave Baker, head baseball coach, said. Twelve lettermen are returning from last year's squad which posted a 34-21 record.

Leading the way for the Wildcats are first baseman Joe Goedert, leftfielder Don Grause and Glynn Perry, who patrols right field. All three are returning letter winners.

The left-handed hitting Goedert was an honorable mention all-Big Eight choice last spring. His .400 bat was the best among the 'Cats last fall. Goedert also leads the team with six home runs, and was top run producer with 49 rbi.

Grause is a switch-hitter who hit .271 last year. Perry batted .399 a year ago, led the team with six triples and was second to Goedert in round trippers with four. He also slated nine doubles.

GOEDERT HAMMERED out ten doubles during the 1981 season.

Besides the returning lettermen, Baker also noted three newcomers to the K-State. Slugging catcher Cary Colbert, shortstop Scott Pick and centerfielder Jeff French.

Colbert, a Manhattan native, transferred to K-State after attending Butler County Community College last year where he hit .418.

A player with junior status, Pick was a sterling player for two years at Seward County Community College. He jacked eight round trippers last spring. Also, he batted .405 and .390 in two seasons.

FRENCH PLAYED BASEBALL at a junior college in Arizona before transferring to Wildcat land this semester.

Mark Teague, another Manhattan product, is the 'Cats' starting second baseman. Also returning at third base in his final year of eligibility is letterman Brian Barlow, who banged out seven doubles in last years' campaign.

Used as a designated hitter last season is Kent Schaede, who lettered as a walk-on. He drove in 14 runs for the year. Schaede will be the DH again this season.

Earning a letter while hitting .308 was Perry Johnson. The third baseman collected four hits in 13 trips to the plate.

Five returning pitchers that lettered, all started three or more games last season. Louie Trujillo, termed by Baker as the Wildcats' "top pitcher," had the lowest earned run average (ERA) on the staff last year with 4.17. He won five and lost one in 58.1 innings of work.

TWENTY-SIX YEAR OLD Mickey Fleeman, the veteran of the team, had 38 strikeouts in 46.2 innings this past season. He appeared in 10 games. Mark Gomez has a good breaking ball, evidenced by 13 strike outs in 16 innings. He started four games for the 'Cats the past campaign.

Coach Baker has given the nod to Trujillo to start today's opener. Fleeman will hurl the nightcap.

"If it's really cold, we won't play," Baker said. Depending on the weather, there could be one nine-inning game or two seven-inning games, as scheduled. The games will be played in KSU Stadium.

"The JCSL is the largest volunteer youth organization in greater Kansas City and in the state of Kansas," Miller said.

THE MAIN REASON for its success is the Pony League which is made up of kids in kindergarten and first grade, he said.

Because of the increased interest, Miller and Stan Nelson predict soccer in Kansas City will become a major varsity sport in public high schools.

Another interesting fact Miller mentioned was soccer's appeal to girls. He said about one-fourth of the 7,000 players in the JCSL are girls.

HAVING GIRLS PLAY has been very important, Miller said, because a larger audience of parents is brought into the soccer scene.

"We have provided a well organized vehicle for everybody to play," he said. "We did not create a demand. We met the demand."

"I think in about four years," Reid Nelson said, "a lot of the varsity high school players from Kansas City will come to K-State. Then we will have a very strong team that the University will have to recognize."

The K-State soccer team is not looking into the future, Reid Nelson said. The team has been practicing the last couple of weeks getting ready for the season opener.

DURING THE SEASON, the team will participate in three tournaments with the most important one being the Big Eight tournament which will be held in Lincoln, Neb., he said.

Last year, K-State hosted the tournament and finished third. During the regular season, the team finished second while compiling a 20-8-4 record.

"I think that the soccer team is going to be very strong this season," Reid Nelson said. "We have five new players that will help us a lot and give us depth. This gives us about a total of 30 players on the team."

Because of the large squad, Reid Nelson said it makes everyone compete very hard for the 11 starting positions.

"Soccer keeps us in shape," he said, "and gives us a good way to express the pride we feel in representing K-State."

Sister Angelica, portrayed by Janet Riedel, graduate in music, mourns over the death of her son in the opera "Sister Angelica."

A night at the Opera...

Sister Angelica kneels in prayer.

From Sister Angelica's dying breath to Gianni Schicchi's boisterous finale, the two one-act operas which opened last night in McCain Auditorium can best be described as diverse entertainment.

The operas, presented by the K-State departments of music and speech and the KSU Opera Theater, and billed as Two Faces of Puccini, indeed display two very different aspects of Giacomo Puccini's marvelous style. The first opera, Sister Angelica, is the more traditional of the two and is perhaps more characteristic of Puccini, in that its simple plot is subordinate to the musical presentation.

The plot is centered on Sister Angelica who, after having a child out of wedlock, is forced by her princess aunt to do penance in an Italian convent. After seven years, her aunt arrives at the convent and informs Angelica that her son has been dead for two years.

THE PRINCESS LEAVES, refusing still to forgive Angelica, and in despair, Sister Angelica takes poison. Realizing too late that she has committed a terrible sin, Angelica begs the Virgin for forgiveness, which she receives in a vision just before taking her dying breath.

Janet Riedel, graduate in music, sings the part of Sister Angelica with a lyrical soprano voice which beautifully reflects the melancholy sadness and despair of the character she portrays. Dramatically, however, her character lacks convincing emotional depth at times.

Also notable in her performance was Diane Nottingham-Heerman, senior in music, who portrays the matronly Princess. With superb diction and strength of character, Nottingham-Heerman plays the unrelenting aunt who refuses to forgive Sister Angelica.

OTHER MEMBERS OF THE CAST who present credible performances, include Penny Cullers, senior in speech, who portrays the stern Abbess of the convent, and Greta Marie Herron, graduate in music, who plays the lively sheperdess turned nun.

The second of the two operas, Gianni Schicchi, was the boisterous antithesis of the preceding tragedy. While Sister Angelica was conventionally staged, Gianni Schicchi was its unconventional opposite.

The curtains rise to a naked stage, which soon is filled with romping court jesters and colorful cast members who drag the set pieces into place with the help of a very cooperative donkey.

This comic opera focuses on a scheme plotted by the local rogue Gianni Schicchi and inspired by the death of Buoso Donati. Donati has died and left his considerable estate to a monastery. His greedy relatives, heartbroken, decide to accept the help of GREAT WRITING STARTS WITH A LITTLE LISTENING, A LITTLE BEER, AND A LOT OF LEGWORK.

by Mickey Spillane

When the guys at Miller asked me to write an ad on writing, I said, "Forget it. Not even if you held a gun to my head." So they held a bottle of Lite Beer to my mouth.

They're a pretty persuasive group.

THUGS TO MUGS

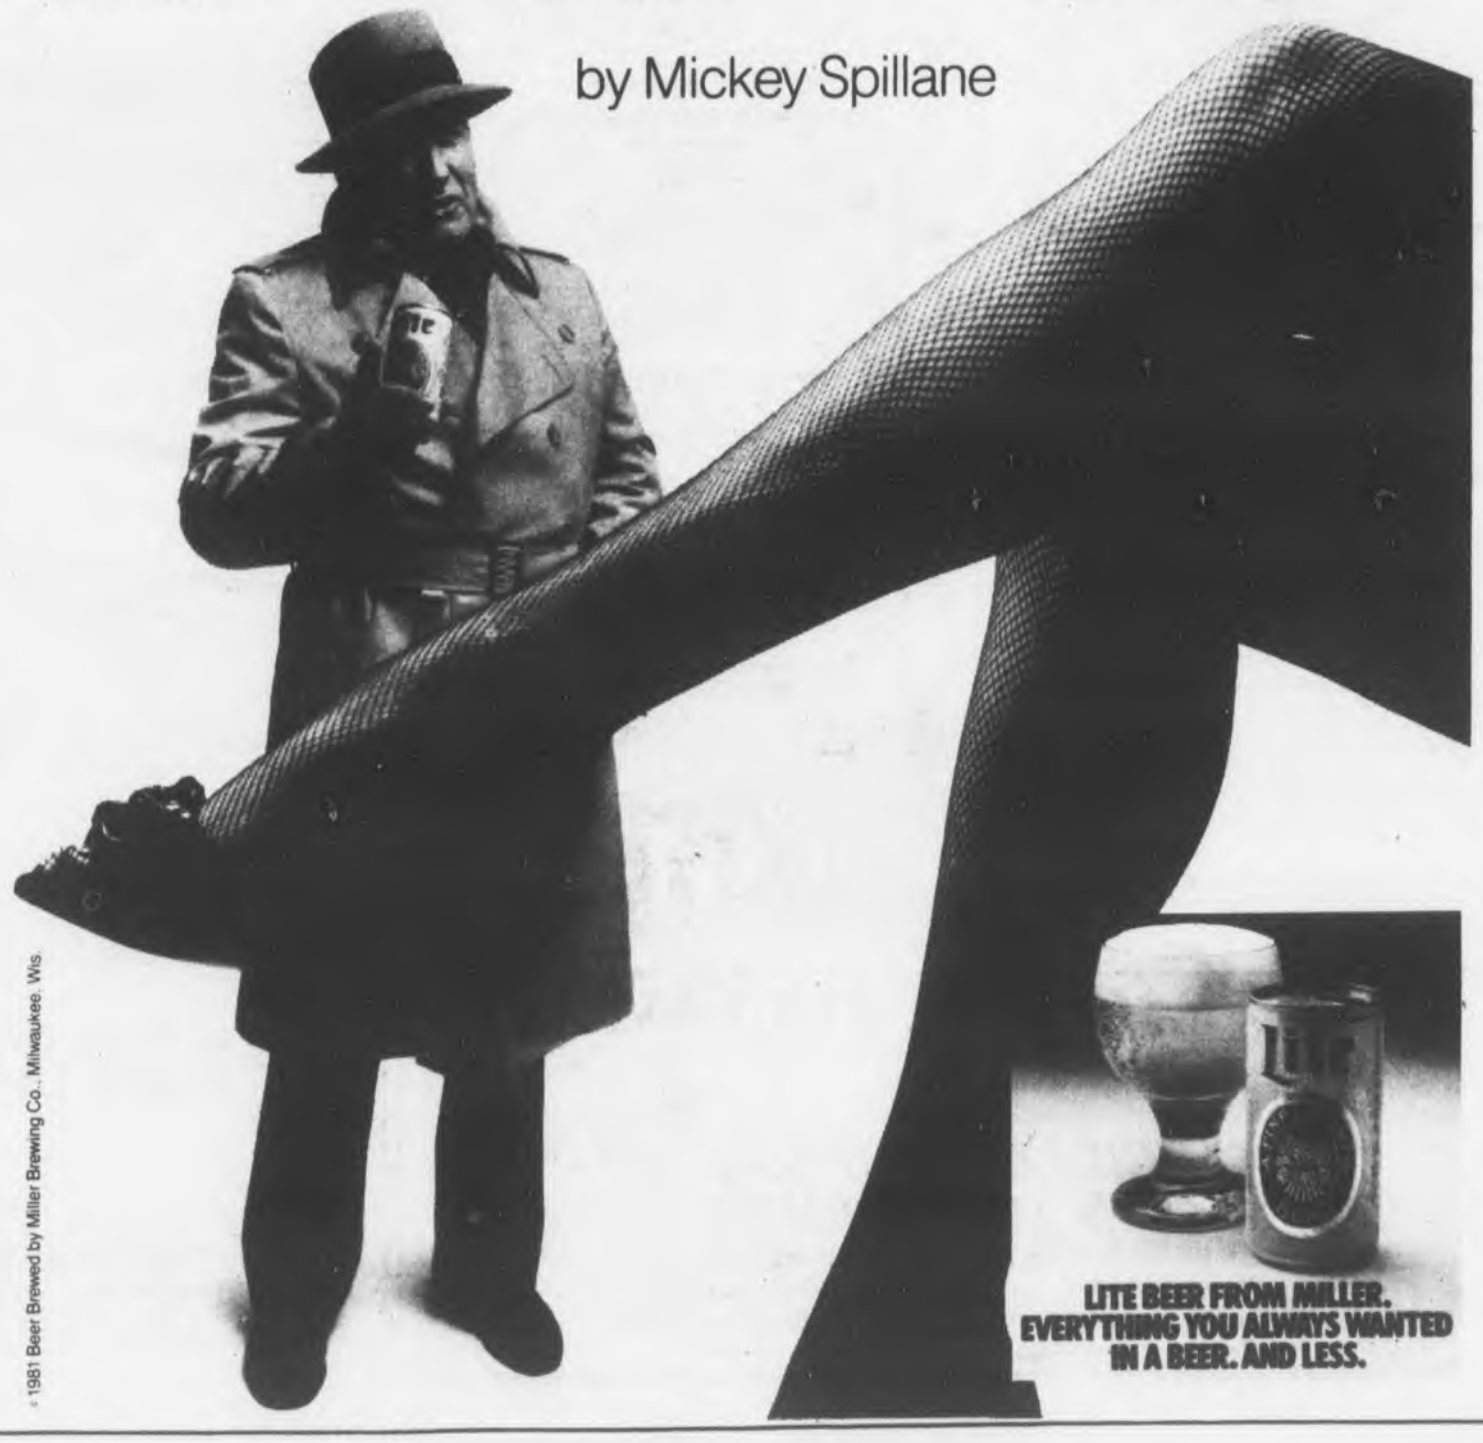
If you're going to write anything, know what you're talking about. And that means three things: Research, research, and more research. The more you know, the more you can tell your reader.

Take my characters. A lot of them I base on actual people. There's this buddy of mine who pops up in every book I write. In one story he's a cop. In another, a private eye. Once, I made him a millionaire. Using him not only helped make character development a heck of a lot easier, he was so carried away by the rich image, he bought me a lot of free dinners (and a lot of Lite Beer from Miller). So use the people you know as models.

Even locations should be based on real things. If you're writing about a bar, know that bar. Hang out there. Watch the bartender. The customers. Whatever they drink, you drink. When they drink Lite Beer, you drink Lite Beer. Remember–research is most fun when you soak up as much subject matter as you can. It can only help you paint a better picture.

HI, DOLL

No caper is complete without dames (or ladies in proper English). Experience has shown me that in mystery writing, the sexier the dames, the better. Experience has also shown me that sexy scenes make great punctuation marks. This is where research has the greatest potential. Use your own discretion in this matter. But when you write about it, don't be too explicit. That way, your reader gets to paint a more vivid picture.



CAPER TO PAPER

O.K., you've got your characters, locations, and dames lined up. Now comes the good part: Putting your caper to paper. There's no mystery to it. As long as you write the ending first, the rest will follow. Write short, terse, to-the-point sentences. Be as clear as possible. And make sure you've got the right stuff around for when you get thirsty. After all, writing is pretty thirsty work.

I suggest a couple of mugs of Lite Beer– who ever heard of a caper that didn't involve a couple of mugs?

Why Lite Beer? It's a lot like me and my books–great taste, less filling (some people can't get their fill of my books), and always good to spend time with.

At any rate, follow my advice and, who knows–you might turn out a heck of a story. Or you might turn out to be a heck of a Lite Beer drinker.

LITE BEER FROM MILLER. EVERYTHING YOU ALWAYS WANTED IN A BEER. AND LESS.

LORD OF THE FLIES

A terrifying vision of human nature results from Peter Brook's filming of the William Golding novel about a group of boys stranded on an island and faced with survival.
Civilization is quickly forgotten as the band of boys evolve downward into savagery and anarchy . . . . . Brook has constructed a negative world, a world of a sort we like to imagine is no longer possible but which may be lurking just beneath the surface.

Kinesis concert expresses sound of fusion jazz

By TOM GLASS
News Editor

It's been called bastardized music, but the mating of jazz and rock has spawned a legitimate child: Fusion.

Forum Hall Thursday night was filled with fusion performed by Kinesis. It wasn't magical, nor was it a trip. It was calculated. Clean music poured from the band, maybe too clean for a rock 'n' roller, maybe too calculated for a jazz purist — but Kinesis makes it work.

The band centers on a pile of horns stacked four deep, leans back on rhythms provided by bass, drums, guitar.

It is all planned, according to Ed Goodman, man on lead trumpet.

The jazz is there for the musician in all of us, and for those who can't sustain the thought...the rhythm section shows where the story-line is heading.

Review

THE BAND'S SECOND song was an example of music constructed to hold the band and audience within a framework. Each improvisation was framed by horn harmonizations. They proved to be the band's downfall, saturating the audience with horn-sauce. Instead of relying on the rock-based rhythm section to hold the rock-raised audience, the horns pulled into harmonizations that stifled the freedom of the individual improvisations.

One song that broke from this and remained unfettered was "Internal Combustion," featuring Goodman on the trumpet. The song started with a spittled toot and followed with a series of the same that grew to a tight-lipped scree. When the band moved in to cover, the audience backed Goodman as he reached down for the top of his horn's range and blew for real. From there the horns and band became stronger to the end of the song. It was the high point of the evening for me.

THE FOLLOWING SONG "Just Us Two" was nice. Although Steve Owen, alto sax, spent too much time running in place at the first of the piece, he found direction and performed some of the sweetest music of the night. The guitar handled by Bard Hoff, and keyboard man, Mark Sloniker lent tang to the production. Cutting through repetitive horn riffs, the two added life to a horn-bent piece.

Although never stealing center stage, drummer Dave Goodman and John Asti provided the foundation for the band superbly. Laid back with confidence, the two played, listening to the band, providing structure for the others to take off from.

However, it appeared the band lacked confidence in bassist, Dan Shore. The bass trance never came. He played to the band. Good stuff, but undeveloped. On one song, "Lawnhopper," Shore cut loose with a jet-roaring bass line that shook the place. I waited for more but received none.

Perhaps the song that ran closest to the fusion vein was the band's namesake, Kinesis. The highlight of the song was a bit at the start. The piccolo trumpet, high noted by Goodman, was captivating. From the delicate first movement, through the clamorous second, back to a sweet finish, the song put it all together and gave the audience what Kinesis is made of, music shot with life. Riddled with syncopation, the song defines the band's ability to play with the elements, and get away with it.

Opera

Gianni Schicchi, who is known for his unfailing ability at scheming.

SCHICCHI'S APPROACH IS direct: the deceased is removed and Schicchi takes his place in bed. When even the doctor is fooled, the overjoyed relatives call in a lawyer to hear the impersonated Donati make a new will. Their joy turns to rage, however, when Schicchi turns the tables in favor of himself and his daughter and Rinuccio, his son-in-law to be.

The demands of this comic opera were great, but the cast handled the difficult music and frantic stage movement beautifully. The complicated staging of the production is a credit to director Linda Haynes, instructor in speech.

Rich Brunner, graduate in music, portrayed the conniving but likeable Gianni Schicchi suberbly. His strong baritone voice beautifully characterized both Schicchi and the aging Donati without strain.

The part of Donati's greedy cousin Zita, also was excellently performed both vocally and dramatically by Ida Quick, senior in speech.

The colorful sets, superb staging, and polished acting and vocal performance make The Two Faces of Puccini very much worth seeing.

Salaries fall behind peer institutions

(Editor's note: This article is the first in a three-part series.)

By CHARLENE FARRELL
Staff Writer

When Wayne Danen came to K-State's chemistry department 15 years ago, he knew he was coming to a strong department that was better than others in the Big Eight and had the potential of becoming even more prestigious.

Lack of adequate support by the state has deteriorated those thoughts.

"Hope is gone for me," Danen, professor of chemistry, said. "I've been hampered by equipment, salary, building conditions...."

Among those joining Danen in leaving the University are Charles Corbin, professor of health, physical education and recreation; Richard Ruch, assistant dean of the College of Business Administration; and Bob Bruce, director of University Relations.

According to a study by the Kansas Board of Regents, during the past two years 347 employees have left the six state universities.

Facilities also create discontent

K-State was first in this area, failing to hold onto 138 of its faculty members from 1979-81.

One major factor contributing to the faculty losses is salaries.

According to an update of faculty salaries and fringe benefits by the Faculty Affairs Subcommittee of Faculty Senate, for the 1981-'82 academic year the salary pool increased 7 percent, while the inflation rate is between 8 and 10 percent. During an 11-year period, the purchasing power of K-State faculty has eroded almost 15 percent.

Faculty are not the only ones hurting — everyone's income is eroded by inflation. Adjusted faculty salaries fell by 10.7 percent while the adjusted per-capita income of Kansas residents rose by 7.4 percent (see graph back page).

The situation is not unique to K-State, but it appears bleakest here.

COMPARED WITH FIVE peer institutions selected by the Kansas Board of Regents for their academic and demographic similarity, K-State was ranked last 11 out of 12 years.

"The salaries have fallen an average of $2,400 behind our similar institutions," John Conard, executive officer of the Board of Regents, said.

K-State salaries are also low compared to the 67 other land- grant colleges. The University is unable to provide competitive salaries to over 91 percent of its faculty, the subcommittee's study cited.

"We should be able t match (salaries at) other institutions," Brian Spooner, professor of biology, said. "We're in the same business."

THIS MAY EXPLAIN why faculty members are moving to other educational institutions. However, 34.5 percent of those leaving Kansas institutions chose employment outside of higher education, according to the Board of Regents study.

"In business (industry) there are a lot of other opportunities, and I was ready to take them," said Gerald Pauler, former Pittsburg State University business faculty member who took a job in government at a substantial salary increase.

"The level (of university pay) wasn't comparable to other professions and was losing pace," he said. "I couldn't afford to stay."

Faculty members realize there is a disparity between faculty pay and salaries in industry when entering the education profession, said Kenneth Klabunde, head of the Department of Chemistry. What they do not realize is that the gap would become so wide.

Nine presumed dead in tanker fire

NEW YORK (AP) — A supertanker set fire by an unexplained explosion sank in the mid-Atlantic on Sunday, and the Coast Guard called off a search for nine U.S. crewmen missing and presumed dead.

Sixteen other crewmen who scrambled into lifeboats were taken aboard a Swedish merchant vessel.

U.S. Coast Guard spokesman Lt. David Klein said the empty 892-foot-long oil tanker "Golden Dolphin" sank around 6:20 a.m. Sunday, 900 miles east of Bermuda, following the explosion in its tank Saturday afternoon.

The Coast Guard office here, which is responsible for coordinating rescue operations for the northern Atlantic Ocean, had received a distress call from the Golden Dolphin at 2:54 p.m. EST Saturday, Klein said.

The Swedish vessel Norrland, the closest ship at the time, was sent to the scene and rescued the 16 crewmen from the tanker, which was registered in the United States.

Klein said the captain of the tanker, who was not identified, was among the survivors. He told officials that the nine missing men were "inspecting the tank" when it exploded.

The weather at the time was "relatively good," with winds at about 15 mph and three-to five-foot seas, "which are nothing for a vessel of some 800 feet," Klein said.

The Norrland, later joined by a Yugoslavian vessel, the Nova Gorcia, "stood by as the vessel burned and began sinking during the night," Klein said.

The rescue ships searched for the missing seamen but found no traces, prompting the Coast Guard to suspend any active search.

"Unless new information comes up, we do not intend to search further," Klein said.

Official says Sunday fires may be arson-related

Approximately $1,450 in damage was reported in eight apparent arson fires responded to by the Manhattan Fire Dept. Sunday, according to Larry Reese, Deputy Fire Chief of the Manhattan Fire Dept.

"In our opinion, they were all set fires," Reese said

The department first responded at 4:42 p.m. Sunday to a fire in a dumpster trash bin behind the Manhattan Mercury, Fifth and Osage Streets.

The final response was made at 6:08 p.m. to a dumpster trash bin behind King Rug Cleaners, 808 N. Third St., Reese said.

The most damage, $1,000, was reported at Faith Furniture Store, 302 E. Poyntz. The damage was limited to smoke damage to furniture in a storage trailer, as well as to some stacked wooden doors and a light pole behind the building, Reese said.

At Food 4 Less, 401 E. Poyntz, approximately $450 in damages occurred to a loading dock railing and compacted boxes at the rear of the store, Reese said.

According to Reese, the remainder of the fires occurred in dumpster trash bins at the rear of the following locations:

— Wal-Mart Discount City, 628 Tuttle Creek Blvd.
— All Season's Motel, 1501 Tuttle Creek Blvd.
— Barry's Drug Center, 409 Poyntz Ave.
— a residence at 331 Fremont Ave.

There was no property damage sustained at these locations, Reese said.

Anyone witnessing any suspicious activity at these locations, or possessing information regarding these fires is urged to contact the Manhattan Fire Department.

An investigation of the incidents is currently being conducted.

Staff/Rob Clark

One of eight... Manhattan fireman responded to a trash bin fire at Faith Furniture Store, 302 E. Poyntz, which was one of eight fires reported Sunday. Fire department officals suspect arson as cause; investigations are currently under way over the incidents.

Clue to Belushi's death may lie in body tissue

LOS ANGELES (AP) — More detailed tests must be conducted on tissue from the body of comedian John Belushi, because the initial autopsy did not reveal the cause of death, officials said Sunday.

The new tests, which call for slides of body tissue that might show changes caused by disease as well as toxicological and neurological analysis, "more than likely" will begin Monday, mortuary attendant Gavino Herrera said.

Herrarra said the specimens to be used in the more detailed tests probably were removed from the body during Saturday's autopsy.

Belushi, 33, who won acclaim on television's "Saturday Night Live" and starred in the films "Animal House" and "Neighbors," was found dead Friday in a $200-a-day bungalow of the elegant Chateau Marmont Hotel on Sunset Strip.

Also on Sunday, Howard Koch, the producer of the Academy Awards presentations, said he had spoken with Belushi the afternoon before his death and the comedian had agreed to appear on the March 29 broadcast.

"He sounded marvelous — very up, very excited," Koch said. "I thought it was going to be great, the two of them." Belushi was to appear on stage with longtime friend and "Saturday Night Live" co-star Dan Aykroyd to present the Oscar for best visual effects.

Los Angeles County Coroner Thomas Noguchi said in a terse statement read to reporters after the autopsy that the cause of death had not been established and no additional information would be released pending further tests. Philip Schwartzberg, Noguchi's assistant chief of investigations, declined to say when the next results might be expected.

Noguchi refused comment on a statement by a hotel gardener, who saw the body, that Belushi appeared to have choked on food.

Chateau Marmont manager Suzanne Jierjian said Belushi, who checked into the hotel last Sunday in preparation for filming a Paramount comedy called "Noble Rot," was "driving himself extremely hard."

"Sometimes, he seemed like he was very, very tired — so tired that he couldn't talk or just wouldn't want to talk. But other times he was very happy and jolly," she said.

Closing of street to bring inconvenience to Lafene

Plan ahead.

That seems to be the best advice for anyone needing to use Lafene Student Health Center during spring break.

The street leading to Lafene (17th Street) will be closed March 14 through March 21 for connection of underground chilled water lines, according to Vince Cool, director of facilities planning.

Dr. Robert Tout, director of Lafene, said the student health center would not be completely cut off because of the project, but the street closing will affect people who would like to drive there.

Tout suggested calling Lafene or using another health facility if unable to drive to Lafene.

The street could be opened with about 15 minutes notice if there was an emergency, Cool said.

"The reason we are closing the street is that it is such a small area it is difficult to keep half the street open and still have room to move large trucks and dirt," he said.

The construction work is being done during spring break to make "as little inconvenience as possible," Cool said.

The project consists of connecting lines from the new central water chilling plant to existing lines which run throughout campus. Water from the chilling plant is piped to buildings on campus for use in air conditioning systems, according to Cool.

The lines run down 17th Street from the cooling plant and will make a connection with the existing lines just south of the Power Plant.

While the street to Lafene will be reopened after work is completed, there is a possiblity part of 17th Street, from the Power Plant to Ward Hall, will remain closed permanently, Cool said. The street is currently closed for construction work being done on Durland Hall and the water chilling plant.

A study by the Long Range Planning Committee in 1979 called for "a more pedestrian-oriented campus," Cool said. A proposal made from this study was to block some sections of campus roads to decrease vehicle traffic.

"Since 17th Street had to be closed anyway," Cool said, "it is serving as a test of the study to determine if it would be a terrible inconvenience if the street were closed permanently."

In Friday's Collegian it was incorrectly stated that Raydon Robel, director of Recreational Services, requested $80,541 from Student Senate in addition to a $2.50 line item fee already collected.

The request is that the line item of $2.50 remain the same for Recreational Services. This line item totals $80,541.

Space shuttle launch preparations continue

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — Technicians finished loading volatile fuels into the space shuttle and began securing launch pad 39-A Sunday in preparation for Columbia's third launch March 22.

The work was "proceeding smoothly" and on schedule, and other preparations could begin on the oceanside pad by 5 p.m. CST, Kennedy Space Center spokesman Dick Young said.

Workers finished pumping the toxic, highly combustible maneuvering propellants into their tanks around midnight Saturday, Young said. The pumping began last week.

The propellants power the engines that manuever the spacecraft in and out of orbit and a steering system that controls the craft in space, spokesman Mark Hess said.

"We should be far enough along that we can pick up the countdown preparation by 4 p.m. Monday," Hess said.

Final countdown for the week-long mission will begin March 18, he said. Launch is set for 10 a.m. The space plane is scheduled to return to a desert landing strip near Edwards Air Force Base, Calif., on March 29.

Pope seeks ends of Guatamala struggle

VATICAN CITY — Pope John Paul II appealed on Sunday for an end to the "fratricidal struggle" in Guatemala, saying not even the Roman Catholic church has been spared by that nation's wave of killings and kidnappings.

Speaking in Italian from his apartment window to 35,000 pilgrims and tourists in St. Peter's Square, the pontiff also said he will visit the Fatima Shrine in Portugal on May 13, the first anniversary of the attempt on his life.

Turning to the situation in strife-torn Central America for the second straight week, the pope said the fighting in Guatemala, where a rightist government is battling left-wing insurgents, is "suffocating legitimate aspirations for peaceful co-existence."

He did not mention the Sunday elections in Guatemala, where four right-wing candidates were running for president.

The monthly death count from political violence in Guatemala has reportedly risen from less than 100 in 1980 to 300 last year.

'Mystery cloud' covers Northern Hemisphere

MOUNTAIN VIEW, Calif. — A million tons of fine particles circling the Earth as a huge cloud are dissipating so much that they now "cover the whole Northern Hemisphere," a scientist says.

Data gathered from the cloud by a U-2 reconnaisance plane over the the Gulf of Mexico was being flown back here Sunday for analysis and "it may take until Wednesday before we are able to really know what's there," said the scientist, Owen Toon.

"Right now, (the cloud) kind of covers the whole Northern Hemisphere, so it's everywhere," said Toon, of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration's Ames Research Center in Mountain View.

The cloud traces were obtained Saturday when the plane took off from Topeka, and soared more than 10 miles up into the stratosphere and passed through the haze.

Story accuses FBI of spying at Iowa colleges

DES MOINES, Iowa — The FBI conducted surveillance at 15 Iowa colleges for more than 20 years, focusing on black students, women's rights' groups and others, the Des Moines Register reported Sunday.

In a copyright story, the newspaper said details of the spying is contained in more than 700 pages of heavily censored government documents released under the U.S. Freedom of Information Act, on a request from the Register.

The documents, dating from 1957 to 1979, show that black students were frequently subjects of FBI investigations, the paper said. One 1970 memo said all groups "organized to project the demands of black students...are to be subjects of discreet preliminary inquiries. These inquiries are to be...carefully conducted to avoid criticism."

Roundup features Southern-fried snake

OPP, Ala. — About 12,000 spectators and snake hunters flocked to the 23rd annual Rattlesnake Rodeo Saturday to munch on hunks of Southern fried snake, admire still-slithering rattlers and cheer the crowning of a Rattlesnake Queen.

Saturday's events included a parade through downtown Opp, arts and crafts shows, parachute and karate demonstrations, a tobacco spitting contest, buck dancing competition and a greased pig chase.

Spectators milled about the Opp High School stadium, nibbling Southern fried rattlesnake, which the Jaycees sold for $1 a chunk.

More than 100 live Eastern diamond-back rattlesnakes were turned in for trophies and cash prizes. The hunter with the largest number of rattlers was Ferrell Kelley, of Enterprise, who rounded up 53 snakes for a bounty of $795. Prizes also went for the largest rattlesnake caught, and the snake with the most rattlers.

Mystery cloud baffles scientists

It is a scene straight from the pages of a science fiction novel. A mysterious cloud appears in the earth's atmosphere and the scientists can offer no confirmed reasons for its sudden debut.

The termed "mystery cloud" is briefly mentioned in late February by a friendly weather forecaster as it is sighted over Japan. It then continues to grow and is reported to cover the entire Northern Hemisphere.

The science fiction script continues as elaborately equipped scientific aircraft are sent to investigate and collect data, data which will be used to erase the questions and theories already forming in the minds of the curious.

Speculation as to the cause runs the gamut of an unnoticed volcanic eruption to suspicions of atmospheric testing of nuclear weapons by a zealous new club member, the nuclear club.

Humorous stories of aliens attacking to conquer the Earth can not be bypassed. The incident will surely arise in similar form on the pages of an aspiring science fiction writer, it is too good to ignore with its overtones of reality.

The curious, the worried and the UFO fans are told to wait as the scientists use their calculated methods of forming facts. Let's hope that this incident is only a sideshow of nature and not one of man's exhibits.

Drivers beware of gas price wars

For the first time in many years, the news at the gas pump is once again good.

Many areas of the country are now experiencing a gasoline price war much like those of the 60s.

Oil companies are closing down marginally productive wells because the great profit incentives are no longer present. The profits are still there, but not like the boom days of recent years.

Gasoline companies are now fighting for the customers' dollars, and prices in some areas have dipped below $1 per gallon.

Although this will make the financial impact of a tank of gas less painful, consumers should not use this as an excuse to revert to the squandering of gasoline so prevalent in the era of the gas guzzler.

The prices may be more realistic and more accurately reflect a true market price, but drivers must not abandon conservation practices learned during the days of embargoes and sky-rocketing prices.

The big worm and The Great Escape

Gather around and listen with care as the story is told of habits we share.

Occasionally we bee-bop through life, rarely touched by strife. Our hearts soaring above our heads, assuring us practicality is indeed dead. Gossamer wings carry us about. We glide and giggle and create clowns out of clouds which come our way.

Life is truly astonishing when floated over in such a sheltered state. It zips through our veins with so much charge we become literally electrified.

We zoom, sparkle, create and accomplish so much that it is beyond astounding — it's nauseating.

To fly about at top creative speed is amazing. Generally we rotate in slower circles, making bee-like loops. Lazy arcs of happy disorganization carry us through our sunshiny days of existence.

But this is Kansas.

DARK, OMINOUS CLOUDS build a black storm front. A shocking change occurs when the sunshine in our lives is shadowed. We metamorphose into the creature from Reality — alias, the big worm.

The big worm is dreaded by all since no force can stop it. An uncontrollable element in everyone's life, it destroys our bee-like loops of happy disorganization and throws them into its gutter home.

The worm's home walls are papered with stolen smiles, laughter and joyous moments of intoxication ("fun things"). Trapped mercilessly in shackles of darkness and sewage, the prisoners are held, awaiting The Great Escape.

THE "FUN THINGS" in life tremble against the cold, damp walls of the big worm's home — coughing with each intake of mold-infested air. Creativity is wrapped ruthlessly in yesterday's toilet paper and left to rot in a wet spot.

The big worm plays surveyor with a cold-hearted disinterest. Its cloudy, green eyes view it all through a cloudy, green haze — until The Ray of Sunshine breaks through, instigating The Great Escape. Freed by the illumination, "fun things" break-away from the wall and float out into the street on gossamer wings.

They prance, rejoice and make lazy arcs of happy disorganization once again, but now it looks like a big piece of dirty wall-paper acting stupid.

THE STREET CLEANER, doing his job in a methodic, hypnoptic manner, sweeps the smiles, laughter and joyous moments of intoxication to the side. The industrious wind proceeds to blast the collection of "fun things" through the nearest gutter grate, where desolate big worm awaits.

Its cloudy, green eyes make deliberate blinks, not believing what they see in their cloudy, green world. A piece of dirty wall-paper, acting like it has life, has landed in the big worm's private sewer estates. The trash they try to throw on me, it thinks in disgust, as it stuffs the "wallpaper" back through the grate.

It just goes to prove, life really is a series of bee-like loops, lazy arcs of disorganization, smiles, laughter and joyous moments of intoxication, big worms and Great Escapes.

Anorexics have poor body image

Excess dieting may lead to danger

By LAUREEN MOORE
Collegian Reporter

Losing weight: 5 pounds, 10 pounds, maybe more. Dieting because there is a party next week or because swimsuit weather is just around the corner. Whatever the reason, excessive weight loss in a short period of time can be dangerous; dieting can become an obsession. Just ask Lisa.

Lisa, freshman in education, wanted to lose weight before a wedding. In fact, she and one of her sisters were competing to see who could lose 10 pounds before the wedding.

In the first month she lost 15 pounds, dropping down to a slim 105 pounds on her 5-foot-2 frame. Everyone praised her for losing weight and the attention felt good, Lisa said.

"It was a real ego boost to get so much attention. No one in my family had ever been able to lose weight like that before and it felt good that I could do it," she said.

LISA HAD DEVELOPED anorexia nervosa, a dangerous eating disorder. Its chief symptom is a devastating weight loss from self-inflicted starvation and sometimes from gorging and vomiting.

Losing 15 pounds was not enough for Lisa. Before long she was down to 80 pounds, a weight she maintained throughout most of her illness, she said. Eating became very ritualistic for Lisa. Breakfast was her main meal.

"It had to look like I was eating breakfast so they wouldn't get suspicious. I would surround my bowl with cereal boxes and pour as little cereal as possible in my bowl and then eat just part of it," Lisa said.

Lisa's lunch consisted of half an apple or orange. Dinner was half an apple, some yogurt and a carrot or some other vegetable. She said that about all she ate were vegetables or fruits that she thought did not have many calories. One fruit Lisa would not eat was bananas because she said she saw them as fattening.

LISA SAID SHE would weigh herself five or more times a day. She wore no makeup or jewelry "so if the urge to weigh hit" she would not have any extra weight.

No matter how much weight she lost, Lisa did not see herself as being that thin. In actuality she was a skeleton. This is a typical pattern for anorexics, according to Margaret Grayden, social worker at Lafene Student Health Center and anorexia student counselor.

"I didn't see myself as being a picture of malnutrition or a skeleton. What I saw in the mirror to me wasn't bad, but it wasn't good," Lisa said.

Anorexics have a very distorted image of their bodies, according to Grayden. They see themselves as they were partway through their weight loss, but never as they really are.

Another pattern many anorexics follow is a rigorous program of physical exercise, such as running. "I was very healthy throughout," Lisa said. "At least I always had to act that way. I could not act sick or tired. I had to keep up a good front."

THERE ARE MANY many physical problems brought on by eating disorders that anorexics do not see as problems, Grayden said. These symptoms include dry skin, rashes caused by dehydration, constipation, edema, bloating and dental caries.

A loss of menstruation may last from one to 10 years. This is caused by the lack of body fat, the rigorous athletic training, emotional attitudes and sometimes from gorging and vomiting, according to Grayden.

Most anorexics suffer from dehydration because of the reduced fluid intake and the excessive fluid elimination. Many anorexics excessively use laxatives and diuretics to maintain or continue weight loss. "I never drank liquids because if I did I would feel bloated or fat," Lisa said.

DURING THE SUMMER of 1981 when Lisa was preparing to come to K-State, a lack of fluids took her weight down to 72 pounds.

"I'd lay out in the sun and perspire and then not replace any of that fluid," Lisa said. "It was then that my dad finally came to me and said that they wanted me to get a physical."

On the day of her physical, July 17, her doctor put her in the hospital where she spent the next 99 days. Most of that time Lisa was in the psychiatric ward. Upon admittance, Lisa weighed 74 pounds — 46 pounds less than her original weight.

"Even once I was in the hospital it took me a while to gain any weight. I didn't gain anything the first week and a half no matter what I ate," Lisa said.

When Lisa left the hospital in October, she weighed 105 pounds. She said her father continued to weigh her regularly until she left for school in January.

"I haven't weighed myself since I came up here, but I'm going home during spring break and I'll weigh then," Lisa said. "I'm kinda nervous about it. I know I've gained some weight since coming up here. But that's OK. I'm over it (anorexia) now.

"I see several girls here in the hall and walking around campus that I suspect have anorexia. I really wish I could help them because I've been there," she said.

Lisa isn't the only one noticing what could be possible cases of anorexia on campus.

"We (Lafene) are hearing about or seeing more of this problem this year than ever before," Grayden said. The main problem is getting anorexics to get help, she added.

"Most of them deny that they have a problem or need help. The ones that usually do come for help usually do so under duress from friends or family," she said. "If they do come in (to Lafene), we can help them through counseling and putting them on a proper diet."

Report says Khomeini foes get U.S. aid

NEW YORK (AP) — The United States is secretly aiding Iranian paramilitary and political exile groups and beaming radio propaganda into Iran, The New York Times reported Sunday.

The Times quoted Western intelligence officials and other unidentified sources who said the program was designed to counter growing Soviet influence in Iran and to give the United States a significant role if Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini's Islamic regime falters.

In Washington, a State Deparment source who asked not to be identified said he was unaware of any secret U.S. aid going to Iranian paramilitary groups. Anything the United States is doing to help exiled poltical groups is "indirect," he said.

The Times reported that its intelligence sources said no efforts were being made to overthrow the Islamic fundamentalist government.

The goal of the program, which reportedly is run by the CIA, is to knit together a coalition of exile groups and their supporters in Iran so that if the opportunity arises, they can help shape the future of the country, the newspaper reported.

The Times said the covert actions include financing two paramilitary units in eastern Turkey, funneling millions of dollars annually to Iranian exile groups to get them to cooperate with each other, and establishing a radio station to broadcast anti-government information.

System helps enforce University regulations

Editor's note: This is the first in a five-part series on K-State's judicial process.

By DEE ANNE HEADLEY
Collegian Reporter

Like weaving, there is a golden thread that holds the tapestry of government together — government by the people, or students, as the case may be.

The thread has woven itself into the K-State governmental system, too. It shines through in all branches: executive (student body president), legislative (Student Senate) and judicial.

While the executive and legislative branches are in the news often, the judicial system is less known.

Living group judicial boards have disciplinary jurisdiction over students living in residence halls, cooperative houses run by the University (Smith and Smurthwaite) and Jardine Terrace Apartments.

"The judicial boards within the halls enforce their own laws," said Feona Clark, chairman of the West Hall judicial board and sophomore in fashion marketing.

JOHN FRIEL, judicial affairs coordinator and graduate in education, said, "The major emphasis is on students being responsible for themselves. The University has gone along with that right as a part of their total education."

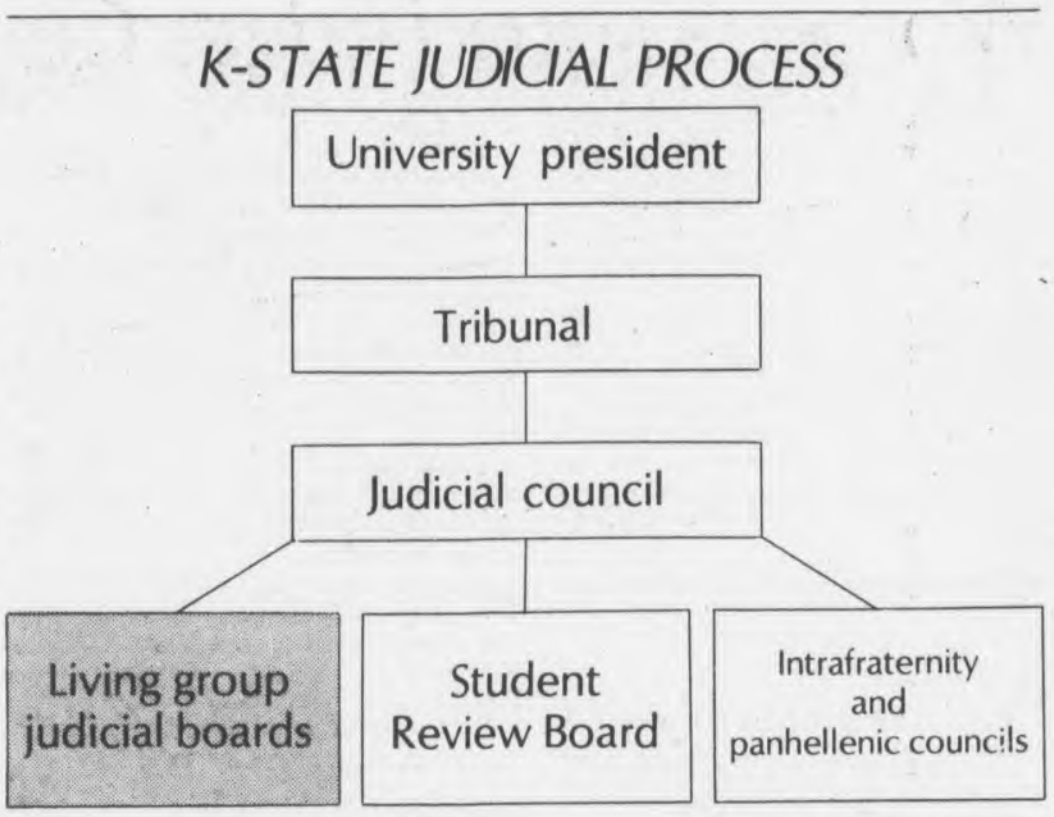
In some residence halls and cooperative houses, members of the judicial boards are elected so that there is a representative from each floor or corridor on the board. In other halls, members apply for the job and are selected through interviews. Members on some boards serve for a year while others serve for a semester.

Most judicial board members go through a training session held by Friel and Judicial Council.

"The basic thrust of the training is knowledge of the system, especially the concept of due process in education," Friel said. "It (the concept of due process) is nowhere near the hard-and-fast system we have downtown, but there are certain student rights that must be upheld."

THE JUDICIAL PROCESS begins when a resident of the living group or a staff member files a complaint against a resident for a rule violation. The person filing the complaint (the plaintiff) must fill out a form including his name, address and telephone number, the defendant's name, the time, date and place the violation occurred and a description of the violation. The plaintiff must also sign the form.

The chairman of the judicial board then meets with the hall director or judicial adviser to decide whether the case should come before the board. If the violation is minor, a hearing is often not held unless the individual has already had several complaints filed against him.



If a hearing is to be held, the chairman sets a date for it, allowing at least two class days for the defendant to prepare a defense. Clark said defendants can have witnesses in their behalf and a lawyer present.

The chairman of the board gives the defendant a notification of hearing form after it is decided that the case will be heard. The form includes the name of the defendant and the plaintiff, a statement of the charges, a summary of the evidence and the time, date and place of the hearing, said Brad Chilcoat, chief justice of Haymaker Hall judicial board and sophomore in prelaw.

DEFENDANT is given a copy of the University Philosophy of Student Conduct and the KSU Honor and Conduct Code, as well as sections of the K-State constitution and by-laws dealing with the judicial process.

The closed hearings are usually held in the hall or cooperative house and most boards tape-record the proceeding in order to have a verbatim account of the trial if it is appealed.

Women's squad edges Central Missouri State

Lynn Hickey looked exhausted and mentally drained following the women's basketball game Friday night against Central Missouri State at Ahearn Field House.

But the K-State women's head coach had good reason for the solemn, tired expression.

What Hickey had just witnessed was a furious Wildcat rally in the closing minutes which gave the 'Cats their 15th straight victory. K-State outscored their opponents 14-2 in the final 4:36 of play to eke out the victory, 66-61.

"It was a great comeback, but we shouldn't have been in that situation," Hickey said. "We had poor concentration while they played hard and wanted to win. The biggest thing is that we came back and got the win."

A six-day layoff and injuries may have been a slight factor, Hickey said, but she insisted the rationale were not excuses.

"You have to give a lot of credit to Central Missouri State. They moved so well and really hustled," she said.

K-State, 24-5 this season, was led in scoring by Tammie Romstad. The 6-foot-2 senior tallied 21 points and pulled down a game-high 12 rebounds. Guard Priscilla Gary tossed in 17 points, eight of them coming in the final minutes.

Central Missouri State, 19-7 on the year, got 27 points and 10 rebounds from Carla Eades. Lori Burroughs followed with 13 points and Alesia Prince added 11.

In the remaining minutes, two free throws by Romstad and two baskets by Gary cut the Jennies' lead to 59-58. With 1:34 left, a layup by Gary put the 'Cats in front to stay. Twenty seconds later, Gary stole the ball and was fouled. She canned two charity tosses extending the lead to 62-59. Romstad and Jean Roise sank four more crucial free throws to ensure K-State's victory.

In the first half, the Wildcats shot a dismal 32 percent, but managed to gain a 15-10 lead with 9:40 remaining. The Jennies eventually tied the score 17-17 on two buckets by Eades.

The Jennies built their biggest first half margin to 21-18 on a steal and layup by Burroughs. K-State's Angie Bonner scored six points in the waning minutes of the first half to help keep the 'Cats close.

For the game, K-State shot 46 percent from the floor, thanks to 66 percent shooting in the second half. The Wildcats also went to the charity stripe 40 times, a season high. They connected on 26 of the attempts for 65 percent. Central Missouri State shot 43 percent form the field in the contest. They went to the line only eight times and capitalized on five of them.

K-State won the battle on the boards, 40-28. Three Central Missouri State players fouled out of the game as did Barbara Gilmore for the 'Cats.

Men, women NCAA bound

The regular season has ended and now it's tournament time for the men's and women's basketball teams. Both squads received bids to the National Collegiate Athletic Association (NCAA) tournament which begins Friday for both teams.

The women will host Stephen F. Austin in the first round of the first-ever NCAA women's tournament Friday night at Ahearn Field House.

K-State's women, 24-5 on the season, is in the Eastern Regional. If the 'Cats win in the first round they will advance to the regional semifinals at Raleigh, N.C., March 18. The women's tourney is comprised of 32 teams with the finals being held in Norfolk, Va., March 26-28.

"They have a girl who plays exactly like Priscilla Gary named Pam Crawford. They have three quick guards, so it will be a challenge," Head Coach Lynn Hickey said.

On the men's side, K-State, 21-7, will battle Northern Illinois, 16-13, in the Reunion Arena in Dallas, Texas. The winner of that match will face Arkansas on Sunday. Head Coach Jack Hartman said he is pleased with K-State's position in the Midwest regional.

"I'm happy we'll be playing in Dallas. It is good for the fans because of the relatively short travel distance," he said.

The other seeded teams in the Midwest region besides Arkansas are DePaul, Tulsa and Big Eight regular and post-season champion Missouri.

Weekend results

The men and women's soccer clubs were victorious this weekend; however, the K-State Rugby Club was not as fortunate, losing a heart-breaker to Nebraska, 24-21.

The K-State Women's Soccer Club opened the spring season with a 5-0 road victory over the Topeka Sunrise. The first half started slow with K-State scoring only one goal, Jan Rutter, assistant coach, said.

While the women breezed by Topeka, the men's soccer club had to fight back after sacrificing a goal early in the game for a 4-1 victory over the Wichita Wheathawks at the intramural fields.

Baseball team wins opener

Louis Trujillo and Duane Harms combined to allow only one run on five hits and Glynn Perry went three for four to pace the K-State baseball team over Wayne State, 10-1, in the Wildcats season opener at Frank Myers Field Sunday afternoon.

Head Coach Dave Baker noted that the Wildcats played well for the first game of the year considering the cold weather.

Tuesday's twinbill against St. Mary of the Plains has been rescheduled for today at 1:30 p.m.

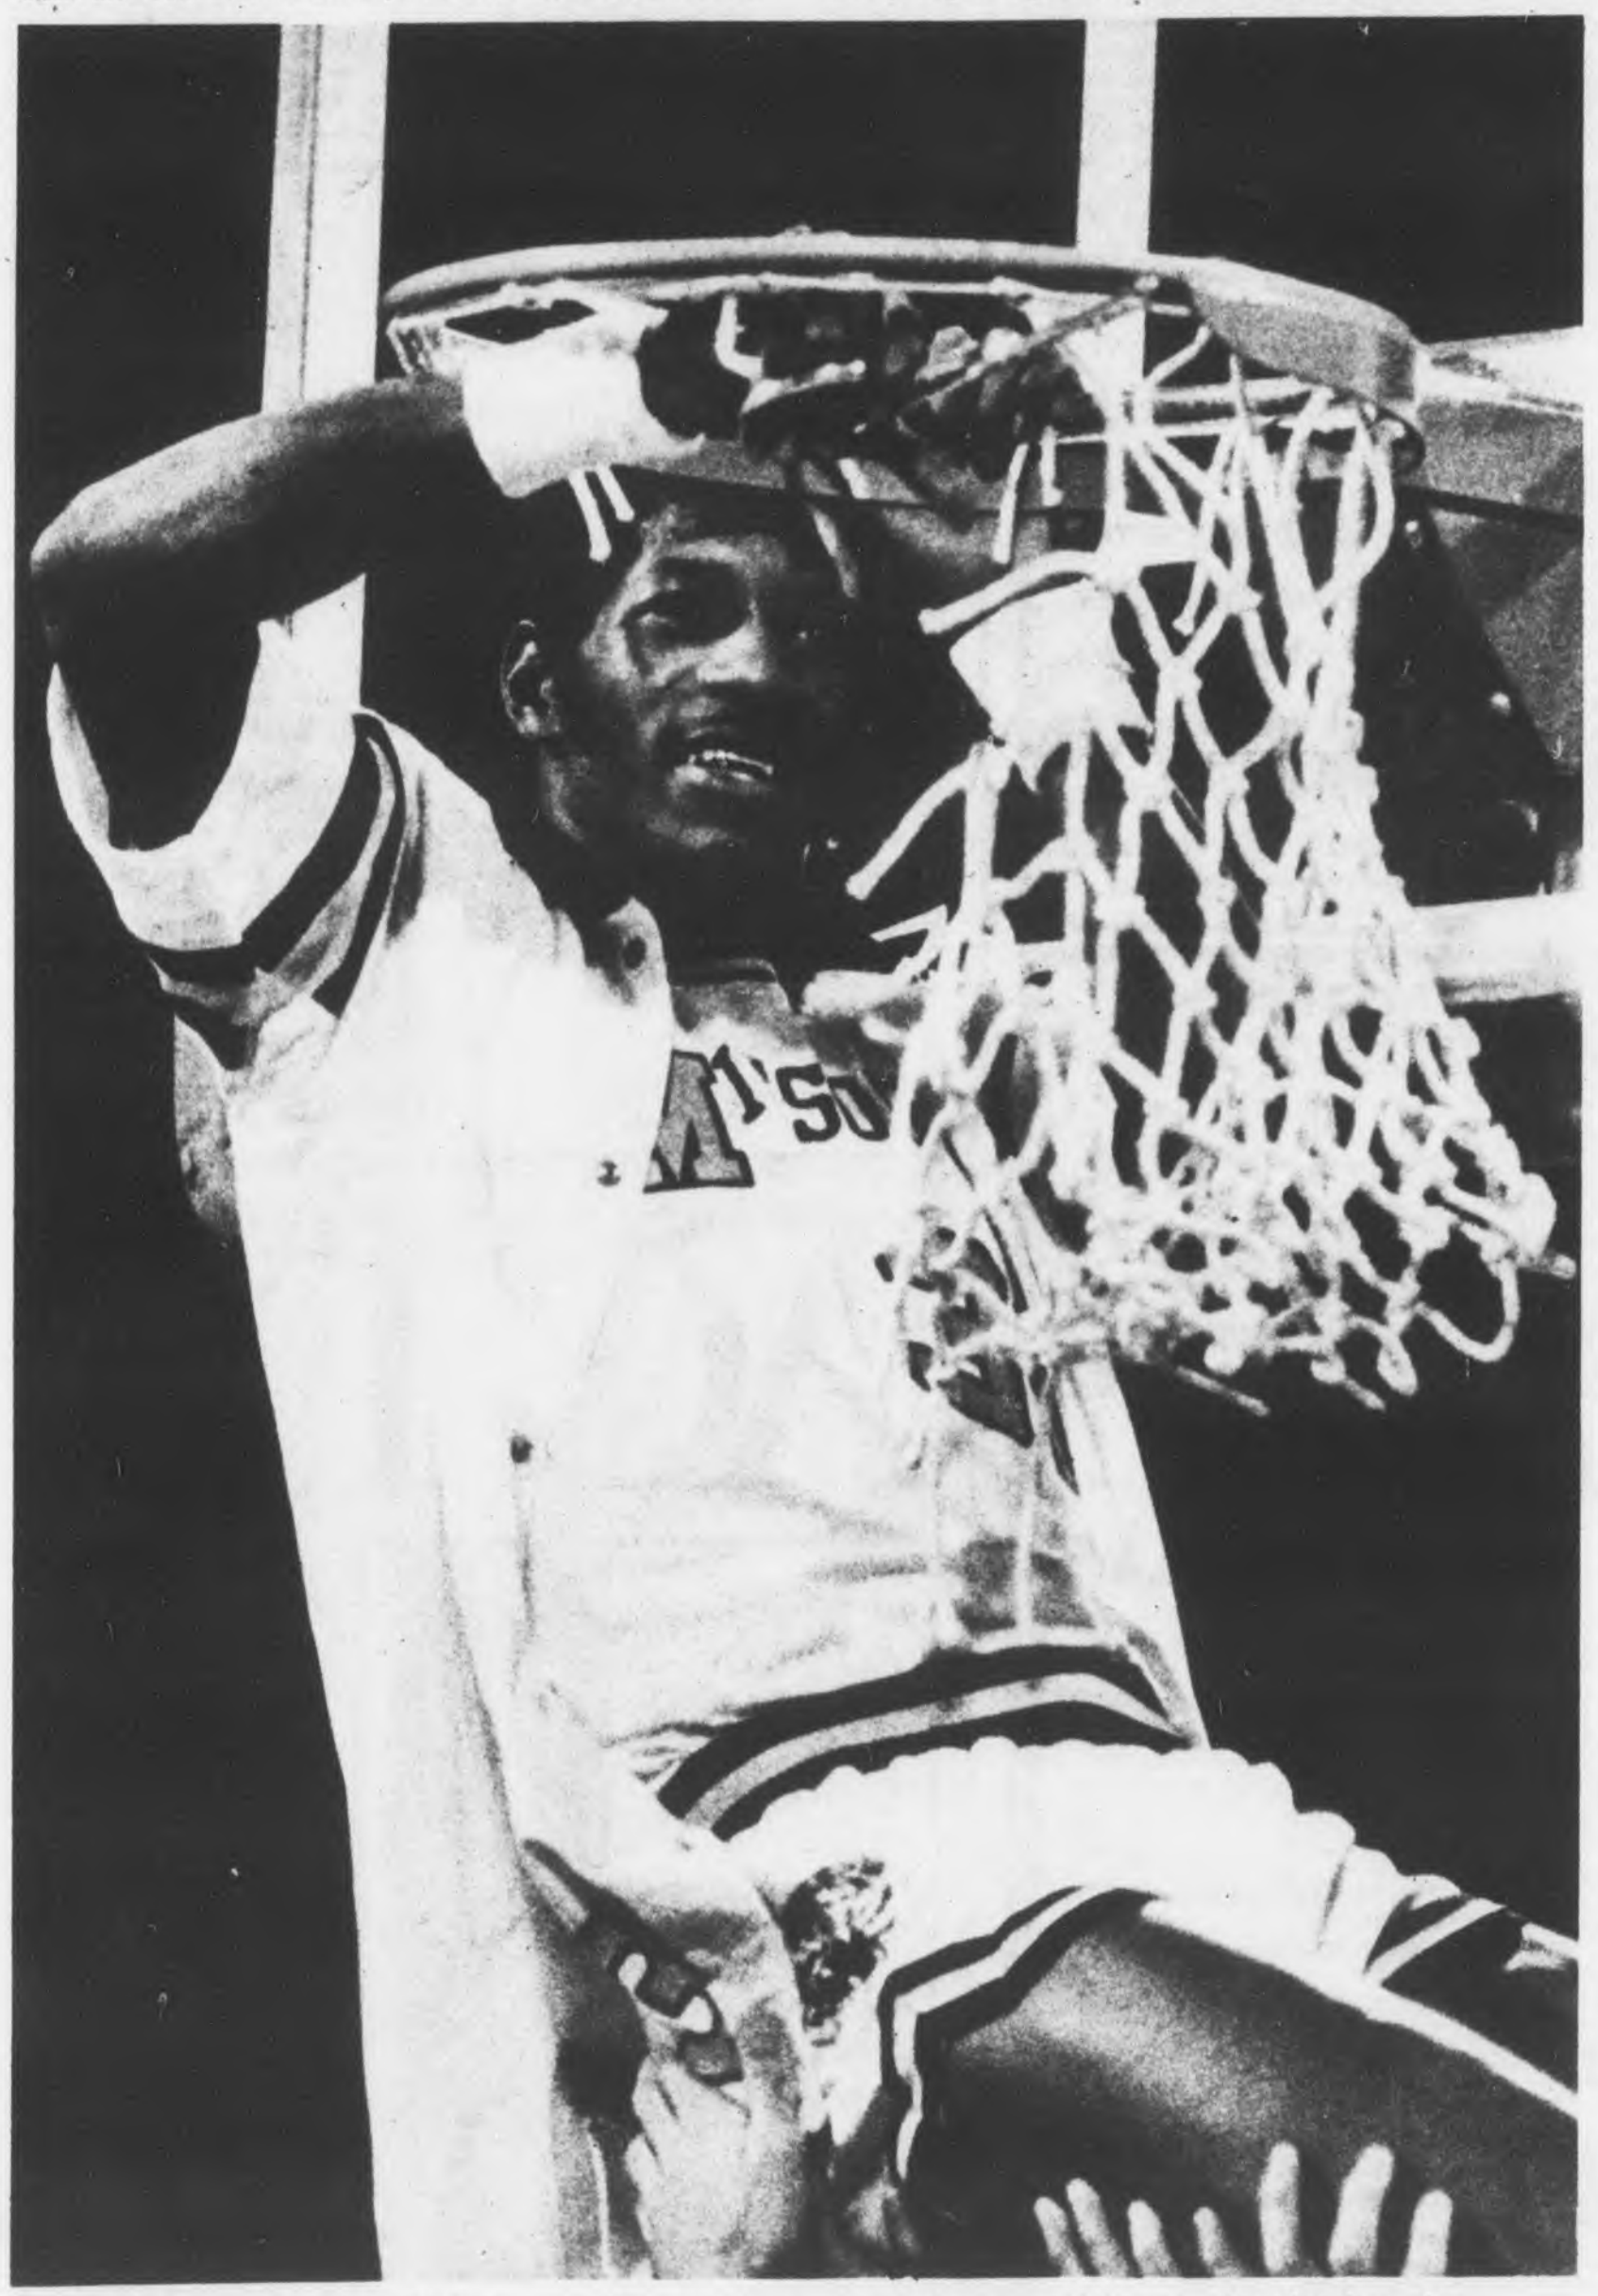
Missouri Tigers win Big Eight Tournament

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — It just wasn't to be. K-State's performance in the Big Eight Tournament semifinal round was like a chapter from "The Little Train That Could," — but couldn't.

For only the second time in the six-year history of the post- season tourney, a Kansas school was not in the finals.



The Jayhawks had already packed away their sneakers after last Tuesday's romping in Manhattan. K-State made the journey to Kansas City's Kemper Arena Friday night, but the Oklahoma Sooners came ready to play.

Opening night in Kansas City ended early and in a tragic way for the Wildcats. Oklahoma jumped ahead early, leaving K-State with an uphill trek. The fight back was like climbing a steep hill chanting "I think I can, I think I can" all the way. But whenever the peak was in sight, the 'Cats became lost in a cloud of red-and-white smoke. Oklahoma gunned its way into the finals. K-State was left in the engine house, and fans clad in purple and white left mumbling, "Well, I thought they could, I thought they could."

WHEN THE FINAL horn sounded to end the Big Eight Tournament, it was the Missouri Tigers cutting the nets down, and injured starter Marvin "Moon" McCrary accepting the championship trophy at center court before screaming fans dressed in black and gold.

The Big Eight Tournament was a success for the conference as a whole, but the Sunflower State may want to forget this one ever happened.

After defeating Nebraska in the semis, Missouri entered the chamionship against the Sooners. Missouri's Jon Sundvold hit his first six shots pacing the Tigers to a 68-63 win Saturday night.

Big Eight player-of-the-year Ricky Frazier, Missouri forward, cuts down one of the nets after the championship game of the Big Eight tournment in Kansas City's Kemper Arena.

Good outside shooting led to an early Ricky Frazier's 12-foot jumper in the lane put Missouri up 12-7.

Pianist to perform tonight in solo recital

By SHERRY SCHMITT
Collegian Reporter

Pianist Alan Marks said he said one of his goals is to perform good music as well as possible for a listening and concentrating audience.

Marks will perform for the McCain Attraction Series at 8 o'clock tonight in McCain Auditorium. The 28-year-old concert pianist will also be conducting two master classes on campus Tuesday.

Marks' piano background starts early.

"I don't remember, but I am told that at age three I would sit at our piano and pick out nursery rhymes on the keyboard that I had heard on records," he said.

Marks was enrolled in lessons at age five, he said.

"The piano came very easy for me. I was not forced to practice, but at age 13 I was still playing very easy pieces. I had acquired no passion for the piano," he said.

HIS EXPOSURE TO music was very limited, Marks said. Other than listening to his mother play, he did not hear a concert until he was 13.

The first thought Marks entertained about a possible music career came when he was 15 at the Interlochen National Music Camp in Massachusetts.

"There were 1,500 campers and we were having a wonderful time. There was a competition with 110 of us and I was one of the five that won," he said.

Marks suddenly found himself playing with an orchestra.

Isolated with his music until that time, he "felt this incredible connection" surrounded by young musicians who were dedicated to the spirit of the medium, Marks said.

The next year, Marks visited New York and was invited to be a student at Juilliard School, he said.

MARKS RETURNED TO finish high school in St. Louis. He would practice four and five hours a day, and performed his first solo recital at age 16, he said. He also played with the St. Louis Symphony.

The piano dominated more and more of his time, and at 18 Marks went to Juilliard.

He was a scholarship student, studying with Irwin Freundlich, and later with Leon Fleischer and Benjamin Kaplan.

His last year he performed at the Marlboro Festival and Carnegie Hall and upon graduation was invited to perform with the Cincinnati Orchestra.

From 1974 to 1976 Marks held an Affiliate Artist appointment in Los Angeles.

"I played for people who had never heard of a concert. I played in nursing homes, hospitals, prisons and anywhere else there was a piano available," he said.

In 1979 Marks began touring Europe. His main home is now in Berlin, West Germany, although he spends at least four months out of the year in the United States, he said.

The pianist does not have a favorite composer, instead, he said he has favorite pieces. On the program tonight are works by composers Copeland, Beethovan, Chopin and Schumann.

Union gallery highlights stuffed forms, enamel art

By JULIE MAH
Collegian Reporter

Figures everywhere, constantly in motion. A few inactive, but the most in motion. They greet the eye of a person entering the Union Art Gallery.

The figures and wall hangings are the work of Lenore Davis, a self-employed fabric artist and workshop teacher. Davis is presenting her works with those of her husband, Harold Helwig, who is an enamelist.

Davis's work is often life-sized. It is dyed by direct application methods, sewn, stuffed, constructed, or quilted.

Helwig is a director of Vitrearc, a division of the Ceramic Coating Company in Newport, Ky. His enamel work is figurative and employs many enameling techniques such as Limoges and Basse-Taille.

Davis and Helwig presented an art assembly Thursday and conducted a series of workshops sponsored by the Art Department Friday through Sunday.

HELWIG SPOKE ABOUT his work at the art assembly slide show.

"These (slides) are a quick idea, attitude, philosophy of how I respond to things I like," he said. "They are the whole of my self-myth. This is the first time in 20 years I've shown my work in Kansas. Yes, people who live in Kansas can be successful.

"What I sell is my technology, not my art," he said. "I'm not afraid of trying anything as long as it doesn't injure me."

Helwig is a self-taught enamelist and considers all his work functional. He taught basic jewelry techniques for 15 years before going into industry.

DAVIS ALSO HAS a singular approach to her work.

Reclamation: Seminar lists methods to control erosion, revegetate land abused by mining, drilling

By LESLIE FROST
Arts and Entertainment Editor

Surface change, easily visible. Underground alterations, sometimes insidious, sometimes erupting with vastly underrated power. Mining deals with both. So does land rehabilitation.

A symposium on the "Rehabilitation of Mined-Land Disturbances in Western U.S." was held Friday and Saturday in the Flint Hills Room of the Union.

Reclamation of land damaged by mining and drilling is a growing issue, according to Dennis Law, associate professor of landscape architecture and symposium coordinator. It varies from region to region, but generally involves either slope stabilization (erosion control) or revegetation, he said.

The symposium dealt with elements of land reclamation and was geared to the novice, Law said. Sixteen speakers, from K-State and the University of Kansas, presented various angles of the subject.

ABOUT 100 PEOPLE from surrounding states and Wisconsin attended, Law said. A breakdown of those attending included students, professors, landscape architects working for firms, geographers, conservationists and a wildlife biologist.

Tom Lahti, of the Bureau of Land Management in Cheyenne, Wyo., presented a keynote speech Friday morning. Lahti discussed the importance of communication between the federal government and oil and mining companies during operations. He also talked about the need for oil and mining companies to comply with federal laws on federal land activities, according to Law.

Law presented a speech dealing with the planning of land disturbances so they are minimized, he said.

TWO GENERAL METHODS of reducing the impact of disturbances are to take a resource inventory to obtain the environmental concerns and to plan disturbances around sensitive areas, Law said. Three years of research in Wyoming preceded his presentation, he said.

"Some areas are so sensitive they really shouldn't be mined," Law said.

Until 1969, companies were not required to reclaim the land, Law said.

"In the past they've just been given a blank check," he said.

The present administration has not helped the problem by "laying off people who are making sure that laws are being complied with," Law said.

THE GOVERNMENT IS starting to back down from such a stand now, he said.

"Even the oil companies are a little concerned because they are afraid there's going to be a backlash," he said.

Oil companies might have to spend millions to rehabilitate wilderness areas damaged by operations, Law said.

The center of concern is the five "energy states" — Montana, Wyoming, Utah, Colorado and New Mexico, he said.

Abandoned "orphan" mines in southeast Kansas represent this state's problem with the recovery of mined land, Law said.

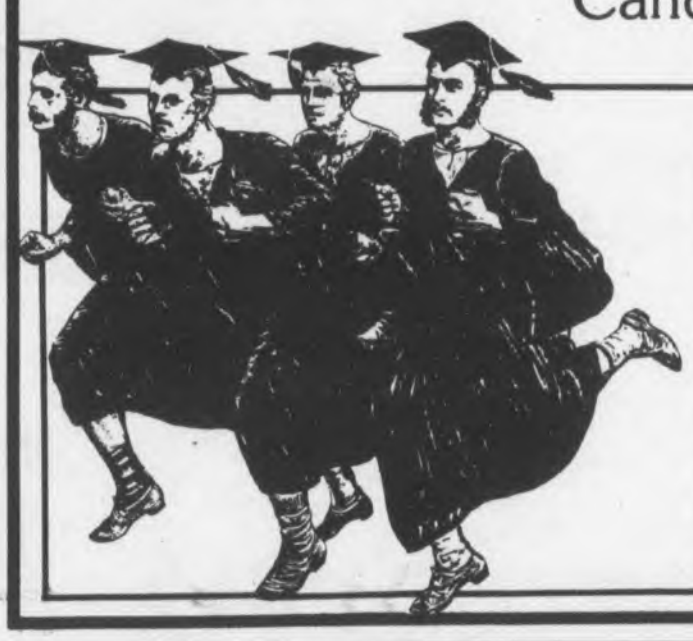
"Nobody is really responsible for them," he said.

Money to rehabilitate the land comes from dollars brought in from new mining ventures. Kansas has few new mining ventures, and thus has a low source of reclamation revenue, according to Law.

ONE OF THE PROBLEMS in southeast Kansas exists where spoils — earth left after coal is removed from the land — contain sulfur which a rainfall turns to sulfuric acid, Law explained. This acidic water gets into the water supply. Heavy metals such as arsenic, lead and cadmium are in some of the water supplies and can also get into the food supply through plants, he said.

Some members of the K-State faculty, in conjunction with some KU faculty members are applying for grants to grow plants on test plots, Law said.

Water coming into contact with underground mines where it picks up the toxic metals and sulfur before returning to the surface is the most serious problem to alleviate, according to Rolfe Mandel, a speaker from KU who discussed abandoned coal mines in Kansas. Thirty miles of Brush Creek have no aquatic life, he said.



"I think it's going to be some time before you see any kind of reclamation..." he said.

Law said he hopes this year's symposium will become an annual event. Cooperation with the agronomy and horticulture departments, as well as a more technical presentation will be planned for next year, he said.

Budget and shop around for life insurance policy

(Editor's note: Consumer Corner is a project of the Consumer Relations Practicum class.)

By KATHY HOLMAN
Contributing Writer

You are finally a senior and graduating from college. The offers are pouring in from salesmen for everything from household goods to credit and yes, even that all important product — life insurance.

Life insurance is a costly investment, yet often a person will sign a policy without taking time to investigate and comparison shop.

Insurance is a cooperative device for sharing risks. It assures your dependents a sum of money in the event of your death. The protection needed and desired varies with each individual. A way to start is by looking at your budget and figuring out what you can afford and how much you value financial security for your family.

THERE ARE THREE main types of insurance: whole life, term and endowment.

Whole life, or cash value insurance, is a permanent insurance that provides protection for your family throughout your life. The premiums remain at a level price throughout the life of the policy. This builds cash values in the early years of coverage when the risk of death is not as high. This value can be borrowed on and if you decide to discontinue the policy, this is the amount you would receive in cash.

Term insurance gives you the greatest amount of protection at the least cost. The policy contract covers a specific period of time, usually 1, 5 or 10 years and is renewable at the end of the term. The premiums are raised whenever the current protection period expires and the policy is renewed.

Recently, there have been several policies introduced that incorporate both cash value and term features for more flexibility. With these policies, the consumer usually has considerable control over the benefits and premium requirements.

Endowment policies are for a specified number of years and allow for accumulation of a certain amount of money. At the end of the period you receive the full amount in cash. If you have died, your beneficiaries receive the money. This type of coverage is the most expensive.

ANOTHER CONSIDERATION when planning your over-all coverage is the type of group insurance or pension plan that may be offered by your employer. These don't require any medical examination and are often obtained at a low cost.

When buying life insurance be sure to shop around, since all policies are not alike and it is important to carefully compare policies and companies. Different companies provide different benefits and charge different prices. It is a good idea to have in mind what you want your insurance to cover. Talk to your agent and strike a balance between what you feel you need and how much your budget can afford. When considering the cost don't just consider the price, but also the agent's service and policy provisions.

Don't be misled by sales pitches of gaining large investments. Life insurance is an investment, but not a money-making plan. Be wary of pressure tactics to buy now or promises of advantages over other policies.

IF YOU ARE interested in a mail order offer, check to be sure the company is licensed and that the plan is approved. Read the policy carefully. The coverage you get will be exactly what you read and sign for.

After you buy your policy, there are some precutions you should take. Make sure you receive your policy within a few weeks and that it is what you paid for.

Cattlemen visit K-State for beef research talks

Upon completion of its 69th year here, Cattlemen's Day is not getting older, it's getting better. In Weber Arena Friday nothing could be seen except cowboy hats on the heads of nearly 1,400 cattlemen from all over the state.

They were here in an attempt to keep abreast on the latest research concerning farming and livestock, according to Don Good, head of the animal science department.

Cattlemen's Day gives faculty and farmers an opportunity to exchange ideas and research information provided by K-State and other institutions which is relevant to modern farmers, Good said.

"There are a lot of cattle in Kansas. It's a business here. Cattlemen's Day gives the farmer or rancher research in a form that is understandable," David Ames, associate professor of animal science, said.

The highlight of the day was the keynote address by Ed Price, of Safeway stores, Englewood, Colo., according to Jack Riley, associate professor of animal science. Price discussed the retailer's viewpoint on merchandizing non-graded beef.

Non-graded beef usually has a higher proportion of lean to fat, compared to the graded beef now consumed that has more fat-to-lean content, according to Price. Consumers are getting more fat under the graded beef cuts and they have to make the choice of either the graded or the non-graded beef, he added.

Farmers and ranchers from all over Kansas with backgrounds in livestock were at the event ready to take the information home and apply it to their operations.

"They have an incredible amount of research available here. It is practical for me to come here. I'm able to make contacts with other farmers, letting them know my operation exists," said Steve Sellers, owner of a small commercial feedlot in Lyons.

"Farmers that come to this event already know most of this information because we live it. But it's good for us as farmers to see the actual facts and figures behind the research," Sellers said.

Good said, "It is our duty and responsibility to provide research or any timely findings as a service to the livestock industry. I think Cattlemen's Day offers that service."

Arts

"My approach is as in drawing and painting," she said. "Except mine are stuffed drawings. I work exclusively with figures. I try to show the spirit, energy and joy they have. They are figures of action. I like to show figures in motion."

Her wall hangings are the result of of a progression of ideas, according to Davis.

"I get my ideas by drawing the figures and the rest comes out of my ear. I spend time drawing figures in motion. They're figurative, allegorical, and there's a good deal of fantasy involved."

Davis and Helwig attend about 10 workshops a year, seldom scheduled together.

ELLIOT PUJOL, associate professor of art, said the workshops have been "very successful."

"We try to get (artists) at last once a year," he said. The workshops expose students to different thoughts, ideas, and techniques and give them contact with the artist. The students can be corrected if they are doing something wrong, he said.

"Many of the artists use materials that you cannot obtain very easily. It makes it (the workshops) a lot easier for students to know where to get it."

Students from Pittsburg, Lawrence, Emporia, Wichita and Marysville, Mo., attended the workshops, Pujol said.

"It was a real good workshop," said Jeanette Bair, senior in metalsmithing from the University of Kansas. "I was interested in new enameling techniques and getting a new point of view than the instructor I have at school. It's a good way to make copper useful. Because it produces an acid, you have to coat it."

"You can design the clothes, then design the fabric to fit the clothes," Alison Funston, sophomore in home economics and apparel design, said. "You're able to design your total look. It was a rare opportunity to work one-on-one with the artist. That's what was great about this whole experience."

When asked what he hoped to impart to the students at the workshop, Helwig replied, "I had very good teachers when I was in school. They excited me, made me feel good about myself. I want other people to feel good about themselves, to believe in themselves, and to understand that they know something."

Judicial

First, a statement of the charges is read and the defendant enters a plea. The plaintiff then presents evidence, calls witnesses and can question the defendant. Next, the defendant presents evidence and witnesses and may question the plaintiff.

After both sides have presented their cases, the board can question either party or the witnesses. The plaintiff and defendant then make closing statements. At the end of the hearing the chairman of the board describes the procedure for the notification of the decision and the appeal procedure.

The board meets privately to come to a decision and to decide on sanctions against the defendant if he is found guilty.

THE BOARDS HAVE the power to make sanctions, such as having the defendant apologize to the people he acted against, writing a report, being counseled or helping to clean the residence, Chilcoat said.

He said the boards can also recommend dismissal from the residence or the University housing system.

The University judicial philosophy states that in handling violations, the students involved in the judicial process should assess violators in terms of individual needs, personalities and circumstances. It says the primary goal of the discipline should be to assist in the student's personal growth. All boards in the judicial system follow this philosophy when applying sanctions, Friel said.

"When we make our decision we must let the student know, in writing, the action to be taken and the reason behind the decision," Clark said. "It has to be given within 24 hours of the hearing."

IF AN APPEAL is desired, the student must make the appeal within two days after the hearing to Judicial Council, Friel said.

The Judicial Council decides whether the appeal should come before Tribunal, the appellate court.

A new type of living group judicial board was formed this semester by the Kansas State University Association of Residence Halls (KSUARH).

The KSUARH Judicial Council "will have jurisdiction limited to complaints involving hall residents committing violations outside of the hall in which they reside," Chilcoat, chairman of the council, said.

Chilcoat said the council deals only with cases involving students of different residence halls or the two University cooperative houses. He said the council was formed because there was often disagreement in the past over which hall's judicial board had the right to try such cases.

The council has 12 members, the chairmen of each hall judicial board. One of the 12 is chosen to be chairman for a semester. An adviser is chosen by the officers of KSUARH.

Complaints of violations must be submitted in writing to the council chairman and the adviser, Chilcoat said. Any hall resident or staff member can file a complaint.

Students must be notified in writing that charges have been filed against them within two weeks of the filing, Chilcoat said. The student is also given a notification of hearing and two days to prepare a defense.

These hearings are closed and follow the same procedures as the hall board hearings.

A summary of each hearing is distributed to all the halls, Chilcoat said.

Faculty

"We see students with a B.S. in engineering get higher salaries (in industry) than we can hire new Ph.D.s," Cliff Meloan, professor of chemistry, said.

Spooner said, "The faculty's not a bunch of idiots. It won't last forever."

Klabunde said industry concentrates on hiring faculty because it needs highly trained people.

"And faculty are as trained as you can get," he added.

Meloan suggests that K-State is more technically-oriented than other Kansas institutions, and therefore is providing technical industry with more prospective employees than other schools.

BESIDES SALARY, faculty compensation also consists of fringe benefits.

Standard fringe benefits totaled 14.41 percent of salary in 1980-81, according to the subcommittee study.

While this percentage has remained relatively level over the past four years, the average fringe benefit percentage at peer institutions was 23.27 percent in 1980-81.

Compared with Big Ten schools and Big Eight schools, the difference runs as high as 27 percent.

One fringe benefit offered by some schools is the use of a sports complex free or at low cost.

"We pay through the nose to use those facilities (Recreational Complex)," Spooner said.

The cost is roughly $50 per year, he said. If use of facilities at Ahearn is desired, then the cost is more.

'The level (of university pay) wasn't comparable to other professions and was losing pace. I couldn't afford to stay.'

"It's not so much that the amount of money will drive me into the poor house, but it is an attitude thing," he said. "The facility will be open whether I go in or not.

"What would it cost the state to have it as a fringe benefit? The faculty would be fitter and therefore more productive," he said."

FACULTY COMPENSATION aside, the total picture of the K-State teaching environment is still not attractive. Many faculty think facility conditions and technical equipment are inadequate.

"The facilities (Calvin Hall) are crummy, shabby, deteriorating, dirty; the housekeeping is atrocious, many rooms are not air-conditioned, the heaters make so much noise they interrupt classes...," Ruch said.

"It's hard to talk about first-quality education for students (with these conditions)," he said.

In fact, some prospective faculty members are so "turned off" by the building's conditions they decide not to take the position, he said.

Attracting faculty is a problem, but according to Danen, some departments at K-State cannot attract as many top-quality students as in previous years.

"Potential students (chemistry majors) shop around these days," Danen said. When they see the conditions they will be studying and working under, it's a major black mark against the University, he said.

K-State is no longer competitive," he said. "It's getting harder and harder to get good students."

Willard Hall is supposed to be the next building to be replaced, Danen said, "But we've been pushing for one for 15 years."

The building is unsafe because of inadequate ventilation, he said.

"There's not even enough money to keep water out of the buildings," Danen said. "Man has been building roofs for centuries — K-State can't make one that doesn't leak.

"The general upkeep of the building is embarrassing," he continued. "I'm not asking for Cadillac quality, but at least what is available and (money to) maintain it."

'K-State is no longer competitive. It's getting harder and harder to get good students.'

"CADILLAC QUALITY" IS far from what the chemistry department has.

The equipment in many labs is one generation behind and in some labs, two generations behind, Meloan said.

"If it wasn't for research grants, we'd be wiped out," he said.

Maintaining equipment is also a problem.

"(We have) about $2 million worth of equipment with only one man to repair it," Meloan said.

"We've been begging for repairmen to keep up the equipment for years," Danen said.

The Other Operating Expenses budget set by the Kansas legislature is increasing 6 to 7 percent a year, Danen said, and is not keeping pace with inflation.

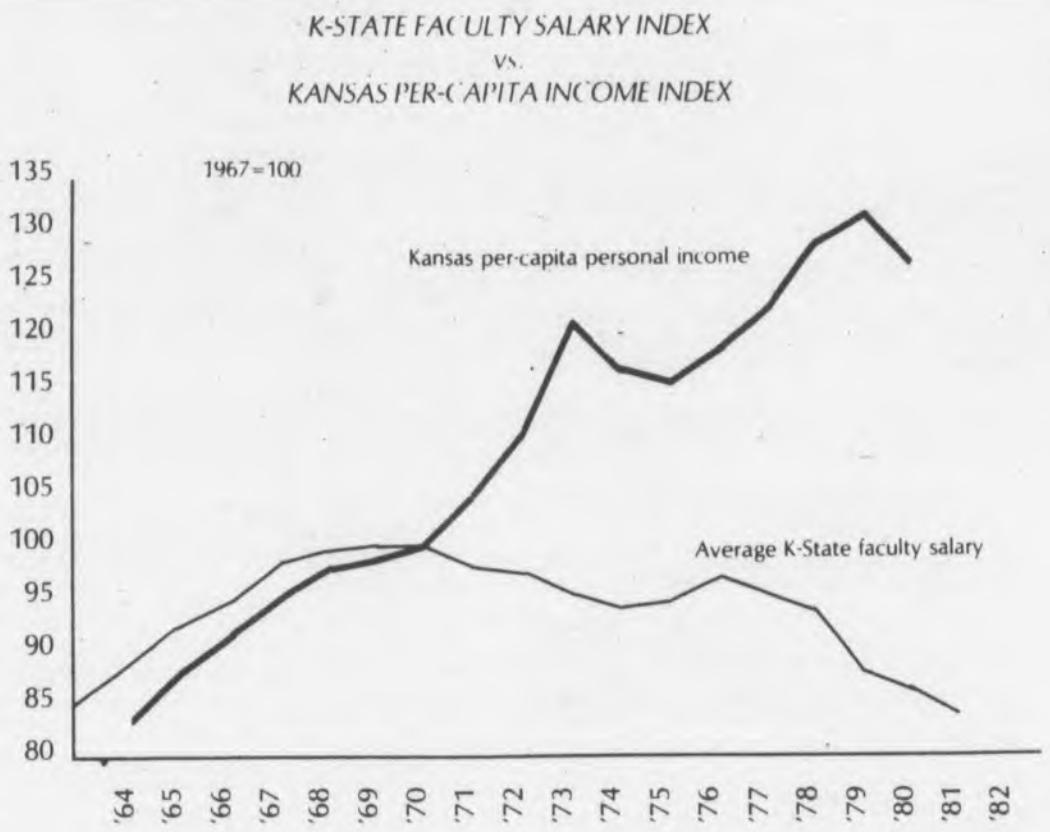
"Chemicals have gone up 20, 30, 50 percent each year," he said. "Catalogs don't even put price lists in anymore. They just send an updated price list every six months they change so often."

"We can't even get an overhead transparency," Corbin said. It happens "year in and year out" he said, but yet "we keep thinking that maybe this year...."

Rounding out the list of reasons some professors are fleeing Kansas institutions is heavier workloads. Failure to replace vacated positions often increases class sizes for remaining instructors, Meloan explained.

The problem could be solved by hiring a replacement, but the procedure is difficult.

Before fiscal year 1980, the University was allotted faculty positions according to enrollment projections made by the Board of Regents. Continually low projections resulted in a shortage of faculty positions.



The board initiated changes in the faculty allotment policy during fiscal year 1980, Tom Rawson, research officer for the board, said.

'(We have) about $2 million worth of equipment with only one man to repair it.'

THIS NEW APPROACH uses a dollar allocation system instead of faculty numbers, Rawson said. It also evaluates enrollment for the entire academic year instead of only fall semesters, bases increases on previous enrollment instead of projections, and considers the differences in costs of teaching various disciplines.

The Kansas Legislature added a "corridor" system approach to this proposal which would insist the University absorb some extra enrollment without creating new positions. However, if enrollment is slightly down it would not be forced to give up positions.

The governor did not sign the proposal, but if approved by the Legislature, it would result in meeting University needs more precisely, Rawson said.

Index values based on average K-State faculty salary data for academic years 63-64 through 79-80 and Kansas per-capita personal income data for calendar years 64 through 79 in constant dollars.

Low morale:

Facilities, increasing enrollment endanger reputation for providing 'personal touch'

Editor's note: This is the second in a three-part series.

By CHARLENE FARRELL
Staff Writer

When Jeanie Johnson was having problems in her chemistry class last semester, she went to the "help room." But because of the number of students attending, she left with questions still unanswered.

Her instructor did not post office hours and the class "help sessions" conflicted with her schedule.

"Finally I had to find a senior chemistry student to give me help," Johnson, sophomore in agricultural journalism, said. "I wanted the help, but it was just hard to get."

This is not the only way quality of education is being affected by the loss of University faculty, nor is this an isolated case of the frustration some students are feeling.

"There's been three decades of steady increase (in enrollment)," said Richard Ruch, assistant dean of the College of Business Administration. "Classes are getting larger and larger. We're having to say 'no' to students."

STUDENTS WHO FACE this closed door are obviously being denied the education they desire, but some students are being denied the quality of education they deserve.

Jerry Weis, associate professor of biology, remembers when enrollment in one of his courses was about 25 — now it is 200. Techniques used to teach the course are "not as good now" as they were then, he said. Students get less individual attention, and the objective tests administered are not the best method to test knowledge, he said.

One of the first teaching tools eliminated when finances are low at a university are the "graders" who grade subjective tests, Cliff Meloan, professor of chemistry, explained. "So we had to change to the type of tests that were more multiple choice," he said.

SOME DEPARTMENTS have been forced to stop offering classes or offer them alternating semesters.

"It's frustrating when you have to postpone graduation because a required class is only offered in the fall," said one student.

Graduate programs are another victim of the shortage.

"We've stopped offering some grad courses to free faculty for the time to teach the undergraduate courses. More classes are closing and more will in the future," said Kenneth Klabunde, head of the Department of Chemistry.

"We're only giving students the bare minimum. The students are ultimately being cheated on their degree," Ruch said.

Top-quality education is the priority of most University faculty, but not having resources to maintain this standard proves frustrating.

INADEQUATE FUNDS to repair and replace equipment will be detrimental to graduates, Meloan said.

"An employer has the right to expect them (graduates) to know the basics of modern instrumentation," he said.

A decline in faculty quality is another price some departments are paying.

Many of the 138 faculty who left K-State in 1979-81 were senior faculty — some top in their research field. The trend continues:

Gas prices may drop to 95 cents

By TANYA BRANSON
Staff Writer

The ever-hungry car which turns dollar bills to engine feed may not be taking such a big bite soon.

An oversupply of petroleum has temporarily lowered gas prices, according to Dave Dreyden, senior public relations representative of Phillips 66. Just how long gas will be cheaper is unknown, Dreyden said, but "we are fairly certain prices will be higher over the next five or 10 years."

For now, Manhattan residents can expect gas prices to fall to 95 cents in the next couple of weeks, Clayton Umscheid, manager of Clay's Mobil Service, said.

"We had a 2-cent rollback today and another two cents tommorrow. I look for it to get around 95 cents to $1.05, but there is no way I can tell where it's going," Umscheid said.

JERRY ROBERTS, owner of Jerry's 66 Service, foresees gas prices lowering at least another 5 cents, if not more. "I definitely think prices are lowering. I've lowered prices three times lately," Roberts said, adding that the price decreases will continue for a month or so.

Currently, prices surveyed at nine service stations in Manhattan range from $1.13.9 for regular at Shop-Quik, an independent self-service station, to $1.25.8 for regular at at Clay's Mobil Service. Price figures quoted are for self-service gas only.

Prices have taken a bigger drop in Kansas City and Oklahoma. The American Auto Club of Kansas City, Mo., reported regular selling for 98 cents a gallon, according to Georgianne Guerber, travel counselor. In Oklahoma City, one station even dropped to 88.9 cents and the average in Tulsa is 99 cents, Dreyden said.

GAS IS CHEAPER because of several occurrences in the petroleum market during the last couple of years, Dreyden said.

In 1979, gas was in short supply, U.S. crude oil production was falling and the United States was importing 50 percent of its oil, he said. The Iranian war with Iraq added to the short supply of crude oil because both countries stopped producing. "In short, prices went up," Dreyden said.

Although President Reagan deregulated prices last January which caused an increase, other factors have resulted in a price drop for petroleum. Drilling and production is up in the United States, Iran and Iraq have resumed oil production, and consumers are conserving gas, he said.

Petroleum prices are falling in the world market with British oil production cutting prices $4 a barrel and Libya cutting prices $5 a barrel, Dreyden said. But already action to cut back on production to level off prices is in the process. Saudia Arabia announced Sunday that it would cut production and is talking of even bigger cuts.

Although cheaper gas is on the market now, petroleum prices will not stay down. Long-term predictions for gas signal a price increase because of rising drilling and refining costs, he said.

"It's hard to say what's going on now, but in the long term, prices are going up," Dreyden said.

Citizens don't hear full Salvador story: author

By SHERRY SCHMITT
Collegian Reporter

After 20 years of living in Latin American, Penny Lernoux, reporter, claims nothing is ever the black and white that it appears to be. The complexities in Latin America are very difficult, but all of the facts are not being heard, she said.

Lernoux delivered an All-University Convocation and lecture Monday at McCain Auditorium. Lernoux spoke on her book, "Cry of the People: The Struggle for Human Rights in Latin America."

Since 1850 there have been 69 cases of US military intervention in Latin America. Many of these interventions were to prevent or put down a popular uprising, Lernoux said. Although the Reagan administration doesn't recognize it, there is another alternative to sending United States troops to El Salvador, she said.

THE ALTERNATIVE is to negotiate a political settlement including all of those involved in the civil war of El Salvador.

France and Mexico support such an initiative and Canada and Brazil would welcome the initiative also but, Lernoux said, the Reagan administration refuses to recognize it.

If such an alternative were used, Lernoux said she sees two advantages. First, the killings would halt, and secondly, it might help insure that the government that emerges in El Salvador is not hard Marxist.

The Reagan administration has ignored the profound changes since the cold war of the 1950s, according to Lernoux. In failing to recognize that Latin American has changed and become more complex in the last two decades, "the Reagan administration has painted itself into a corner with tragic results," she said.

THE LONGER THE WAR in El Salvador continues, the greater the possibility for a guerilla victory, Lernoux said.

"With the exception of a few upperclass hotheads, most people who seek changes prefer a nonviolent method," she said.

"One would think that Washington would have learned by now that they won't win the hearts of the people of El Salvador by slaughtering their children. Sending troops is a difficult political decision. The US-European allies would not support this intervention," Lernoux said.

Coverage of the El Salvador issue is being oversimplified — the black and white view that one sees appears to be taken on by reporters and the press, she said.

"Editors cite lack of space or air time as a reason for not explaining these complexities, but I think there is another reason, and that's that we communicators don't listen."

THIS TYPE of coverage of foreign affairs originates by reporting what is superficial and in black and white, and eliminating investigation, she said.

Digging up facts in Latin America is easier than finding them in the US, according to Lernoux, "because there is no one to expose them. There are gold nuggets laying all over but no one is bothering to pick them up.

"I suggest that we drop the politics, and

Reagan aide predicts budget compromise

WASHINGTON — President Reagan returned to the White House on Monday after a week away from Washington, and a top aide said he would be flexible in negotiations with Congress to revise his proposed budget and cut the expected record deficit.

In contrast to Reagan's sharp remarks last week about congressional budget critics, presidential counselor Edwin Meese III said Reagan is "pretty flexible on most everything except the two fundamental areas, taxes and defense."

But speaking with reporters on Air Force One on the flight from California, Meese did not close the door on cuts in the Pentagon build-up and other areas.

"What's a compromise?" Meese asked rhetorically. "Everybody knows that the final budget that is signed will not be the same budget, item for item, that he submitted."

Reagan will visit Capitol Hill today to talk with Senate Republican leaders, who are drafting alternatives in hopes of cutting the deficit.

Democrats to unveil reapportionment plan

TOPEKA — The Legislature's latest battle over how to decast boundaries of the state's five congressional districts unfolds today on the floor of the Kansas Senate. But this time with a different twist.

Instead of a Republican-supported proposal as the subject of debate, it will be a plan drawn by Democrats, who have hold only 16 seats in the 40-member chamber.

But Republican strategy does not include passage of the minority plan.

In fact, the Senate GOP has its amendment — a whole different reapportionment plan — ready and waiting to substitute for the bill sponsored by Senate Minority Leader Jack Steineger, (D-Kansas City, Kan.)

Once debate begins Tuesday afternoon, Sen. Dan Thiessen (R- Independence), will propose the Republican amendment as a new plan for equalizing populations in the five districts.

It will shift only three counties into new districts and parts of two others, moving a total of 109,681 people from their existing district into another one.

"We're going to run and we'll amend it," said Thiessen, chairman of the Senate Apportionment Committee. "It will really be substituting one bill for another."

Scientists refute doomsday predictions

Because of a book called "The Jupiter Effect," which predicted eight years ago that the alignment of the solar system on Wednesday would trigger a worldwide wave of earthquakes, people are suddenly preoccupied with planets.

Scientists said the authors were wrong about every point. But planetarium attendance is up and their switchboards are busy.

On Wednesday, all the planets will line up on the same side of the sun and come the closest to each other for the first time since 949 A.D.

The planets are forming themselves into a group within a 90-degree angle. Wednesday marks the closest they will be for the next 510 years. On that day, if the sun were at the center of a giant clock, Neptune would be at about 12 and the Earth at about 3:15, with the others scattered in between.

"The Jupiter Effect" contended that the combined gravitational forces of the nine aligned planets would spark extraordinary solar activity that would send a flood of charged particles racing toward Earth, throwing the planet's rotation off and agitating already unstable geologic regions.

The theory that doomsday would arrive on March 10, 1982, was rejected as lousy science by serious scientists everywhere immediately following the 1974 publication of "The Jupiter Effect."

Senate panel endorses stiffer DWI penalties

TOPEKA — Stiffer penalties for drunken drivers was endorsed Monday by the Senate Judiciary Committee.

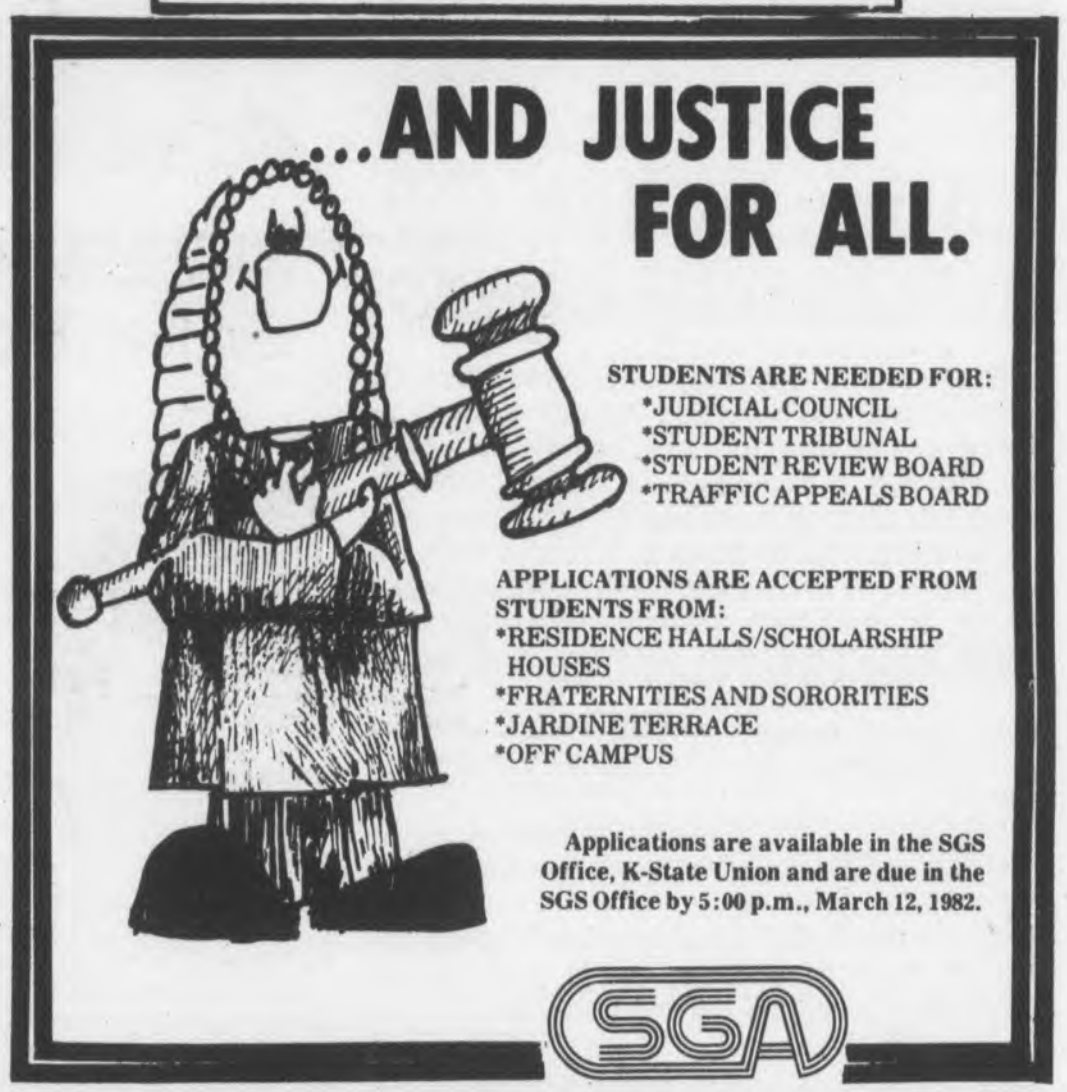
The bill prohibits any plea bargaining to a lesser offense, increases the fines and in most cases requires minimum jail sentences.

For a first offense, the judge can waive a jail sentence but the person would have to pay a $300 to $500 fine. He also would be required to attend a staterun alcohol and drug abuse program.

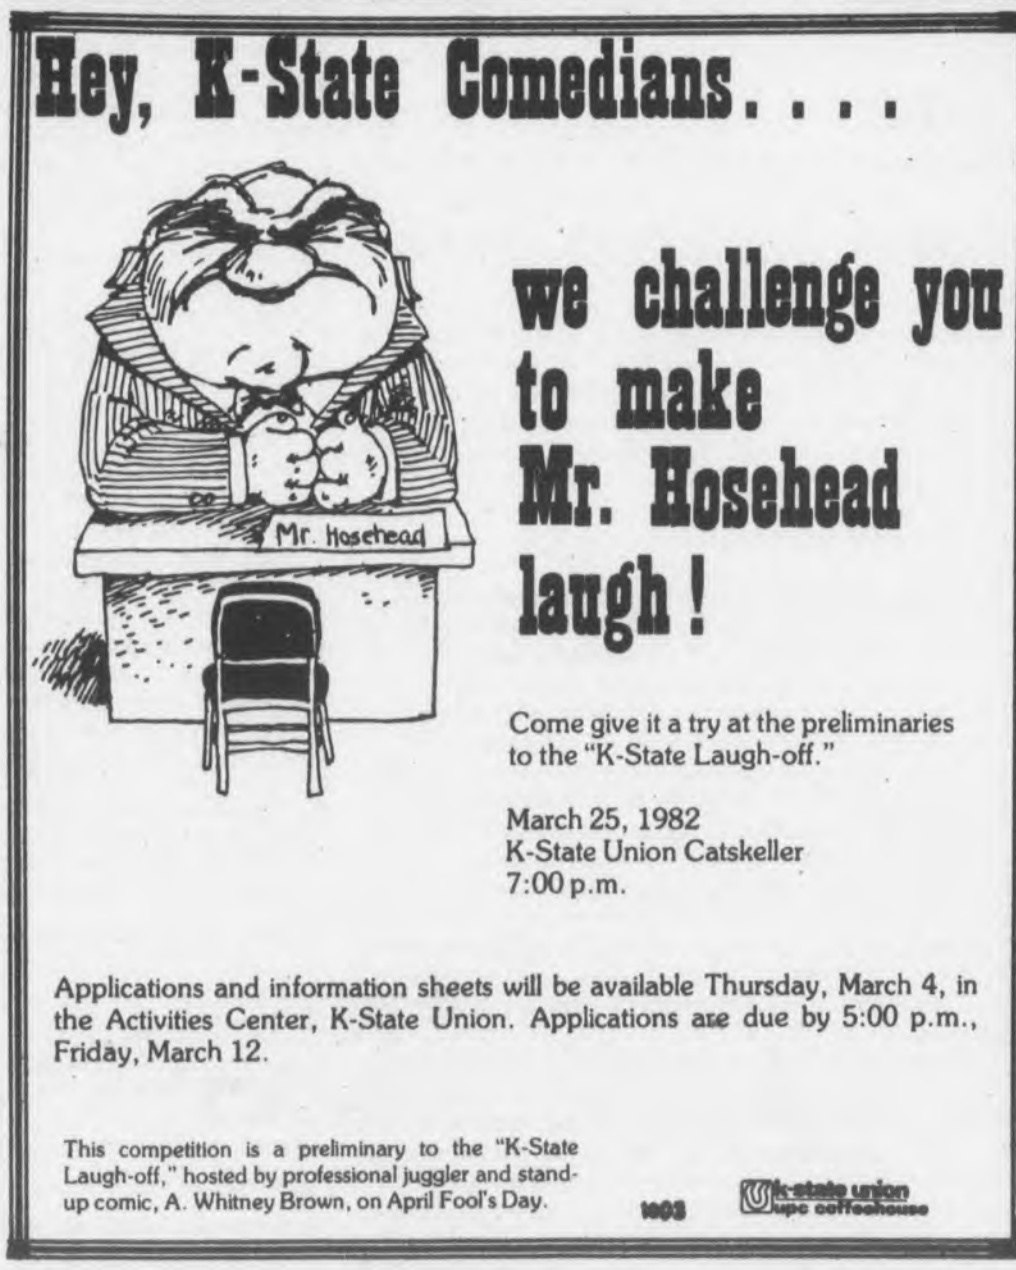
A second offense carries a fine of $500 to $1,000 and a minimum five day jail sentence. The third offense carries a $1,000 to $2,500 fine and a 90-day jail sentence.

There is a a fine of $500 or less for the second and all subsequent DWI convictions in the present law.

An amendment was made to allow plea bargaining, but failed on a tie 4-4 vote.



"The problem today is we have too much (plea bargaining)," said Sen. Bud Burke (R-Leawood), who opposed the amendment.



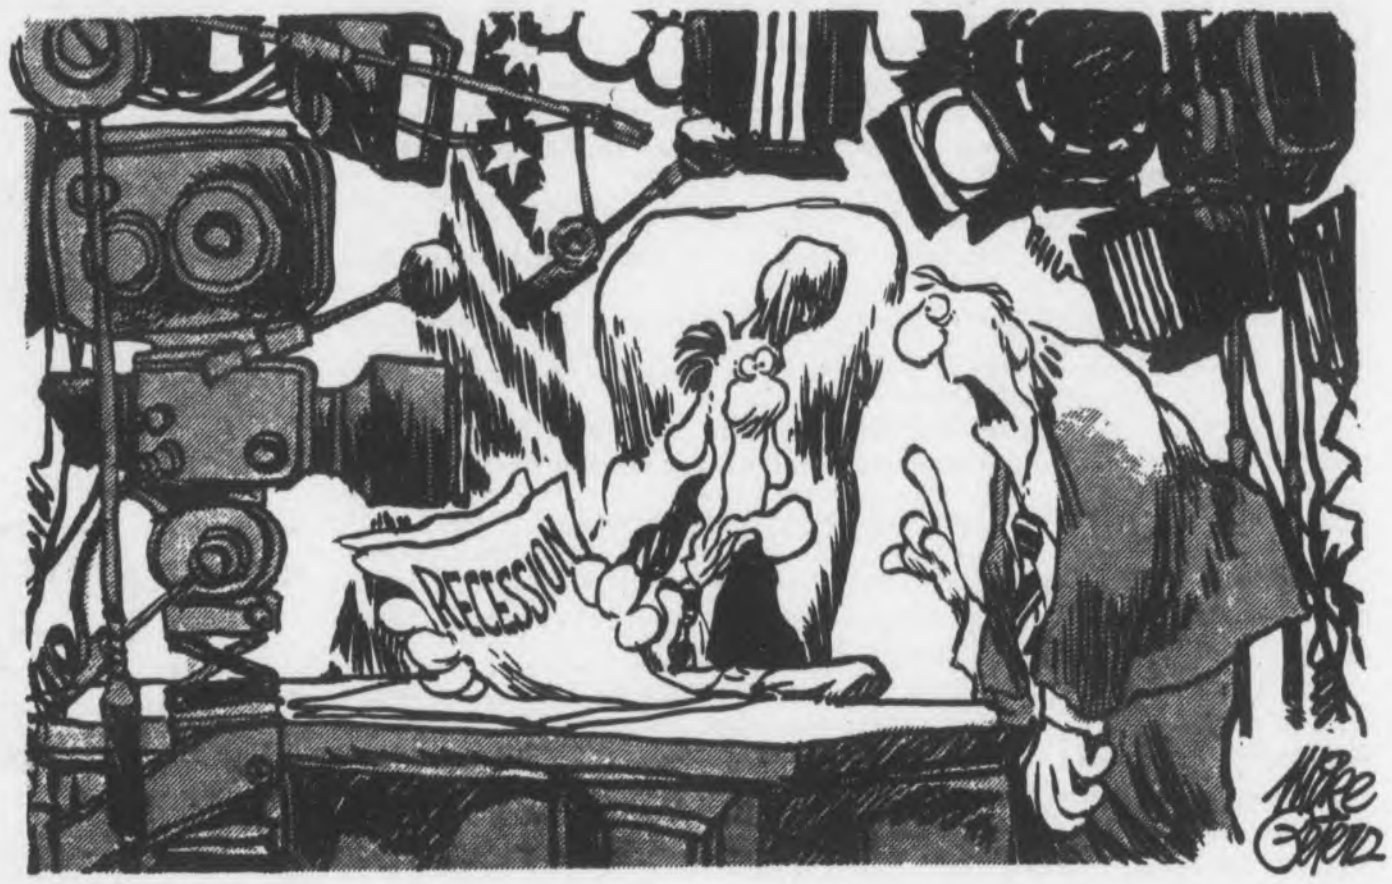
Stiffer penalties for first time offenders, including the required alcohol abuse courses were added.

Weather

Today will be partly cloudy and windy with a high in the low 50s. The low tonight will be 30 to 35. Wednesday's high will be in the mid- to upper 60s.

Stalling tactics alter basketball

The highlight of the sporting year is about to occur, with the beginning of the National Collegiate Athletic Association basketball tournament.



The tournament is one of the finest sporting events of the day, but this year's is sure to be a little different, and probably slower-paced.

The increasing popularity of the stall-type offense has sometimes made the game unrecognizable.

In the last 10 years, the average total scores of college basketball games has fallen 21 points, from 150 to 129.

Does this mean that in about 50 years we will see college basketball games decided by scores of 2-1 or 3-2?

Lifting of ban defeats objectives

State governments may have to take over the Environmental Protection Agency as well as the programs Reagan's new federalism puts up for adoption. It appears to be straying from its designated title and concurrent objectives.

The EPA's recent decision to temporarily lift its ban on the dumping of hazardous liquid wastes in landfills has caused an uproar, and rightfully so. The risks inherent in dumping have been recognized and the move toward more lenient restrictions only serves to cloud the true goals of the EPA and its administration.

Due to the ardent outcries, a hearing on the decision will be held next week to allow public input on the decision.

If such efforts fail then individual states must act in their own protection to prevent the adverse effects such a move would have.

Coke, it's the real thing. Coke is it.

These successful advertising campaign slogans have often been related to another popular form of sensual satisfaction, snorting cocaine. This drug of the '80s, the spirit-lifting substance that can make a jerk Mr. Popularity in 10 seconds, has won acceptance among all classes and yet, it could also prove to be the hoax of the century.

Its deceptive appearance has added to its appeal among upper-class participants. The clean synthetic granules require little preparation beyond a simple cutting and division. Snorting cocaine is smokeless, smell-less and chic. Storing one's decorative razor blade and mirror takes half the time of washing bongs or cleaning pipes. It carries none of the caricatures associated with the marijuana smoking hoodlum, the Valium popping neurotic housewife or the heroin shooting rock star. Cocaine pours across all barriers.

ITS IMAGE as the classic high contributes to its popularity among those individuals living on a budget. With stringent cuts on guaranteed student loans, some may have to abstain.

This frightening fact would have to occur just after the good news was announced in a Washington Post article — research shows that "recreational use of cocaine is no more habit-forming or threatening to health than are small doses of alcohol and tobacco."

A six-year study at the Yale University School of Medicine has substantiated this fact. For the past six years, thirty cocaine users, presumably human, and approximately thirty monkeys have been sitting in a lab with gold chains around their necks, Kleenex's in hand, passing empty Bic ball-point pens between each other, snorting cocaine off of headshop mirrors.

SUCH A STUDY occuring at the K-State Vet School, using cows and sheep of course, would see an astounding increase in enrollment and subsequent volunteerism for research "guinea pigs." But then, what grant would cover enough cocaine to fill a cow nostril?

The reported harmless effects of "recreational" cocaine usage is one of the lesser points of interest shown in this study by Dr. Craig Van Dyke and Dr. Robert Byck. For those readers who have scrimped for weeks on food, alcohol and other recreational budgets to indulge in recreational exercising of the nose, you'd better sit down.

The good doctors report that cocaine has such a fleeting and mild effect that most "recreational" users cannot tell the difference between cocaine and other drugs such as lidocaine (Xylocaine), procaine (Novocaine) and even PLACEBOS like sugar and talc which resemble cocaine.

JUST THINK of all the money and time spent calling, searching and finally obtaining a drug which could be substituted with Johnson's Baby Powder or some good ole' Hawaiian cane and an effective imagination.

Perhaps this effect is a result of human evolution. Like the cockroaches that grow immune to certain pesticides, human usage of cocaine that is cut with 99 to 30 percent sugar or powder have evolved to where the fillers are more effective than the original drug. It appears that cocaine dealers have known for years what science is just now documenting.

O.K. Enough of the good news, here's the bad information. (After all, this is a newspaper.)

The good doctors decided that snorting cocaine is neither addictive nor harmful. Coke heads can use the same amount daily, if it's affordable, and they will not develop a tolerance to the so-called drug. However, if cocaine is injected or free-based it is extremely addictive or "enslaving."

It seems the drug world and the grocery stores have it in for each other. Which will benefit the most from this informational advance in the world of science? The day when Tupper-Ware containers have pad-locks and mothers start dealing talcum powder out of baby carriages on street corners may not be far off.

Letters

Assets outweigh issue

Editor,

In a recent article it was remarked that the Univeryity Grievance Committee had overruled a decision by our department head not to allow the transfer of a student from one class to another. The reason for requesting the transfer was the student's inability to understand the instructor's English. I wish to make a few comments.

First, why was the transfer not requested earlier? The instructor's command of English certainly didn't change suddenly.

Secondly, Professor Hsu is one of the hardest working instructors we have. He always has his work prepared, he welcomes class discussion, he writes clearly on the blackboard and he is always ready and willing to help students with their mathematics problems outside of class.

Finally, I wish to disagree with the language difficulty part. I admit there is some accent, but Professor Hsu has been in this country for many years. In his first semester at K-State in the fall of 1965, Professor Hsu had my son in one of his classes. I asked my son about any language barrier. He told me, frankly, that he had a slight difficulty the first week or so, but the problem disappeared. He also said that Professor Hsu had his lessons thoroughly prepared, that he wrote a lot on the blackboard and his writing was very legible. I wish that all of our teachers were as capable and dedicated.

One more item — there was a letter to the Collegian in which a student implies that K-State is "backward" because we don't do the job of screening which KU does. Why didn't the person research the matter before writing? For many years now incoming foreign graduate student teachers have had to pass an oral English proficiency classroom test in front of typical students.

Greek councils provide communication forum

By DEE ANNE HEADLEY
Collegian Reporter

Although their main function is not judicial, Interfraternity Council (IFC) and Panhellenic Council serve as disciplinary organizations with combined jurisdiction over all the greek chapters at K-State.

"The primary function of both IFC and Panhellenic Council is coordination and communication of the greek houses," Barb Robel, adviser for greek affairs, said.

The councils are forums for exchanging information about campus and greek activities and talking about problems between the chapters, she said.

"Fraternities and sororities exist on campus under the sanction of IFC, Panhellenic Council and the Council on Student Affairs," Robel said. "They (IFC and Panhellenic Council) have the right to suspend a chapter's charter. That's the absolute sanction that could be imposed."

THE COUNCILS HANDLE two or three cases a year and they usually deal with lesser infractions, she said.

The structure and methods of the two councils are similar. IFC is made up of a five-member Board of Directors and 26 presidents of all the fraternities.

The board includes the president, vice president, secretary, treasurer and director of public relations. These officers apply for their positions and are chosen by IFC.

The group of fraternity presidents is called the Council of Presidents and each member has one vote in IFC. Members of the Board of Directors have no vote.

Panhellenic Council is made up of a five-member Executive Council and a junior and senior representative from each of the 12 sororities.

The Executive Council consists of the president, vice president, secretary, rush coordinator and publications editor. As in IFC, these officers also apply for their positions, are chosen by Panhellenic Council and have no vote.

"The representatives are elected or appointed by their houses," said Susie Hines, president of Panhellenic Council and senior in accounting. "The difference between the junior and senior representatives are their administrative duties."

THE SENIOR representatives take care of paperwork involved with Panhellenic Council and the junior representatives handle rush week activities, she said.

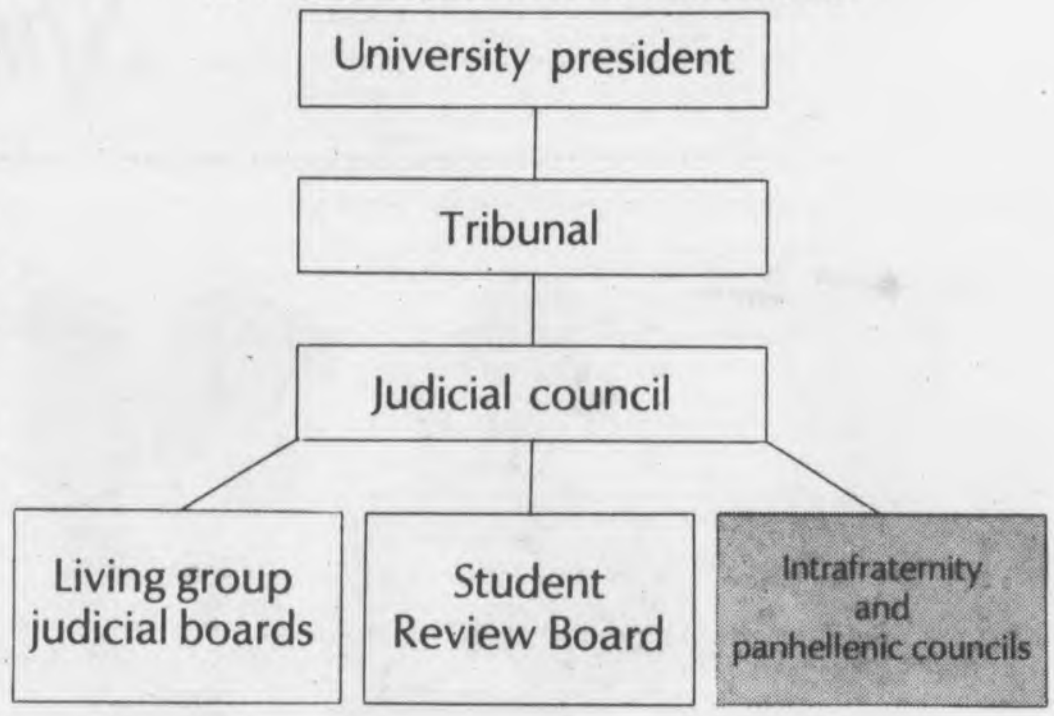
Hines said that both councils handle complaints and rule infractions mostly on a chapter basis. For instance, if a house broke rules for rushing new members, the case would go before IFC or Panhellenic Council.

"The only time something is done on an individual basis is if it is done on behalf of a chapter," Hines said.

Dennis Tucker, IFC president and senior in milling science and management, said, "In the case of a judicial matter, we call in the officers of the chapter involved, in addition to the chapter adviser or the alumni president (president of the chapter's Alumni Association Board) and any other people who are personally involved. We discuss the problem with them, the possible solutions and their feelings on the matter."

AFTER THIS MEETING, Tucker said the Board of Directors meets without the Council of Presidents and decides what needs to be done.

If the board decides that action should be taken against the chapter, it brings the case up before the Council of Presidents. A motion is then made on what is thought to be a reasonable action. The motion is discussed and voted on.



Hines said Panhellenic Council follows the same procedure in judiciary matters.

"We try to work things out (informally) with the chapter when an infraction of rules or a complaint is made (without going though the judiciary process)," Tucker said. "We want to find out all the facts and be as fair as possible."

Hines said, "The policy we try to follow is to try to work problems out between the sororities and in the past that has woked just fine."

IFC and Panhellenic Council meet twice a month, rotating their meeting places among the fraternity and sorority houses. Their meetings are open.

In a day's work... Monte McGinnis, freshman in journalism and mass communications, is one of 65 intramural basketball referees who watch over games daily at the Washburn Recreation Complex.

Mental, physical vigor aid intramural officials

By MACK McCLURE
Collegian Reporter

"I don't get no respect." Comedian Rodney Dangerfield may have had intramural officials in mind when he coined that phrase.

And for the 63 men and two women who tote whistles at the Washburn Recreation Complex, ridicule is an everyday occurrence.

The individuals who encounter the negative reactions are intramural basketball officials.

Steve Martini, intramural director, said he believes that in general, the officials do an excellent job. "I think they're doing a fine job for various reasons."

The conditions fluctuate, and the athletes display different levels of ability and competitiveness, making the officials' job more difficult, he said.

"After I've made a call, I've had players look at me like I crawled out from under a rock," said Monte McGinnis, sophomore in general and a first-year intramural official.

McGINNIS, ALSO IN his first year as a Kansas State High School Athletic Association official, takes the players' abuse in stride. "I've tried to develop a thicker skin about it," he said.

Kathy Davis, junior in elementary educaton, said she is a very tolerant official.

"I haven't called a technical foul all season. The first two weeks I was really intimidated by the players so I went in and talked to Scott Osborn, (supervisor of officials). He gave me advice and from that, I picked up my confidence."

"Sometimes players forget that we are people," said Tammy Fitzmaurice, freshman in business and a first-year referee. "They forget that we're not Big Eight refs. We do make mistakes, we're human."

Osborn said persons who have never refereed before do not know what it is like being one. "That attitude carries over to intramurals," he said.

Officials

"We place the officials as gods. We forget they're human. We try not to allow them to make any mistakes, they've got to be perfect," Osborn said. "They (the officials) have to get something out of it or they won't stay with it."

TRAINING TO BECOME an intramural referee seems to be relatively limited. "We go to two or three clinics before the season starts. We also familiarize ourselves with the rule book," said Jon Carlson, a veteran intramural official and a fifth-year student in construction science.

McGinnis named his reasons for being an intramural referee. "You make a little money, do a little running on the side and get in shape."

Fitzmaurice referees mainly for enjoyment. "It's good exercise and I get to meet people. Besides that, we do get paid."

Mitch Castor, freshman in accounting, said he enjoys officiating because he likes "to get in the flow and amidst the action."

"Not everyone can be an official," said Darrell Holaday, senior in agricultural economics. "You have to have a little bit of an ego that you're gonna be right."

HOLADAY ADDED THAT an official must be strong enough, emotionally and mentally to stand by his call with no exceptions. "Every official has to enjoy being put on the spot, because if you don't, you'll have to get out."

Osborn said he believes that "it takes a special breed of a person to officiate." An official should not let his emotions dictate what he calls, he said. "It's one of the best learning experiences you can have in your life."

Baseballers sweep Cavaliers

The temperature was in the low 30's, but K-State's bats were hot Monday afternoon as the Wildcat baseball team swept St. Mary of the Plains in a doubleheader at Frank Myers Field. The opening game went 10-1 in favor of the 'Cats, and the nightcap was a shutout, 7-0.

K-State's Mark Teague went three of four in the first game, including a triple off the fence in right-center field despite 35-mile-per-hour winds blowing in. Joe Goedert collected a single and a double in K-State's 11-hit total.

Eleven batters paraded to the plate in the fifth, producing seven runs. Mickey Fleeman allowed only two hits, and struck out eight Cavalier batters. St. Mary's lone run was unearned.

In the second game, Mark Gomez of the Wildcats, fired an impressive two-hit shutout. At one point in the contest, Gomez struck out five of the six batters he faced. He totaled eight for the game.

K-State's Scott Pick singled and doubled in three trips to the plate. Teague singled and doubled in four at bats, while Jeff French recorded two stolen bases. French had three stolen bases for the afternoon.

The 'Cats will rest today and host Benedictine College Wednesday in another doubleheader, beginning at 1:30 p.m.

Vet students discuss possible change

(Editor's note: This first of a two-part story regarding reactions to possible curriculum changes in the Collge of Veterinary Medicine is reported from the perspective of some veterinary medicine students. Wednesday's article will present faculty members' persectives regarding the considered changes.)

By MIKE FITZGERALD
Agriculture Editor

One month ago today the College of Veterinary Medicine freshman class met to discuss what has since developed into the college's hottest issue in years.

One result of the meeting was a freshman class letter to the veterinary medicine college's Curriculum Committee and faculty which made known their views and worries regarding curriculum changes currently under consideration.

The Curriculum Committee consists of seven faculty members, each representing a department within the college and four non-voting students, one from each class, according to Dr. Jerome Vestweber, committee chairman and associate professor of surgery and medicine.

EACH OF THE student representatives on the committee, following the committee's Feb. 3 meeting, were told to present the matter of curriculum changes being considered to his own class, according to Alan Hallman, freshman class president.

"Our letter was intended to be a united statement to voice our feelings. There were three major concerns we wanted to address. But as much as anything we wanted to know how would it (the proposal) affect us. And if anything was to happen, we wanted to be kept abreast...We wanted to be assured opportunity for our input," Hallman said.

The freshman class letter of Feb. 9 stated the financial ramifications to students if the considered proposal was implemented.

The letter expressed concerns of added expenses to students if a summer session between the junior and senior year wre enacted. It mentions that added costs would result from added summer session fees, summer housing and living expenses.

The letter also addressed loss of earnings because students would be able to work only half of the summer after a proposed session was completed. Additional first- and second-year classes, requiring further study time, would eliminate school session employment opportunities, the letter adds, noting that financial assistance has been reduced under the Reagan administration.

THE LETTER ALSO points to the fact that students signed a contract assuring that they had arranged for financial resources for the current curriculum.

Several potentially negative results of a major change are mentioned in the letter. It claims that to raise the already high stress factor would only serve to increase the attrition rate, and that the current schedule maximizes retention of material and to alter the schedule would result in a loss of class material retention. Also, according to the letter, to alter the clinical experience schedule would reduce its effectiveness because it is at maximum effeciency now.

Evidence of decreasing National Board scores for the first and second classes at universities which have adopted changed curricula is also mentioned in the letter.

"We were pretty riled because we felt we were in the dark," Tom Liebl, freshman in veterinary medicine, said. "We didn't find out until late what was being talked. We weren't sure what they were planning. That's what got us all riled."

Most who were interviewed expressed opinions that tensions and concerns regarding considered changes resulted from the initial way the issue was presented.

ADDITIONAL COURSE requirements for the sophomores, who currently are said to be under high stress, a required summer clinical session between junior and senior years, and increased clinical experience in the fourth year are the issues students said they were concerned about.

Another concern of Liebl's is the possible stress load if additional courses are required in the first two years.

"Sophomores already have a heavy load and added work would cause a lot of stress that might end hurting us in the long run," Liebl said. "The kids are wondering if they could handle it (the stress) or would it be too much to learn and retain.

"My view is that if it's for the best, they (the faculty) can't overlook the fact that only so much school can be done in a given period," he said. "Considering the stacking of classes opens the possibility of creating a weak link. They (K-State faculty) go at a fast rate already — that's a known."

THE CHANGES UNDER consideration are fundamentally a good idea, according to Bill Hessman, freshman in veterinary medicine.

"From what I know of the whole thing, it seems to be basically a good idea. I think we need more clinic time, but it doesn't look like it will be implemented at least not right away," Hessman said.

"One thing I've noticed is that sophomores and upperclassmen are talking less about this than anybody. Probably because they've got their basic sciences and welcome the chance to do clinic work," Hessman added.

Frank Seegraber, sophomore in veterinary medicine, had more to say on the situation than did Linda Johnson, junior in veterinary medicine, or Mark Olson, senior class president.

"I understand the basic theme came from recent vet grads who felt more clinic hours are needed," Seegraber said. "I hope the whole thing will be resolved because it's causing distractions and divisions up here."

"It's just talk," Johnson said. "The talk began last year. There's really nothing to it. It probably wouldn't affect current students. I would suggest talking to the dean's office," she added.

"I think the proposed changes are still in too preliminary of a stage," Olson said. "There is nothing concrete to comment on. I haven't kept up with meetings in the past couple of weeks and I don't think it is my place to be talking about them (the changes)," he added.

THERE ARE MANY considerations interdependant upon each other, and attrition is one aspect tied to many of the possible changes, Hessman said.

"The attrition rate is now about 2 percent compared to 19 percent in 1962 and they want to keep it that way. Maybe we need to look at an extra semester or going a fifth year, as a trade-off for the high stress," Hessman said.

A week after the freshman letter had been circulated the topic had become highly sensitive and Dr. James Coffman, head of the Youngsters gain confidence in weekend riding clinic

By LAUREY WRIGHT
Collegian Reporter

Climbing on a horse may at first seem a simple action.

But for John it took all the courage and concentration he could muster.

John Becker, 17 and a Manhattan resident, was one of several mentally handicapped riders participating in the second annual Handicapped Riding Clinic sponsored by the K-State Horsemen's Association. The clinic ran two consecutive Saturdays, February 27 and March 3 in Weber Arena .

"The program provided a unique learning atmosphere along with exercise for the handicapped," Suzy Sims, co-chairman of the event and junior in animal science, said.

The clinic began with brief demonstrations for general care of the horse and the procedure to saddle the animal. The techniques were demonstrated by members of the association.

THE SIX Manhattan youths were then given a chance to help groom and saddle their horse with the assistance of two to three horse handlers, one leading the horse and one on either side of the animal.

"This is a chance for the handicapped to do something they probably never have experienced before and never will again," Bill Denlinger, president of the horsemans association and senior in microbiology, said.

Denlinger, who was involved with the clinic last year, noticed an improvement in the returning kids.

"Using John as an example; I worked with John last year and he was nervous the entire clinic. This year, he was nervous at first, but as soon as he forgot where he was, he relaxed and really enjoyed himself."

This held true for the other kids, as well, according to Denlinger.

MONITORING the event from the center of the arena, Dennis Sigler, assistant professor of animal science and faculty adviser to the association, called out the specific instructions for the kids to follow.

Games such as "Simon says" or "Red light§green light" challanged the youths' skills and gave them confidence handling the animal, according to Sims.

"This is a good opportunity for the kids to use their listening and coordination skills," she said.

"Any experience that adds to their knowledge and self confidence gives them a sense of accomplishment, that is important for these kids," Mrs. Becker, John's mother, said.

WHEN THE YOUTHS became more confident with handling their horse they advanced to more difficult games.

Racing over cavaletties (long wooden rails) and around barrels allowed the handicapped a taste of competition and the feel of the horse under them, according to Sims.

The following Saturday the participants gained even more responsibility.

More confident, each youth ventured to ride his horse alone.

"I got to ride him all on my own, without any help, I can't wait to tell my dad," James Hermes, a rider and Manhattan resident, said.

No one was a loser. Everyone was a winner.

Each youth taking part was awarded a ribbon.

John Becker received the covetted trophy awarded to the best overall rider.

It is a challenge for the handicapped to even be on a horse, much less competing in races, according to Teri Sellers, a horse handler and member of the association.

"These kids need to feel like they have a responsibility, and being around a horse gives them that. Best of all, they feel worthwhile and important. Besides, it's a fun way for them to learn," she said.

Department of Surgery and Medicine, talked to the underclassmen to try and explain possible changes from a clinician's view, according to Hessman.

"The topic had become so hot that he (Coffman) was at first put on the defensive. But when he had explained the changes were only being discussed and not planned for implementation, things cooled down," Hessman said.

A source, who asked that his name not be used, said there were several motivations discussed among students and faculty for the possible changes.

SOME OF THE discussion concerned itself with the reputation of the veterinary medicine college, the source said. K-State has a reputation for the fine clinicians it graduates and any changes to be made would be considered for their effects in that light, he added.

Possible short and long-term effects of a change have also been discussed, according to the source. The short-term effects could include the additional stress and the possible increased financial strains.

The long term or 'snowball' effects, as the source referred to them, deal with the effects of a change upon K-State's strong clinical reputation.

First- and second-year graduates in veterinary medicine at K-State earn an average of a couple thousand dollars more than other first-year graduates because of their skill and the college's reputation, according to the source.

"A very conceivable possibility is that a new curriculum could strengthen our graduates' first year's worth, thus attracting better students, thus attracting more high-powered professors, which brings more research and the whole place becomes a powerhouse," the source said.

CONCERNS ABOUT the college's reputation are brought to life when compared to reputations of other veterinary medicine colleges, the source said.

Iowa State University within the past two years has changed to a curriculum similar to that being considered here and has had trouble implementing the changes, he said.

"(The University of) Missouri is known for their balanced, stable program, but with K-State's clinical strength, we can be seen as competing with Cornell, which is known as the top clinical and research school in the country, or with the University of California-Davis, which is the top research school," he said.

The faculty and administration is pushing to keep the K-State veterinary medicine college in the top group, he said. "That's great and the way it should be," he added. The people being the most vocal are expressing concerns of not wanting to have to leave school or lose department strength and emphasis because of possible changes, the source said.

It is also the opinion of many people, the source said, "that the college has the power to cut through red tape and what they want — they get."

General Motors considers Toyota production venture

DETROIT (AP) — General Motors Corp. and Toyota Motor Co. are considering a joint effort to build up to a half-million small cars a year in the United States, company officials said Monday.

The idea of a cooperative production venture was raised at a March 1 meeting in New York between GM Chairman Roger B. Smith and Toyota President Eiji Toyoda, according to statements released by both companies.

"We are not in a position at the moment to announce the contents" of any joint venture plan, Toyota and its U.S. marketing arm, Toyota Motor Sales Co., said in a statement released in Tokyo.

In Grand Rapids, GM President F. James McDonald said if the two carmakers agree on a joint manufacturing venture, they would build 400,000 to 500,000 small cars a year in the United States.

"It's imperative for us that we be in the small-car business," McDonald told reporters before speaking to the Economic Club of Grand Rapids.

According to Japan's leading business newspaper, Nihon Keizai, plans under consideration call for production of the cars at idle GM plants.

The newspaper said two GM assembly plants in California — at South Gate near Los Angeles and Fremont near San Francisco — are possible production sites. Both plants are scheduled for indefinite closings because of huge backlogs of unsold cars.

GM, the largest U.S. automaker, last week closed the Fremont plant, which built mid-sized Chevrolets and Oldsmobiles. The Southgate plant, which makes the subcompact Chevrolet Cavalier and Cadillac Cimarron, is scheduled to close indefinitely March 25.

Nihon Keizai said Toyota and GM are expected to sign an initial agreement this month and start talks on the ratio of ownership of the new company, what models to make and when to start production.

For Japan's largest automaker, a joint venture could help overcome continuing restrictions on auto exports from Japan to the United States. It also could help blunt growing criticism in the United States that Japanese auto imports are putting Americans out of work.

Such a venture also would be in line with expectations that Toyota will step up activities, both in the domestic market and overseas, in the near future.

Series lecturer focuses speech on nuclear arms

The need of the people to be aware of nuclear arms will be the subject of the Lou Douglas Series lecture tonight.

"It's bad enough when our international relations aren't going well, but now we are dealing with nuclear weapons," Admiral Eugene Carrol Jr., said.

Carrol will be speaking in Forum Hall tonight at 7:30 p.m. as part of the Lou Douglas Series. His speech, "Arms Control and Survival," will focus on the increasing risk of war and how the American people must devise an alternative system to reduce the number of arms being bought and produced under consideration by the Reagan admininstration.

After serving 37 years in the service, Carrol is the Associate Director of the Center For Defense Information in Washington, DC.

According to Carrol, the administration is asking for $258 billion for defense in the fiscal year of 1983, compared to $214 billion in 1982.

"The administration of '83 defense program will provide to be able to fight a conventional nuclear war. This is the first time to have this capability and increases the chances of war," Carrol said. Currently the United States has about 30,000 nuclear weapons and the Soviets have 20,000.

"If we were to have a war today, there would be around 12,000 weapons that can be used to attack. If we increase our arms the Soviets will too and therefore there will be no weaker enemy and this will result in double destruction," he said.

Carrol urged students as well as members of the community to attend his speech and other Lou Douglas Series lectures because "they are the future leaders."

Convocation

just discuss the facts," she said.

To add some shades of gray to the black and white picture that has been painted, the depth of coverage needs to be improved, she said. "To achieve depth we want to get more than the official side of the story."

LERNOUX SAID the public must stop treating Latin America as if they have no account or need.

"Reporters are claiming to be objective, but they only listen to the government side of the issue. Actually they are just becoming government spokesman themselves," she said. "I doubt that there's such a thing as complete objectivity, but every side of the story should be heard.

"For example, we read that President Reagan has authorized the immediate dispatch of $55 million worth of military equipment to the Salvador income because it has met a congressional condition for human rights improvement," she said.

But that is all that is reported about the story, Lernoux said. What about the other sides? This brings about the need for more interpretive reporting, she added.

"The United States needs Latin American just as much as they need us," Lernoux said. "Many of our strategic materials, including oil come from their region.

"We have a responsibility to listen to what the Latin Americans are saying, and I mean all Latin Americans, not just their government officials," she said.

Federal aid application cut-off set for Monday

By CATHY KARLIN
Collegian Reporter

How far Congress will tighten the valve on the flow of federal assistance to students is not yet known, but whether there be flood or drought, students must submit their applications for many of the financial aid programs by Monday.

Students seeking funds for National Direct Student Loans, Supplemental Educational Opportunity Grants, College Work Study, Health Professions Loans and all scholarships must submit the Kansas Student Data Form by Monday, according to Bob Evans, director of Student Financial Assistance.

The Family Financial Statement, which is contained in the ACT Need Analysis Packet, must reach the processor in Iowa City, Iowa, no later than Monday.

However, applications for the Guaranteed Student Loan Program (GSL) are not yet available because Congress is still discussing Reagan's budget for 1982-83, Evans said.

"Obviously, until you get an application you can't establish a deadline," Evans said.

Congress must decide on at least part of the budget by March 31 when the current continuous resolution runs out. Evans said he expects the applications to arrive sometime after April 1, and then the deadline will be announced in the Collegian and through Student Financial Assistance.

"We'll let everyone know," Evans assured.

Award letters to students are scheduled to be mailed in early May, according to Evans. If congressional action on the federal budget is not complete, Student Financial Assistance will issue award letters on schedule with estimated amounts.

One of the basic issues being discussed by Congress that will affect the GSL applications is determining who will be eligible for aid programs, Evans said.

"Currently, for students whose family's adjusted gross income is over $30,000, those students must qualify for a loan based on financial need," Evans said. "President Reagan has recommended that all students regardless of family income be required to qualify on financial need in order to receive a GSL."

Reagan has also requested a reduction in money for the work-study program and the National Direct Student Loan Program, Evans said. The work-study program has the biggest impact on K-State students, he added.

"Most likely Congress is going to compromise with the president, with some reduction in some programs but not near what Reagan proposed," he said.

The financial aid office is "over 2,000 applications ahead of this time last year," according to Evans. He cites the reasons for the increased number of early applicants as students' reactions to increased publicity about student financial assistance, and because the application process has been streamlined. Students now have to complete only the Kansas Student Data Form in order to apply for financial aid, whereas before they were required to fill out two forms, Evans said.

House approves plan to increase prison sentences

TOPEKA (AP) — A controversial proposal to double and triple the range of minimum sentences for all felony convictions — while stripping the Adult Authority of its power to decide parole dates — was tentatively approved Monday by the Kansas House.

The House became deadlocked on the measure, introduced by the Judiciary Committee, after opponents charged the bill was offered as a "political game" aimed at "embarrassing the governor."

"This was by and large a political maneuver and I don't think it addresses the real problems of prosecution of criminals," said Minority Leader Fred Weaver (D-Baxter Springs). "It was thought out in terms of a political issue. They want to be able to go home and tell everyone 'Look how tough I am on crime.' It's clearly a political game."

The bill sets strict requirements for sentencing and imposes limitations on when inmates can be paroled. Currently the Adult Authority has the responsibility of deciding if and when a convicted felon should be paroled.

Proponents want to go to a determinate system of sentencing because they said inmates are eing released too early.

"Kansas has the most liberal parole policy in the country," said Rep. Joe Hoagland (R-Overland Park), chairman of the Judiciary Committee. "This bill is designed to close the revolving door policy we currently have."

The bill requires every convicted felon to serve a minimum sentence.

Hoagland said 70 percent of the felonies committed in Kansas involve ex-convicts and inmates on parole. He said problems with increased crime in the state related directly to Gov. John Carlin.

"It's got to be embarrassing to the governor because his liberal parole policies are backfiring," Hoagland said. "We've got to do something to get these people off the street."

A handout from the Kansas Department of Corrections showed that over a 30-year period the bill would cost the state about $929.8 million, mainly to increase space to house the higher prison population the bill would cause.

Republicans disputed the figure, and Secretary of Corrections Patrick McManus said he was not sure exactly what the effect of the bill would be.

"The result may be opposite that what is intended," McManus said. "There may be more pressure on judges to put people on probation than impose these harsh sentences."

— Charles Corbin, professor of health, physical education and recreation, leaves for Arizona State University after this semester, taking with him an impressive list of credentials, awards and accomplishments.

— Wayne Danen, professor of chemistry, has accepted a research job with the prestigious Los Alamos National Laboratory in New Mexico. In 15 years of teaching at K-State, Danen, like many other professors, consistently attracted more money to the University in research grants than he received in salary.

— Ruch, who directed the master of business administration program which gained professional accreditation in 1980, will become the new dean of the School of Business Administration at Rider College, Lawrenceville, N.J., in July.

The list could continue, and it is not restricted to those in teaching positions.

Bob Bruce, director of University Relations, who has been instrumental in improving the University's reputation, is leaving for the University of Nebraska.

LEAVING THE UNIVERSITY is becoming "more and more attractive" to a lot of people, Meloan said.

Last year a survey of the chemistry department revealed 11 of the 21 instructors were looking for another job. Of them, three have gone.

"The quality (of these professors) is good enough they wouldn't jump at just anything," Meloan said. "It has to be a position they really want."

It is unlikely the University can replace faculty at such a high level, Brian Spooner, professor of biology, said.

"You can fill the positions, but not replace the people," he said.

Positions are usually filled with junior faculty which leads to a department with little age variation, Danen said.

Inspirations and theories from one age group leave little room for developing different eras of thought, Meloan said.

And junior faculty will often take years to earn the grant monies many departments use to survive, Danen said.

AS INSTRUCTORS LEAVE, many teaching vacancies across campus remain unfilled.

For the last year, the College of Business Administration has been looking for persons with Ph.D's to fill three positions. The departments of mathematics, physics, civil engineering, journalism and the Division of Biology are all recruiting at least one faculty member.

"Eight to 10 years ago there were 200 applications. This year there are 31," Klabunde said, referring to a vacancy in the chemistry department.

And the quality of applicants is "not as good" as in recent years, according to Donald Rathbone, dean of the College of Engineering.

"There's always a few good ones (applicants)," Klabunde said, "but the really good people go into industry."

The journalism department has not even seen "the few good ones," according to Jim Morris, associate professor of journalism and mass communications.

NONE OF the seven applicants for a position in advertising were of the quality desired, he said.

The pull from industry has resulted in a larger number of foreign applicants who have trouble entering industry, Meloan said.

It is hard for foreigners to obtain a permanent visa, and industry may not hire them because of risks in revealing confidential information to a person who may return to his homeland, he said.

The language barrier between foreign faculty and students is often misleading, according to Rathbone.

"In some cases they are the most outstanding — but there are a few who can't speak well," Rathbone said.

Rathbone faults the individual teacher for not improving his English, not the administration for hiring a foreign applicant.

NO MATTER HOW difficult the teaching situation becomes, there will always be those excellent instructors who remain because they love teaching, although this group is becoming scarce, Danen said.

Faculty also remain because of colleagues, family or financial investments.

A major factor holding onto K-State employees is the Manhattan community. For those not desiring city life or rural communities, Manhattan is an attractive place.

"The cost of moving keeps some (faculty) here," Meloan said. "If interest rates on homes would drop, a lot of people would leave."

Whatever the reasons, few can stay without absorbing the blows the academic industry is receiving.

"Morale among the chemistry faculty and across the University has taken a nose dive," Danen said.

"I don't think it (morale) has ever been lower. Tempers flare in faculty meetings like never before," Ruch said. "All these scare headlines are true."

RUCH SAID he believes K-State is in danger of losing the "personal touch" which draws so many to the University.

"K-State has always had the reputation of being a place where professors care about students. They have extra time and flexible office hours," he said.

Many ask why they should give extra when their needs are not met, he said.

There is still a feeling of camaraderie among faculty and the desire to offer the students the best, but this is not as evident as in the past, Ruch said.

"The class doesn't know the difference — they have no way of judging," Meloan said. "But the professors know."

The majority opinion seems to be the faculty are doing the best they can under the conditions.

"I'm proud of K-State for what it produces with the resources it has," Meloan said.

BUT TO MAINTAIN a level of high quality, many departments are struggling.

The College of Business Administration has worked hard to be part of the 15 percent accredited business schools in the United States, Ruch said. It may lose this accreditation — it is five faculty members below the minimum standard.

"Our reputation is in jeopardy," Ruch said. "If we don't have a first-class faculty, then there's no way to have a first-class program."

K-State's business college will be reviewed for accreditation by the American Assembly of College Schools of Business in 1985. If the college were to go through accreditation as it did in 1973 for the undergraduate program, and 1980 for the graduate program, it "wouldn't have a snowball's chance in hell" to be accredited again, Ruch said.

"Education is suffering," Danen said. "In 10 years people will ask 'What happened to KSU?'"

Admiral says Soviets not root of problems

By BETH BAKER
Collegian Reporter

The United States needs to slow, stop and reverse the nuclear arms race, said former Rear Admiral Eugene Carroll Jr., at the third Lou Douglas lecture — "Can Nuclear War be Avoided?"

"In short, our national security is decreasing and the risk of nuclear war is increasing. We are engaged in policies of confrontation and challenge with the Soviet Union in military terms, and with the pairing of nuclear war fighting capabilities that make that challenge threatening," Carroll said.

He expressed displeasure with President Reagan's defense budget and foreign policy at various points throughout the lecture, and urged private citizens to get involved in the nuclear arms issue.

"We need people who have facts and who become active," he said. "The issue of survival is far too important to be left to politicians, or to the infinite wisdom of admirals and generals."

Carroll gave four reasons why the threat of nuclear war is increasing, the first being that the United States has pegged the Soviet Union as the root of all problems in the world. "All fault cannot lie on one side...and all good cannot lie on the other," he said.

"We cannot wish the Soviets away. We can't even blow them away....What we have to do is decide how we're going to live together, or make up our mind how we're going to die together," Carroll said.

His other reasons concerning the increased risk of a nuclear confrontation dealt with the increased militarization of U.S. foreign policy and the fact that there is little quiet diplomacy remaining.

"Nuclear parity" exists between the Soviet Union and the United States, Carroll said, explaining that each side is capable of annihilation, and there is no defense against such an attack no matter who initiates the action.

The United States has 30,000 nuclear weapons with 12,000 on its target — the Soviet Union has 20,000 with 7,880 on our targets, he said.

The admiral suggested three ways to begin the reversal.

"The most readily achievable measure to slow the arms race is to stop all nuclear arms testing, to sign a comprehensive test ban treaty with the Soviet Union," according to Carroll.

A nuclear freeze would also slow the arms race, Carroll said, along with a 50 percent reduction in stockpiles of both sides.

"Believe me, it can be done with complete safety, as soon as you can agree that it will be done and agree what number ought to be reduced and you can verify the reducton," he said.

Carroll said that both sides will still have enough nuclear arms to destroy the other and should get rid of half and then begin negotiations for further reduction.

"We've got to take the military out of foreign policy and come up with something more constructive," Carroll said. "We must lose our fear of Russia."

The United States must realize that there are limits to our ability to control world events that there are many situations that do not call for military response, he said.

Academics, politics struggle to 'out-conserve the other'

Editor's note: This is the last in a three-part series.

By CHARLENE FARRELL
Staff Writer

The quality and stability of many Kansas educational institutions is at the mercy of political hierarchy.

Statistics don't lie — faculty are leaving K-State — but tracking down the source of fault is difficult.

Fingers point to department heads, college deans, University administrators and executives, but the problem runs deeper.

Accusations fly at the Kansas Board of Regents, the state legislature and Governor John Carlin. Fault is even found with President Reagan.

"Academics is a pawn for the politician," Wayne Danen, professor of chemistry, said. "They want to see who can out-conserve the other."

The legislature and government do not view higher education with the importance it deserves, Danen said, therefore it does not support education sufficiently.

"Even during good years higher education was not met adequately," he said.

To continue the excellence the University has strived to achieve over the years, state support is crucial, Donald Rathbone, dean of the College of Engineering, said.

"It's like having a great basketball team and giving them no more basketballs," he said.

According to Rathbone, the governor "ignored" the 1980 academic year — a year which enrollment increased substantially — and only gave the University "half of a loaf."

THE FUTURE MAY look bleak, but Rathbone is among a few who have some hope.

"I'm optimistic. I think Kansas will respond to the problem," he said.

"The regents are working very hard on individual members (of the legislature) trying to convince them of the (13 percent) increase," said John Conard, executive officer of the Kansas Board of Regents.

But the proposed 7.5 percent increase by the legislature may be the most the board can draw from the state.

"I don't see it (the increase) going up," Conard said.

Apparently the state's financial condition does not lend itself to generous salary increases for education. There are funding demands on the state from about 125 state agencies, Conard said.

Finances allotted to unclassified faculty positions at the University are accompanied with increases to teachers in local schools and to classified employees, he said.

"The state's revenues are not expanding

House debate sets back bill for tougher DWI penalties

TOPEKA (AP) — A controversial proposal to impose stricter penalties for convictions of driving while intoxicated stirred lengthy and heated debate Tuesday in the Kansas House.

It resulted in the stalled bill being returned to a committee — which is not subject to Wednesday's deadline for debate of bills in the house of origin — for reworking.

The proposal, sponsored by the House Transportation Committee, would impose a mandatory 90-day driver's license suspension for a person's first DWI conviction, plus a fine ranging from $100 to $500.

"We could let it go and vote on it out of fear," said Rep. Robert Frey (R-Liberal), majority floor leader. Frey led the opposition to the measure. Despite the "good intentions and support across the state" for the bill, Frey said it had serious flaws.

"We've got a party coming up next week and we're going to be giving liquor away at it," Frey said. "Under this bill everyone here who goes and has a couple of drinks would be subject to possible arrest and prosecution. I don't think you want something like that, I know I certainly don't."

Under the proposal, a first offender also would either spend 48 hours in jail or serve 60 hours of public service, besides enrolling in an alcohol and drug abuse treatment center.

"Why are we afraid to take up this issue?" asked Rep. Rex Crowell (R-Longton), chairman of the sponsoring committee. "Are we afraid that it might get one of us when we've had one too many at the club some night? I submit that's a pretty poor excuse for sending this back to committee."

"The initial intent was to kill the bill," Crowell said of the motion to refer it back to the House Federal and State Affairs Committee. "There may be enough pressure on it now to force them to work it and it'll probably be watered down enough that everyone can vote for it.

"However, it won't have near the teeth this bill has."

Why green?

TODAY'S COLLEGIAN is this color because Student Publications had a nice roll of paper (left over from the student directories), and certain parties believe it must be used. Unless you are fortunate enough to receive one of the few thousand copies on white paper, bear with us. The editorial staff would like to protest this decision. Faculty Senate receives coliseum survey results

Results of a survey sent to faculty members regarding the coliseum proposal were given to Faculty Senate Tuesday. Eugene Friedmann, head of the Department of Sociology, Anthropology and Social Work, and special subcommittee chairman, presented the survey results to faculty senators.

The senate executive committee formed the special subcommittee in December to determine faculty opinion on the coliseum proposal, Friedmann said.

A survey was developed to determine "concern on academic programs of the University and how faculty feels this (the coliseum) will contribute to the University," Friedmann said.

He said the subcommittee members represented a diversity of views, but those views did not affect the outcome.

The survey, sent out in February, had an excellent return, with 80.1 percent of faculty responding. All faculty members permitted to vote in Faculty Senate elections were sent a survey. This includes budgeted faculty and a select number of administration representatives, Friedmann said.

"The size and promptness of survey return is data itself," he said. This shows the strength of faculty interest, especially since the "response was so very strong," he said.

The survey consisted of four sets of assumptions, a perceived benefit to the University section, expectations of adverse effects upon legislative or foundation support for academic programs and characteristics of the respondents.

The survey indicates there is strong opposition (to the coliseum proposal) from faculty if there are negative effects from the legislature or the KSU Foundation, Friedmann said.

Senate moved to pass the survey results on to President Duane Acker and the motion passed.

Heinz Bulmahn, senate president and associate professor of modern language, said that the Board of Regents would be on campus April 15 and 16.

He also said that the senate leadership group met with Acker and discussed the parking fee proposal.

"Within a week or two there will be a report coming from the president's office that will make a final proposal on the parking fee issue," Bulmahn said.

Senate gears for floor fight on severance tax proposals

TOPEKA (AP) — The Senate was girding Tuesday for its first big floor fight over the severance tax.

Senate Democratic Leader Jack Steineger of Kansas City announced he would move at 10 a.m. today to call the bill, which he and other Democrats introduced on behalf of Gov. John Carlin, out of the Senate Assessment and Taxation Committee for debate and a vote.

By making his motion one day in advance, Steineger needs only a simple majority of 21 votes of the 40-member Senate to bring the bill out of the committee, where it has languished because that panel has decided to work instead a bill already passed by the House.

Senators who were taking tallies Tuesday said Steineger wasn't likely to get his 21 votes, but they said it would be tolerably close. They also said if a move is made to bring the House bill out of the Assessment and Taxation Committee, that vote probably would be even closer.

The vote on Steineger's motion was close enough that Senate President Ross Doyen, a staunch severance tax foe, was out working the floor Tuesday, buttonholing senators to keep them in line against it.

Sen. Paul Hess (R-Wichita), another severance foe, predicted an all-out debate on merits of the severance tax, not just Steineger's procedural motion.

The Senate severance tax bill, which cannot be considered by that body after Wednesday because that is the deadline for consideration of bills in the house of origin, would impose a 5 percent tax on the production of oil, gas and coal.

It was amended by the Assessment and Taxation Committee this week to provide for rebating 15 percent of the revenue it would generate to the counties and school districts in the oil, gas and coal producing areas to compensate them for the erosion of their tax bases.

Sen. Bud Burke (R-Leawood), chairman of the committee, said that amendment makes the bill much more attractive to county and school officials, because in some cases those counties would get more through the rebate than they now are raising from property taxes on the oil and gas property.

The House-approved bill would impose a 3½ percent severance tax on oil and gas and a 2½ percent tax on the production of natural gas liquids. It imposes no tax on coal production, and has a 5 percent rebate to counties and school districts.

Belushi buried; cause of death still questioned

VINEYARD HAVEN, Mass. — With Dan Aykroyd riding to the gravesite on a motorcycle and James Taylor mournfully singing "That Lonesome Road," comedian John Belushi was buried Tuesday in a gentle snowfall on an island off Cape Cod.

"We can hear the call of his solitary warning: 'Wise up!'" the Rev. Ilia Katre of Boston's Holy Trinity Church told the 200 friends and relatives who gathered at a church on Martha's Vineyard for a 45-minute requiem service and brief eulogy.

The phrase, "Wise up!" was a trademark of the 33-year-old Belushi, whose manic comedy made him a star of TV's "Saturday Night Live" and then such motion pictures as "Animal House."

Lee Solters, Belushi's New York publicist, said the comedian chose to be buried on the island where he owned a summer home because "it was the one place he really slept well."

"Seriously, he's always really loved it here," Solters said.

The Los Angeles Times reported Tuesday that a source in the coroner's office said Belushi died of complications from a cocaine overdose. ABC News reported that sources said a drug overdose killed him, and said the drug was "probably cocaine."

The Los Angeles coroner's office declined to comment on the reports, saying only that the autopsy and other tests have been inconclusive.

Blaze destroys high school, students' records

DORRANCE — One person was in custody in connection with a fire that destroyed Dorrance High School early Tuesday, Russell County Sheriff Gary Clark said.

No charges had been filed he said.

Clark said that preliminary findings indicated the fire was of a suspicious nature.

David Yates of the state fire marshal's office was called to investigate the blaze. Yates said the rubble was so hot that it probably would be Wednesday before he could get into the destroyed central-Kansas school building.

The fire at the three-story brick building was reported around 3:30 a.m. The structure was engulfed in flames when firefighters arrived.

County School Superintendent Virgil Boatwright said records of all students who have attended the high school were destroyed.

There are 47 students enrolled at the school. Boatwright said temporary classrooms would be set up elsewhere in town.

Scientists to take second acid cloud sampling

MOUNTAIN VIEW, Calif. — A second sampling of the sulfuric acid cloud circling the Earth was set for Wednesday as scientists try to gauge the cloud's effect on Earth weather.

Experts at Ames Research Center confirmed Tuesday that the cloud consists mostly of tiny droplets of sulfuric acid, the end product of debris from a volcanic eruption somewhere in Africa or Asia.

The second sampling flight by a U-2 reconnaissance plane was scheduled in an attempt to determine the size of the cloud, which is so thin it is invisible to the human eye, said Peter Waller, public information officer at the center, which is operated by the National Aeronautics and Space Administration.

The cloud is believed to contain at least one million tons of acid, as well as an undetermined amount of gas which could convert to acid.

"If the amount reaches 10 million tons, or 20 million, or 30 million, then we have something," said O. Brian Toon, leader of the 10-member research team.

Toon said 30 million tons of sulfuric acid could reflect enough sunlight away from the Earth to cause a drop in temperatures. However, the amount of temperature decline and its consequences are as yet unknown.

Officials seize cocaine shipment in Miami

MIAMI — Nearly two tons of high-grade Colombian cocaine was seized Tuesday at Miami International Airport by U.S. Customs and Drug Enforcement Administration agents, and officials said it was largest cocaine seizure in history.

About 3,748 pounds of cocaine, worth an estimated $175 million on the street, was found in a shipment of clothing that arrived from Colombia aboard a Tampa-Colombia International Airways cargo plane, said Robert Battard, regional commissioner of Customs in Miami.

He and other Customs and DEA officers described it as the nation's largest cocaine seizure. Federal officials previously had said the largest amount seized was 826 pounds, confiscated in Feburary 1981 in Miami.

DEA officials interviewed the crew of the plane and many of the airline's employees, but no arrests were made, Battard said.

Customs inspectors met the Boeing 707 cargo jet as it arrived and began checking its cargo, Battard said. At least 22 unconcealed boxes of cocaine were found among 22 other boxes of dresses and suits from Medellin, Colombia, he said.

Safety procedures eliminate hazards

Tornados are a weather hazard in each of the forty-eight contiguous states. Kansas, however, has developed a particular reputation for frequently hosting tornados thanks to "The Wizard of Oz." But the fact remains that this threat arises across the Plains States. And along with thoughts of warm weather come thoughts of the accompaning hazards.

Not only is March 15-20 a vacation from academic duty for students and faculty but it is also Tornado Awareness Week, as designated by the National Weather Service.

Many visitors and new residents of Kansas jokingly ask the questions concerning what the Kansas natives do during a tornado. The witty answer and too often truth is "watch them."

A person growing up in Kansas is annually instructed, during tornado warning drills at school, about the safety procedures to follow during a warning. This instruction often fades and similar conduct for home safety is unknown, leaving ignorance as the protection for residents as well as visitors.

The National Weather Service tips on safety are simple and a quick review may prevent accidents if one is caught in unfamilar surroundings.

If tornados have been sighted in the area keep a close watch on changing sky conditions, listen for sirens and keep a battery-operated radio to tune into the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration (NOAA) weather radio or local stations.

Danger signs to watch for are severe thunderstorms with frequent lightning, heavy rain, strong winds or power failure. Also hail, a roaring noise (similar to that of a passing train) or a funnel cloud.

If a tornado warning is sounded while in a residental building, proceed to the basement. Avoid the windows, a chimney or doors and hide under heavy furniture or stairwells. If the building lacks a basement seek shelter in the central portion of the house in a closet or hallway. In a split-level home seek the lowest level or central or northeast section of the building.

Staying in a mobile home or an automobile presents increased danger. Residents should evacuate and seek available shelter. If no shelter is available, lie flat in a nearby ditch and cover head with arms.

In schools, hospitals and public places move to any pre-designated shelter areas or interior hallways on the lowest evels. In high-rise buildings small interior rooms or hallways offer the best protection.

Active tornado seasons cannot be calculated. There were 39 tornados in Kansas in 1981. With a little knowledge concerning tornado safety, immediate action can save a life.

An entrance, exit to altered states

It is a beautiful spring day, and as you walk across campus, you see someone you vaguely remember as a former classmate. You smile and say hello, but all you receive in return is a blank stare, or perhaps some tiny signal of recognition. Your old friend looks — well, not unhappy, but certainly not happy. It reminds you of a phase you also have been through, and hope to never see again.

IT IS A GRAY March day, and the drizzle is wilting your hair and your soul.

You are comforted by the fact that the drizzle is indiscriminate — it is wilting everyone's hair. Your soul, however, is more susceptible than others. The drizzle is not a necessary, nor even a sufficient condition for your loss of spirit. The only condition necessary is that you are here today, walking, existing.

Some would say you had the blahs, but you don't have the energy to even consider the possibility. The blahs simply can't compare. With them, at least you'd be feeling something.

What you feel is no feeling at all. Your utter lack of purpose, control, desire is terrifying, and your complete inability to combat it, to even care, only pushes you farther into nothingness.

YOU SLEEP, but upon waking you realize it is a lie — you couldn't have slept. The worst of the night before has remained with you, magnified 10 times for clear quality. The Herculean effort required to climb out of bed is second only to the task of pushing the covers away first.

You curse the sunlight, or you curse the absence of sunlight — depending on prevailing conditions. Neither makes it easier to acknowledge that you have to pretend to exist for another day. The only two factors capable of that are the absolute obnoxiousness of your alarm clock (or the persistence of your snooze alarm), or the fact that after a certain amount of time just lying in bed is an even more dismal prospect than getting up and starting another day.

You can sink no lower — the state of non-feeling merely continues, feeding on its own non-energy. You may be too tired to live, but if anything, you are certainly too tired to make yourself die. It would take an immense level of unhappiness, not unfeeling, to create an appropriate and effective means to accomplish that end.

AND SO YOU GO ON, advancing to the Reading Railroad, passing go, collecting your $200. You continue in the game ... staying afloat, but never winning.

At first you don't recognize the state you're in. You're just feeling down, having a bad day. It won't last long, it's happened before.

But as your "blahs" seem to become a permanent condition, you realize that maybe you should do something about it. As you find out that you can't, you resign yourself to it, reinforcing the state for what could be an indefinite amount of time.

You try physical exertion, thinking that the act of exercising the body will, in turn, exercise the psyche ... bring it back to life. After one or two sessions, you don't have the desire for any more. Just as pushing the covers away is the hardest part of getting out of bed, so putting the running shorts on is the hardest part of physical effort.

You eat your favorite foods, almost guaranteed to give you instant pleasure. Any good feelings resulting from this last only as long as the bites are still in your mouth. Soon after the last swallow, you feel waves of guilt. Spoonfuls of ice cream, slices of pizza and late-night donuts are marching straight to your waistline.

You see a movie, which will inevitably cheer you up. But the plot is thin, the humor superficial and the laughter of those around you is merely an insult, an intrusion on your blanket of introspection.

YOU CONTINUE through life, functioning, perhaps even creating a few successes. But the successful, even outstanding completion of activities does nothing for your feeling of non-being. Personal successes are no good unless they can be enjoyed, and that enjoyment shared.

Eventually something which you cannot comprehend pulls you out of the state you've endured. If you're lucky, a good friend has recognized your state (either consciously or unconsciously) and reached out to you with feeling, in hopes of combatting your non-feeling. You may or may not have understood their actions.

Regardless of what took place to rescue you, one fact will always remain — a part of you was inevitably left at the bottom, and will never be recovered.

Assistant professor receives fellowship

Selected from a field of 400 nominees, Paul Kelly, assistant professor of biology, is one of 88 young scientists to receive the two-year Sloan Research Fellowship of $25,000. The award is made to individuals working on problems in the frontiers of chemistry, economics, pure and applied mathematics, neuroscience and physics. The nominees were selected from among 50 universities, colleges, and research institutions in the United States and Canada.

The selections are based on nominees' exceptional contributions made in the early stages of their careers, and the outlook of continued contributions to the advancement of knowledge.

The fellowships, established by the Alfred P. Sloan Foundation in 1955, are to stimulate fundamental research by young scholars during a time in their careers when financial support is difficult to obtain. Candidates for fellowships are nominated by senior scholars familiar with their talents.

Sloan may use the funds for technical assistance, professional travel, support of pre-doctoral or post-doctoral research, or other purposes approved by the University.

Rollins to head Home Economics department

Assistant dean of the College of Home Economics, Judy Rollins, has been appointed as head of the Department of Family and Child Development. Rollins has served as assistant dean of the College of Home Economics since 1979 and as acting head of the Department of Family and Child Development since August.

Active in programs throughout the University, she organized the undergraduate program in the College of Home Economics, was chairman numerous committees, and active in instruction of the orientation to home economics courses and family relations field. She was also one of five K-State faculty admitted as honorary members to the Golden Key Honor Fraternity in 1981-82.

In 1979, she received her Ph.D. in child and family studies from the University of Tennesee, Knoxville. She received her bachelor's from the University of Kentucky, Lexington, and her master's from Purdue University, West Lafayette, Ind.

Judging teams score well in Houston show

While Cattlemen's Day dominated the agricultural scene last weekend, the wool, meats and livestock judging teams were scoring points in contests held in conjunction with the Houston Livestock Show.

The wool judging team took first place at the competition.

Scoring in in the wool placing classes: George McCallum, senior in animal science and industry, second high individual; Lyle Leppke, sophomore in animal science and industry, third high individual; Toni Timmis, senior in animal science and industry, fifth high individual.

Timmis received first in grading fleeces and was overall high individual in the contest. Leppke placed third overall. Leppke and Timmis placed second and third respectively in the reasons category.

Wool judging coach Clifford Spaeth said he was pleased with the team's performance particularly because it was the first wool contest of that particular show.

The livestock judging team placed 10th in a field of 22 teams. Coach Bill Able said he was not disappointed by the team's performance because it was the first outing for the team this year.

"It's maybe like Jack Hartman putting in a few freshman against a bunch of seniors," he said.

Overall the team placed fourth in cattle, eighth in horses, ninth in swine.

Journalism professor named to national board

Carol Oukrop, associate professor of journalism and mass communications, was appointed to the National Continuing Education Board of the Public Relations Society of America (PRSA). The board's responsibilities include evaluating the rules and proposals of organized bodies within and without the PRSA who offer public relations courses with PRSA approved Continuing Education Units attached. It monitors program quality of PRSA approved sponsoring organizations, and sets standards for the awarding of Continuing Education Units.

On March 19, she will travel to New York City for her first meeting on the board.

Poetry book celebrates author's heritage

Phillip Royster, associate professor of English, has had his second book of poetry published. The book, entitled "Songs and Dances," celebrates his black heritage, an area of poetry that Royster said is overlooked.

"Our literature has been neglected by American culture. Not to identify myself (with my heritage) would be to further that neglect," he said.

The book is a compilation of poems he wrote between 1971 and 1977.

He came to the University last fall after teaching at Syracuse University, Syracuse, N.Y. He received his B.S. and M.S. degrees from DePaul University, Chicago, Ill., and his Ph.D. from Loyola University, Chicago, Ill.

A squeaky microphone and friendly banter between the stage performer and the sound man introduced the Nooner Tuesday. Fritz Behrhorst, junior in construction science, took the stage to play some banjo music.

Stumbling fingers and a bit of inconsistent rhythm characterized Behrhorst's first song, "Grandfather Clock."

"As you noticed I do make mistakes, I'm not absolutely perfect," he informed potentially critical audience members.

As casual as his playing style was Behrhorst's stage manner. He told stories about what the songs meant to him, dedicated many to friends, alas, none of whom answered when he asked if they were there, and shared his philosophy about ending a banjo song without an unnecessary flourish. "If it bothers anybody, you can leave," he concluded.

But he then tossed the proverbial bone to the proverbial dog, inviting audience members to sing along. A person asked for the next song's words. Behrhorst said he didn't know them.

"Well, how can I sing," the audience member asked.

"You can't," Behrhorst said, with a smile.

Behrhorst has played the banjo for two-and-a-half years, he said.

"I bought it (the banjo) from a friend of mine who was starving to death in the dorm," he said.

He played traditional banjo favorites including, "Red-haired Boy," "Dixie Breakdown," and "Soldier's Joy."

A few times Behrhorst stopped after a mistake and replayed a certain refrain. This stemmed from his practicing habits, he said.

"I'm what I call a closet picker....In fact I prefer that nobody is around when I play," Behrhorst said after the Nooner.

'Secaucus Seven' looks at time's effect on friendship

By SHARON FLEMING
Collegian Movie Reviewer

"The Return of the Secaucus Seven" is the chronicle of a weekend reunion of old friends. Activists in the late '60s, they are now pushing 30 and are a bit unsure of how to handle their past.

Inertia is the quality that one character, Maura, believes typical of her relationship with her lover. The theme of the movie is this tendency to remain "as one" until a force disturbs. The characters handle the disturbances — the encroachment of 30, the desire to have children, willing admittance that times have changed — differently.

Review

For Jeff, a seeker of lost causes, inertia is a balance pole. The past must be carefully maintained, and he clings to its reminders — a packet of heroin, arrests (the dates and exact nature of which he has memorized). Irene, a governor's speech writer, is less concerned by the past. No longer advocating great reforms, she is contented to divert aid to where it's needed.

The film focuses not only on the relationship the characters have to their past, but to each other. The relationship of friends is explored against the backdrop of lovers. Among the seven it is the bond of friendship which is the stronger. The relationships break up with the introduction of new people each summer. This is all part of the ritual.

Though "The Return of the Secaucus Seven" has no fast action or great drama, and relies upon characters who are quite normal, the movie amazingly does not turn stagnant. Its salvation lies in good directing, remarkably natural acting, and dialogue which is exquisite in its normalcy, which reveals the characters subtly.

What emerges is the engrossing study of behavior.

Drivers

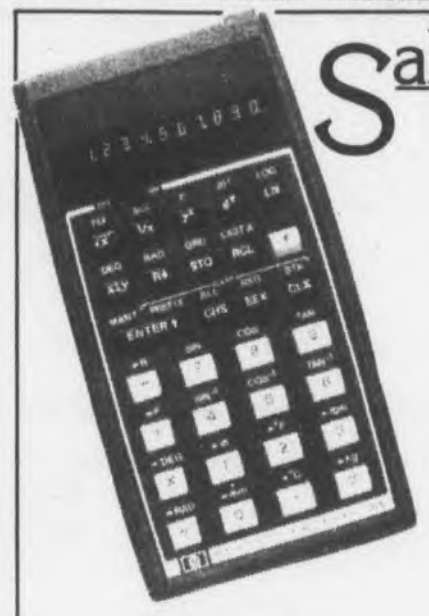
Proponents not only had trouble getting votes in favor of the measure, but there also was a problem getting them to vote at all.

On the first two votes to amend the measure, more than 30 legislators refrained from voting either way. On the final vote to refer the bill, five representatives passed on the vote. The tally to refer the bill was 62-58, making the five abstentions very significant.

Frey conceded fear of opposing a bill to get tough on drunken drivers was a problem, especially in an election year.



"I think most of us feel it is not a very good bill but it's not the kind of bill you want to vote against and then look bad when you get back home," Frey said. "I think there is a general uneasiness with the bill — with the reduced blood-alcohol levels and the 90-day suspended license — but most everyone agrees with the intent and the need for the bill."

Second offenders would be subject to a 30-day minimum jail sentence, a fine from $250 to $1,000 and license revocation of one year.

On the third conviction, the drunk driver would get a minimum of 90 days in jail, a fine of $1,000 to $2,500 and license revocation for five years with no reinstatement appeal before that time has elapsed.

Rep. Neal Whitaker (R-Wichita), chairman of the Federal and State Affairs Committee, said the panel will consider the proposal next week.

Faculty: Vet curriculum changes natural; heated discussions unnecessary

Editor's note: This is the second of two stories.

By MIKE FITZGERALD
Agriculture Editor

Like some students in the College of Veterinary Medicine, faculty leaders have varied opinions about the issue of possible curriculum changes in the college. The issue has come to light in the past month.

When presented with student concerns of possible changes in the veterinary medicine curriculum, Dr. Russell Frey, head of the Department of Anatomy and Physiology, prefaced his remarks by saying the lively discussions and worries could have been spared.

"I think we unneccessarily riled people and particularly the students because the channels of change weren't knowledge to them. Some minor changes can be made in a semester, but something of this nature has to go through a series of reviews. A lot of fuss could have been saved," he said.

"My impression of the reasons for the proposal is that it is to enhance clinical training," Frey said. "The Department of Surgery and Medicine feel with a change they can provide better clinic training to 100 students a day as opposed to the current 200. It's a manpower ratio thing," he said.

UNDER THE CURRENT curriculum, juniors work with patients in the morning and seniors pick up the case in the afternoon. The seniors miss some of the decision-making process. They should be involved in deciding, among other things, whether the patient should be treated as in-patient or kept for longer treatment, Frey said.

Two ramifications of more clinical training are the pushing back of lecture classes upon underclassmen and the loss of half the summer between junior and senior years. Concerns about the loss of income because of a possible summer session need to be looked at, Frey said. Many students during the summer aren't in an earning position that would be seriously changed by not working the entire summer, according to Frey.

A possible change that would place students in the field during part of their senior year is favored by Frey.

"I favor the externship because anybody interested in food animals practice, especially beef, learn better in February and March. It's better preceptership than June and July," he said.

FREY SAID HE has taught in the first and last semesters and is aware of the different stress phases.

Freshman are more dependent on help and advice and are concerned with survival whereas the seniors are more concerned with finding a job and passing the boards. Frey said he tells his students to take one night a week off to avoid burning themselves out on school.

"We have to be perceptive to when stress becomes intolerable. We don't want to burn them out," he said.

"Texas A & M and Michigan State went to a year-round program which graduated people in three years, but they burned out many of their students," Frey said.

To the contention that national board scores would drop as a result of any change, Frey said, "...they reflect training and preparation and ultimately it's the student who has to be ready....Maybe taking boards at the end of two years like some professions do should be looked at," he said.

"I feel stongly about anatomy and physiology courses. We don't want to teach too much at one time because we're talking about a lifetime career. Vets are in a continual learning process, and they may go to seminars to remain abreast of new techniques, but they don't go back for the fundamentals we're teaching, so we need to do it right," Frey said.

THE ATTITUDE of "I had to do it, and so can you" held by some faculty is not always the best way to approach things, according to Frey.

"I'm not so sure of that as a goal, because if we don't burn them out as sophomores and motivate them in clinics, chances are high of doing a better job," he said.

Student concern of not being kept abreast of the curriculum change review is unfounded, Frey said.

"How can you tell them it's a proposal when it hadn't been formulated? The freshmen, because of their intense concern, knew more than the average faculty," he said.

The point that the committee is just a formality and that Frey and Coffman will do the serious talking was a point of amusement to Frey.

"It's news to me. I wasn't aware of that's the way it would be done," he chuckled. "We need a proposal and we need compromises. It's a give-and-take situation, and we have

Seniors to display artworks, 'professional' presentations

Ten students are busily preparing art exhibitions in order to meet new requirements for seniors seeking a bachelor's degree in the fine arts curriculum.

Gary Woodward, associate professor of art, said, "The bachelor of fine arts degree is a much more professional degree. We felt that since it is a much more professional degree we needed to create an additional situation where the students would demonstrate their attitude toward the discipline they chose to study."

Woodward is the coordinator in charge of senior exhibitions. He explained that each student will be responsible for selecting the work he is going to exhibit.

The experience that the students will gain from these exhibits will be valuable in educating them about their profession, Woodward said.

"All the things that you have to do to put on an exhibit, all the mechanical preparation that you have to go through to have an exhibit, will be a learning experience," he said.

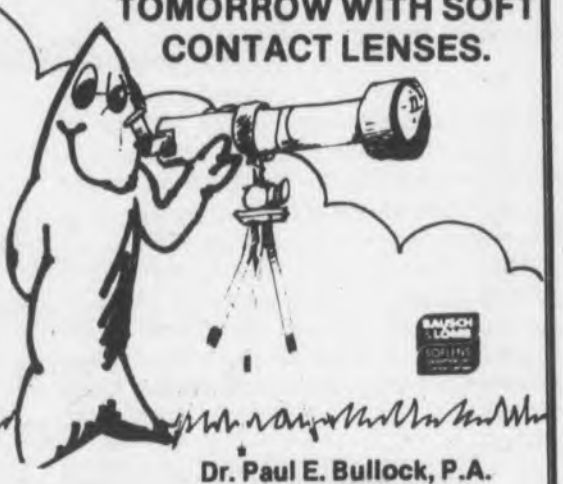
Mike Miller, senior in fine arts and journalism and mass communications, said, "I think its a good deal. It's a chance to put your work up and have other people look at it."

Miller's area of concentration is in graphic design, along with seven other graduating students. Other displays will feature painting and sculpture.

"We have 10 seniors that are participating in the exhibits this spring," Woodward said. "Next year we anticipate approximately 25 seniors will have exhibits."

Each student is responsible for installing his exhibit and for decisions concerning exhibition announcements, receptions and openings. All the work must be presented in a professional manner, with two-dimensional work being displayed under glass or plexiglass. The students will decide if they will show three-dimensional work on a pedestal and if it will have plexiglass covers over it, Woodward said.

This year there will be four locations on campus for the students to show their work, according to Woodward. "They will be able to show their work in the foyer of McCain Auditorium, Deibler Gallery (in West Stadium), the browsing room of Farrell Library and in the Art Building," he said.



"From what I understand I am the first sculpture student to put on a senior exhibition. As a whole I have been real happy here at K-State and so I would like to put everything into it that I can," Jane Allerton, senior in fine arts, said.

"Always before the students were able to show only one piece in the senior shows or the comprehensive shows," Woodward said. "The concept of the bachelor of fine arts exhibits is to give the artists at the end of their curriculum a chance for the public to view their work."

This year the exhibits will be displayed April 4 through April 18.

RACHEL PERRY

To promote skin beauty you must have skin health. That means skin maintains a slightly acid film at all times, known as its "ACID MANTLE." For instance, the pH of normal skin measures around 5.5. Unfortunately, most soaps and cosmetics are highly alkaline in their pH measurement, up to 9.0 or higher. This alkaline content tends to destroy the skin's protective "ACID MANTLE," causing it to lose its delicate moisture balance.

Rachel Perry designed this exceptional line of skin care products to help restore and keep your skin's natural pH Balance. This along with a selection of the most beneficial pure and natural substances, combines to bring new life and health to your skin.

Student Review Board handles violations

Editor's note: This is the third in a five-part series on K-State's judicial process.

By DEE ANNE HEADLEY
Collegian Reporter

Combining the jurisdiction of living group judicial boards, Interfraternity Council and Panhellenic Council, the Student Review Board (SRB) handles violations by off-campus students or students in different living groups. For example, if an off-campus student committed a violation in a residence hall, the case would be tried by the SRB.

There are five students on the board who are appointed by the Student Body President and approved by Student Senate. One of the five is appointed chairman. A faculty member selected by Faculty Senate also sits on the board. John Friel, judicial affairs coordinator and graduate in education, attends most SRB hearings, but is not a member of the board.

"My role is mainly that of a resource person," Friel said. "The Student Attorney General (and head of Judicial Council) and hall staff can also answer questions."

LIKE LIVING GROUP judicial boards, SRB follows K-State constitutional guidelines regarding the filing of violation complaints, notification of hearings, hearing procedures, notification of the decision and informing the defendant of appeal rights and procedures, said Steve Brown, chairman of SRB and sophomore in general.

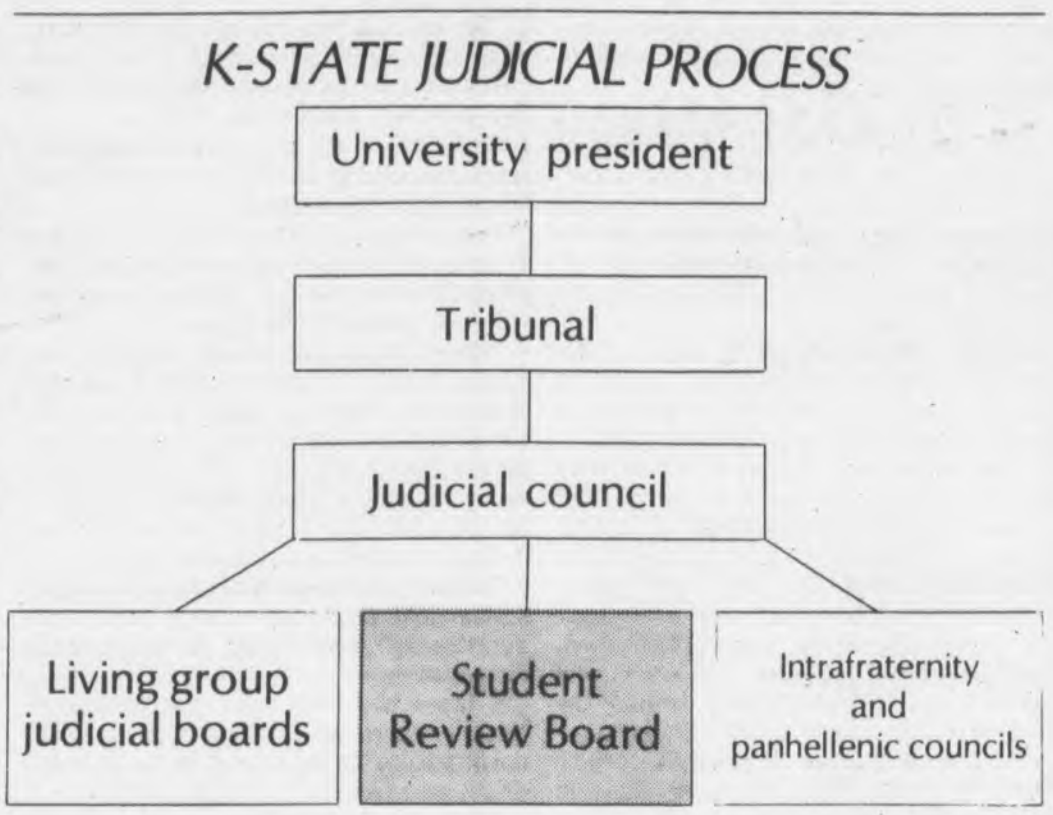
SRB holds a pre-hearing meeting before it hears each case in order to reduce the time it takes to deliberate after the hearing.

"Before the hearing I talk to all the people involved in the case to get a wider background and to try to understand why the case is being heard," Brown said. "At the pre-hearing meeting the board discusses possible sanctions, the implications of the sanctions and attitudes of the plaintiff and defendant.

"We have the meetings because I'm the only one with all the information about the case. The meetings help the board be better informed," Brown said.

HE SAID the hearings are informal, although they still follow the constitutional procedure guidelines.

After a hearing, Brown and Friel give the defendant the notice of decision in Friel's office. Brown said the board tries to make the sanction educational, in accordance with University judicial policy.



The rules are different in the educational system and "we're trying to get away from the legalistic side of it," Friel said. Circumstantial evidence is admissable, as is hearsay, if deemed appropriate. "If the case isn't solid, the person can appeal," Friel said.

"We do everything to be as fair as possible if the defendant is found guilty," Brown said. "We aren't out to hang anybody. We want to make sure he (the violator) understands the reasons behind the decision and we are very careful to be sure he understands the appeal process."

SRB cases can be appealed to Judicial Council within two class days. The deadline is 5 p.m.

Brown said the cases SRB hears have to be more clear in terms of evidence, witnesses and documentation in the future because people are taking advantage of the system. He said it is easier for students to appeal less clear-cut cases.

Brown said that SRB will have to ensure that cases are concrete before it hears them to keep guilty students from beating the system due to a flaw in evidence.

as rapidly as expected," Conard said. "They can't afford to spend (the extra money) on the University."

There is always the alternative of increasing taxes, Conard said. However the state is usually unwilling to resort to increases in sales, income or severance taxes.

Conard said he thinks some potential rests with the severance tax which was passed by the Kansas house last week and is meeting with opposition in the senate.

ALTHOUGH FAULT MAY lie within the power structure of government, some argue that once allocated, money for salary increases is not dispersed properly by University administrators.

Top administrators say they want to do everything they can to keep full professors, but when distributing salaries under the University's merit system, they often fail to give the best faculty members the highest increases, said Charles Corbin, professor of health, physical education and recreation.

"It's the way the system exists," Brian Spooner, professor of biology, said.

It is easier to give raises to low-paid faculty rather than high-paid faculty, he said. It is less money out of the total allotment.

"It's a sham to call the whole damned thing merit," Spooner said.

Some departments will give a low-paid faculty member a high salary increase to raise him to the salary level of top faculty, Clenton Owensby, professor of agronomy, said.

"It's a parity concept," he said. "I disagree with the concept of giving high-percentage raises in order to equalize pay."

According to Owen Koeppe, University provost, there may be inequities in salary distribution, but the system is something that is taken "very seriously."

"I think KSU does a very good job in that area," he said.

The salary increase evaluation begins with department heads. The recommendation is then reviewed by the deans of each college, Donald Hoyt, director of the Office of Educational Resources, and Dorothy Thompson, director of the Affirmative Action office. If justification for the increase is still questionable, the recommendation is reviewed by Koeppe.

"In a small department it's reasonable and easy to review performance, but in a large department there is a great deal of diversity," Owensby said. "The time constraints are prohibitive."

The department head may not be familiar with the faculty's research and have to make evaluations from a report made by each faculty member, he said. A better procedure would be for each department to establish peer evaluations.

THE ADMINISTRATION takes pride in recruiting faculty members who are attractive to other universities. However, some faculty members argue that when they're approached by another university and offered a salary increase, K-State fails to match this salary.

Large increases offered by other institutions are often not matched, but a sufficient amount is usually offered in an attempt to keep the faculty member, Owensby said.

"The philosophy we tend to follow is to review carefully the merit of faculty and review it at salary-setting time," President Duane Acker said. "We can't ignore the evaluation process."

The University does not have to "match" the salary offered by another institution, because moving expenses and home costs are excluded, William Stamey, dean of the College of Arts and Sciences explained.

"In some instances, it depends on how badly they (the administration) want to keep the individual," Owensby said.

"They offered me a substantial increase if I would stay," Danen said. "But if they offer to adjust it when I leave, why not adjust it before?"

The answer again seems to lie with finances.

"There's not ever enough (money) to do what we want to in salaries," Stamey said. "We just cross our fingers and hope that not everyone that could leave, will."

DISPUTE OVER departmental salary increases is closely followed by dispute over administrative increases.

According to a Faculty Senate study, the average percentage increase last year for administrators was 8.85 percent compared with 7.41 percent for faculty.

"These larger percentage increases for administrators occurred in part because their merit salary increases were not subject to the same constraints as were those of faculty," the study cited. "The average percent increase for administrators did not have to meet the '7 percent average' that faculty salary increases had to meet."

The study concluded that changes to a formal annual evaluation system for all administrators would help alleviate these discrepancies.

If there had been equal percentage increases, there would have been an additional $60,000-$70,000 available for distribution among faculty, according to the report.

"There was a certain category of administrators that received significantly higher increases last year," Koeppe said.

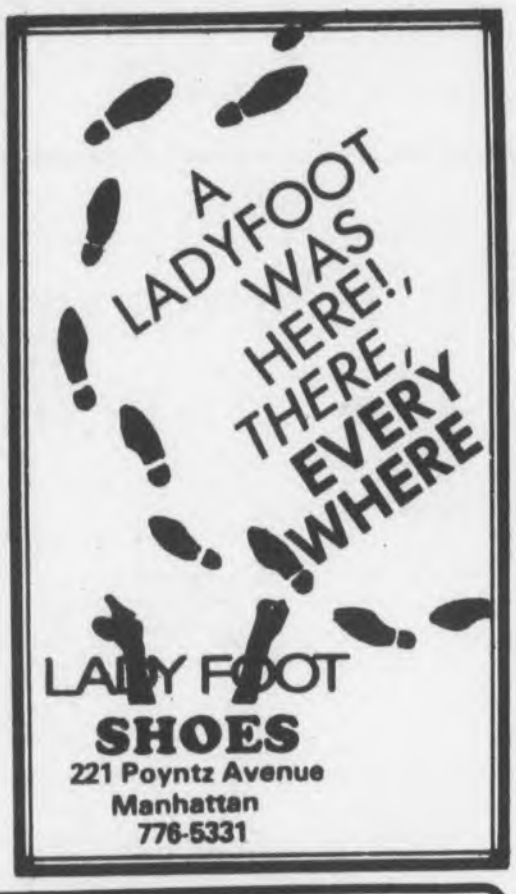
But Acker and Koeppe are "sensitive to the issue" and will attempt to correct the problem, he said.

UNDERLYING REASONS for denying universities adequate funding seem evident in attitudes of "administration, some faculty, certainly the legislature, but for the most part, the people of the state," Spooner said.

"They view faculty as parasites," he said. "They see their 'perfectly good money' going to pay faculty."

Although he said these views are subconscious, he doesn't think the people of the state view teaching as a "real job."

"The state doesn't recognize what the University is and what contributions it makes," he said.



"The general attitude (of legislators) is quite good," Conard said. "There's not the individual sniping at professors (as in previous years)."

An obvious contribution universities provide is educating students, but the University also provides a service — extension research, Spooner said.

Most grants awarded to faculty are from out-of-state sources. The bulk of this money is plowed into the economy of Kansas, Spooner said.

"If the institution folds, it would have a major economic impact on northeast Kansas," Spooner said.

According to Gerald Pauler, former Pittsburg State faculty member who has moved to a job with the government, the morale problem has a direct relationship with Reagan's budget cuts.

To Your Health!

To drink to your health and not against your health:
- Sip your drinks slowly,
- Drink with food in the stomach,
- Drink under relaxed social circumstances, and
- Pay attention to your responses to the alcohol and slow down or stop drinking if you feel that you're not handling the alcohol well.

If you should wind up with a hangover, aspirins, rest, and solid food are recommended, but time is the only real "cure" for the negative effects of drinking too much. (It takes about two hours for each drink to leave your system.)

Curriculum

to go through the same channels as other colleges in the University," he said.

The head of the Department of Surgery and Medicine, Dr. James Coffman, said he thought the possible changes are a natural occurrence in order to remain abreast of developments within the profession.

COFFMAN PREFACED his comments by saying the first major point is that the College of Veterinary Medicine is in a new facility and there are a lot of rapidly occurring changes in the industry and profession.

"Continual review is natural. If you don't propose and assess, you won't stay current and relevent. You are remiss if you're not assessing," Coffman said.

Donald Trotter, dean of the college, agrees with Coffman on the need for review.

"The discussion is part of a curriculum review activity that is an ongoing process," Trotter said.

When asked if there is any truth to comments that the some faculty were inciting student reaction in an effort to help block curriculum changes, Coffman said, "That's a extremely subjective kind of statement.

"Ten students may talk to a faculty member and in turn each talk to 10 others and God knows what is the truth. Incitement by faculty is stretching the explanation of how the discussion came about," Coffman said.

"Surgery and Medicine has said to curriculum review, 'This is how clinical can best be taught.' The committee has to assess the effect of that on the rest of the college," he said.

IF THE COMMITTEE does not reach a concensus, the proposal will not be put before the total faculty, Coffman said.

The proposal was perceived by students to have been introduced out of order, but that's because of the complexity of the whole issue, Coffman said.

The surgery and medicine department's main point is part of package to extend senior clinical time includes having on-campus clinical work during the summer before senior year and providing an externship in the second half of the senior year, Coffman explained.

When questioned about comments that proposed changes are fine until they reach the budget review stage, Coffman said manpower is always a problem.

"Finances aren't the problem, manpower is. Manpower isn't any more of a problem for the proposal than it is for the present. The need for additional manpower already exists," Coffman said.

"If the logistics and principles behind this proposal can be joined we'll provide a strong education," he said.

THE CONCERN that underclassman would receive too much information in too short of a time is a real one, according to Coffman.

"That's a real concern and it's getting a lot of attention. There are ways to reduce that kind of an impact..., but that's too complicated to present in a paragraph of a print media forum," Coffman said.

In response to the comment that a change would strengthen the college's clinical reputation, causing a snowball effect that could produce a "powerhouse" college to compete with the top schools in the country, Coffman said if this could be done reasonably it should be done.

"If we as a group feel it doesn't produce a strong graduate, we shouldn't do it. But if it will without undue stress, we should," he said.

WHEN ASKED about comments suggesting the proposed change was being pushed because he had joined the faculty last summer, Coffman said the developments may have that appearance but there's no direct relationship.

"We've mainly taken what was initially done before and put the crunch on it to get it finalized. It's a continuation of efforts last year. If a change is to be made official this year, it's going to have to be done before too much time goes by," Coffman said.

When Dr. Jerome Vestweber, chairman of the curriculum review committee and associate professor of surgery and medicine, was asked about discussions regarding the possible changes, he said the matter was in too preliminary a stage and that he would comment when something concrete was ready to be presented to the faculty board.

Before a change can be implemented it must receive Faculty Board, University Academic Affairs and Faculty Senate approval, according to Vestweber.

The possible changes for a proposal are being discussed and explained to departments within the college and a date for a vote by the committee is not certain, Vestweber said.

A date for a vote depends on when the committee can meet again. The issue will possibly be put before an open college forum, he added.

Overproducing, bad management create cash problems for farmers

By HEIDI BRIGHT
Collegian Reporter

As the farmer goes, so goes the economy, and the farming situation is now the worst it's been since the 1930s, according to Wilburn Levering, senior vice president of Merchant's National Bank in Topeka.

Farmers' net worth has dropped, according to Levering's assistant, John Price.

"Expenses for operating have gone up. The price of farm products in many cases are below what they were two years ago, before interest rates and cost of production went up," Price said.

The national prime interest rates have soared to 20 percent and Federal Land Banks interest rates have increased to 13 percent.

Dave Bennett, an executive secretary for the Kansas Livestock Association and lobbyist, said the problem lies in the business aspect of farming. Farmers are now experts in handling production, since each one produces food for about 60 people, however, not enough of them are good businessmen, Bennett said.

"Today it is a necessity to become better financial managers," he said.

ONE WAY BANKERS aid farmers is by helping them individually work out their cash flows and budgets to see if the farmer can repay a loan, Levering said.

A cash flow analysis is an attempt to place thoughts in the future, Price said.

"It's a guideline of where you hope to be," he said.

Farmers are asked to average their last 10 years of production, and to plan to produce a little under that average. Then the farmer is to set aside a budget reserve to be safe, Price said.

"You're just guestimating," he said.

New farmers need their cash flow questions answered, and the bankers can help because they have an understanding of what it will cost to produce products, Price said. Generally new farmers have some background in farming, which also helps in determining cash flow.

The farmers are asked to do their own cash flows and bring them in to go over with the banker, according to Levering. At Merchant's National Bank, he said about 20 of his 40 farm customers bring in their cash flows. The other 20 don't because they are either good enough managers and don't need advice, or refuse to do so, he said.

The biggest cash flow problem is having too much debt to service on land or equipment, Price said.

ALAN BELL, president of Citizen's Bank and Trust in Manhattan, said the majority of farmers don't run a season-to-season operating analysis and consequently don't know where they're headed.

"Most bankers will do everything they can to keep a farmer on his feet as long as there is potential down the road," because if communities grow and prosper so will banks, John Riley, associate professor of economics, said.

Making loans is not always the answer, however, according to Jim Mock, president of Kansas State Bank. He said giving some farmers a loan would be "like putting a nail in their coffin."

Banks want customers to survive, while protecting their deposits, Riley commented. The banks try to protect themselves by only making sound investments in farmers. If a bank can't recover money from a foreclosed farm, its capital is eaten into, he said.

FORECLOSURE RATES for 1982 will be up from 1 percent to 2 or 3 percent, according to Levering. This means of the 75,000 Kansas farms, 1,500 will be forced to foreclose this year.

According to Price, farms foreclose because of the high cost of production, poor grain and commodity prices for products.

Interest rates and inflation also contribute to the problem.

Farmers who do foreclose are generally the less efficient ones, "procrastination and lack of knowledge would be part of it (their inefficiency)," he said. They are the farmers who are less efficient in timeliness of planning, harvesting and marketing. Of any two farms, one will always be more efficient than the other, he added.

For new farmers the solution lies in working on an established farm or leasing property and equipment until they can afford their own, Riley said.

Bennett discouraged helping new people start farming. He said special programs help new farmers promote inefficiency by encouraging overproduction. This would discriminate against established producers, he said.

CURRENT GOVERNMENT programs to help farmers have only "dug a deeper hole" for farmers by promoting inefficient operations, Bennett said.

He said taxpayers are the ones helping to subsidize the farmers, consequently, the consumer has to pay more for food.

Currently, farmers are having a tough time generating enough cash to cover the interest rates on their debts, Riley said.

Farmers should re-finance their debts into longterm debts of 10 to 30 years, according to Riley. Longterm loans use equity, such as land and equipment, for collateral and decrease the amount the farmer needs to repay the bank annually by spreading it out over a longer period of time, he said.

Some farmers who started out 10 years ago, bought land and equipment and got along fine until 1980, Levering said, and now they simply can't generate enough cash to cover their debts.

Farming today "is certainly much more sophisticated" than it was 10 years ago, although some farmers don't operate with the soundness they could, according to Riley.

NOT ALL IS gloom and doom for farmers, however.

"The farmer today is more intelligent. He's got a better background in the tools of managing and marketing. He knows better how to combine resources to produce his products and he's striving to become more efficient in marketing," Riley said.

According to Bennett, the marketplace does and will work, even though the federal and state governments have tried their best to "mess it up with regulations and subsidies."

"We believe that the marketplace will straighten things out," he said, because it weeds out the inefficient producers.

Deregulation and reducing subsidies could help expand the producers' markets, he said, but this will only be accomplished by repealing laws already in existence, "which rarely happens."

When peoples' attitudes become more positive, things will begin to get better for agriculture, Levering said.

Karri McAdams...practicing with determination

Lifting benefits women

By MACK McCLURE
Collegian Reporter

They are pictured in Playboy, and featured in Sports Illustrated. They are seen throughout the country, including the K-State campus.

"They" are female body-builders and powerlifters. A number of them lift regularly at the Washburn Recreation Complex. The women have different and various reasons for wanting to improve their physical condition.

"I'm going for deep cuts and muscularity," said Karri McAdams, junior in computer science and a serious body-builder for the past year. Darcy Lindstrom, junior in journalism and mass communications, is McAdams' body-building partner and roommate.

"Karri told me that lifting weights would help reduce my weight," she said.

McAdams was right. Lifting weights reduced Lindstrom's weight.

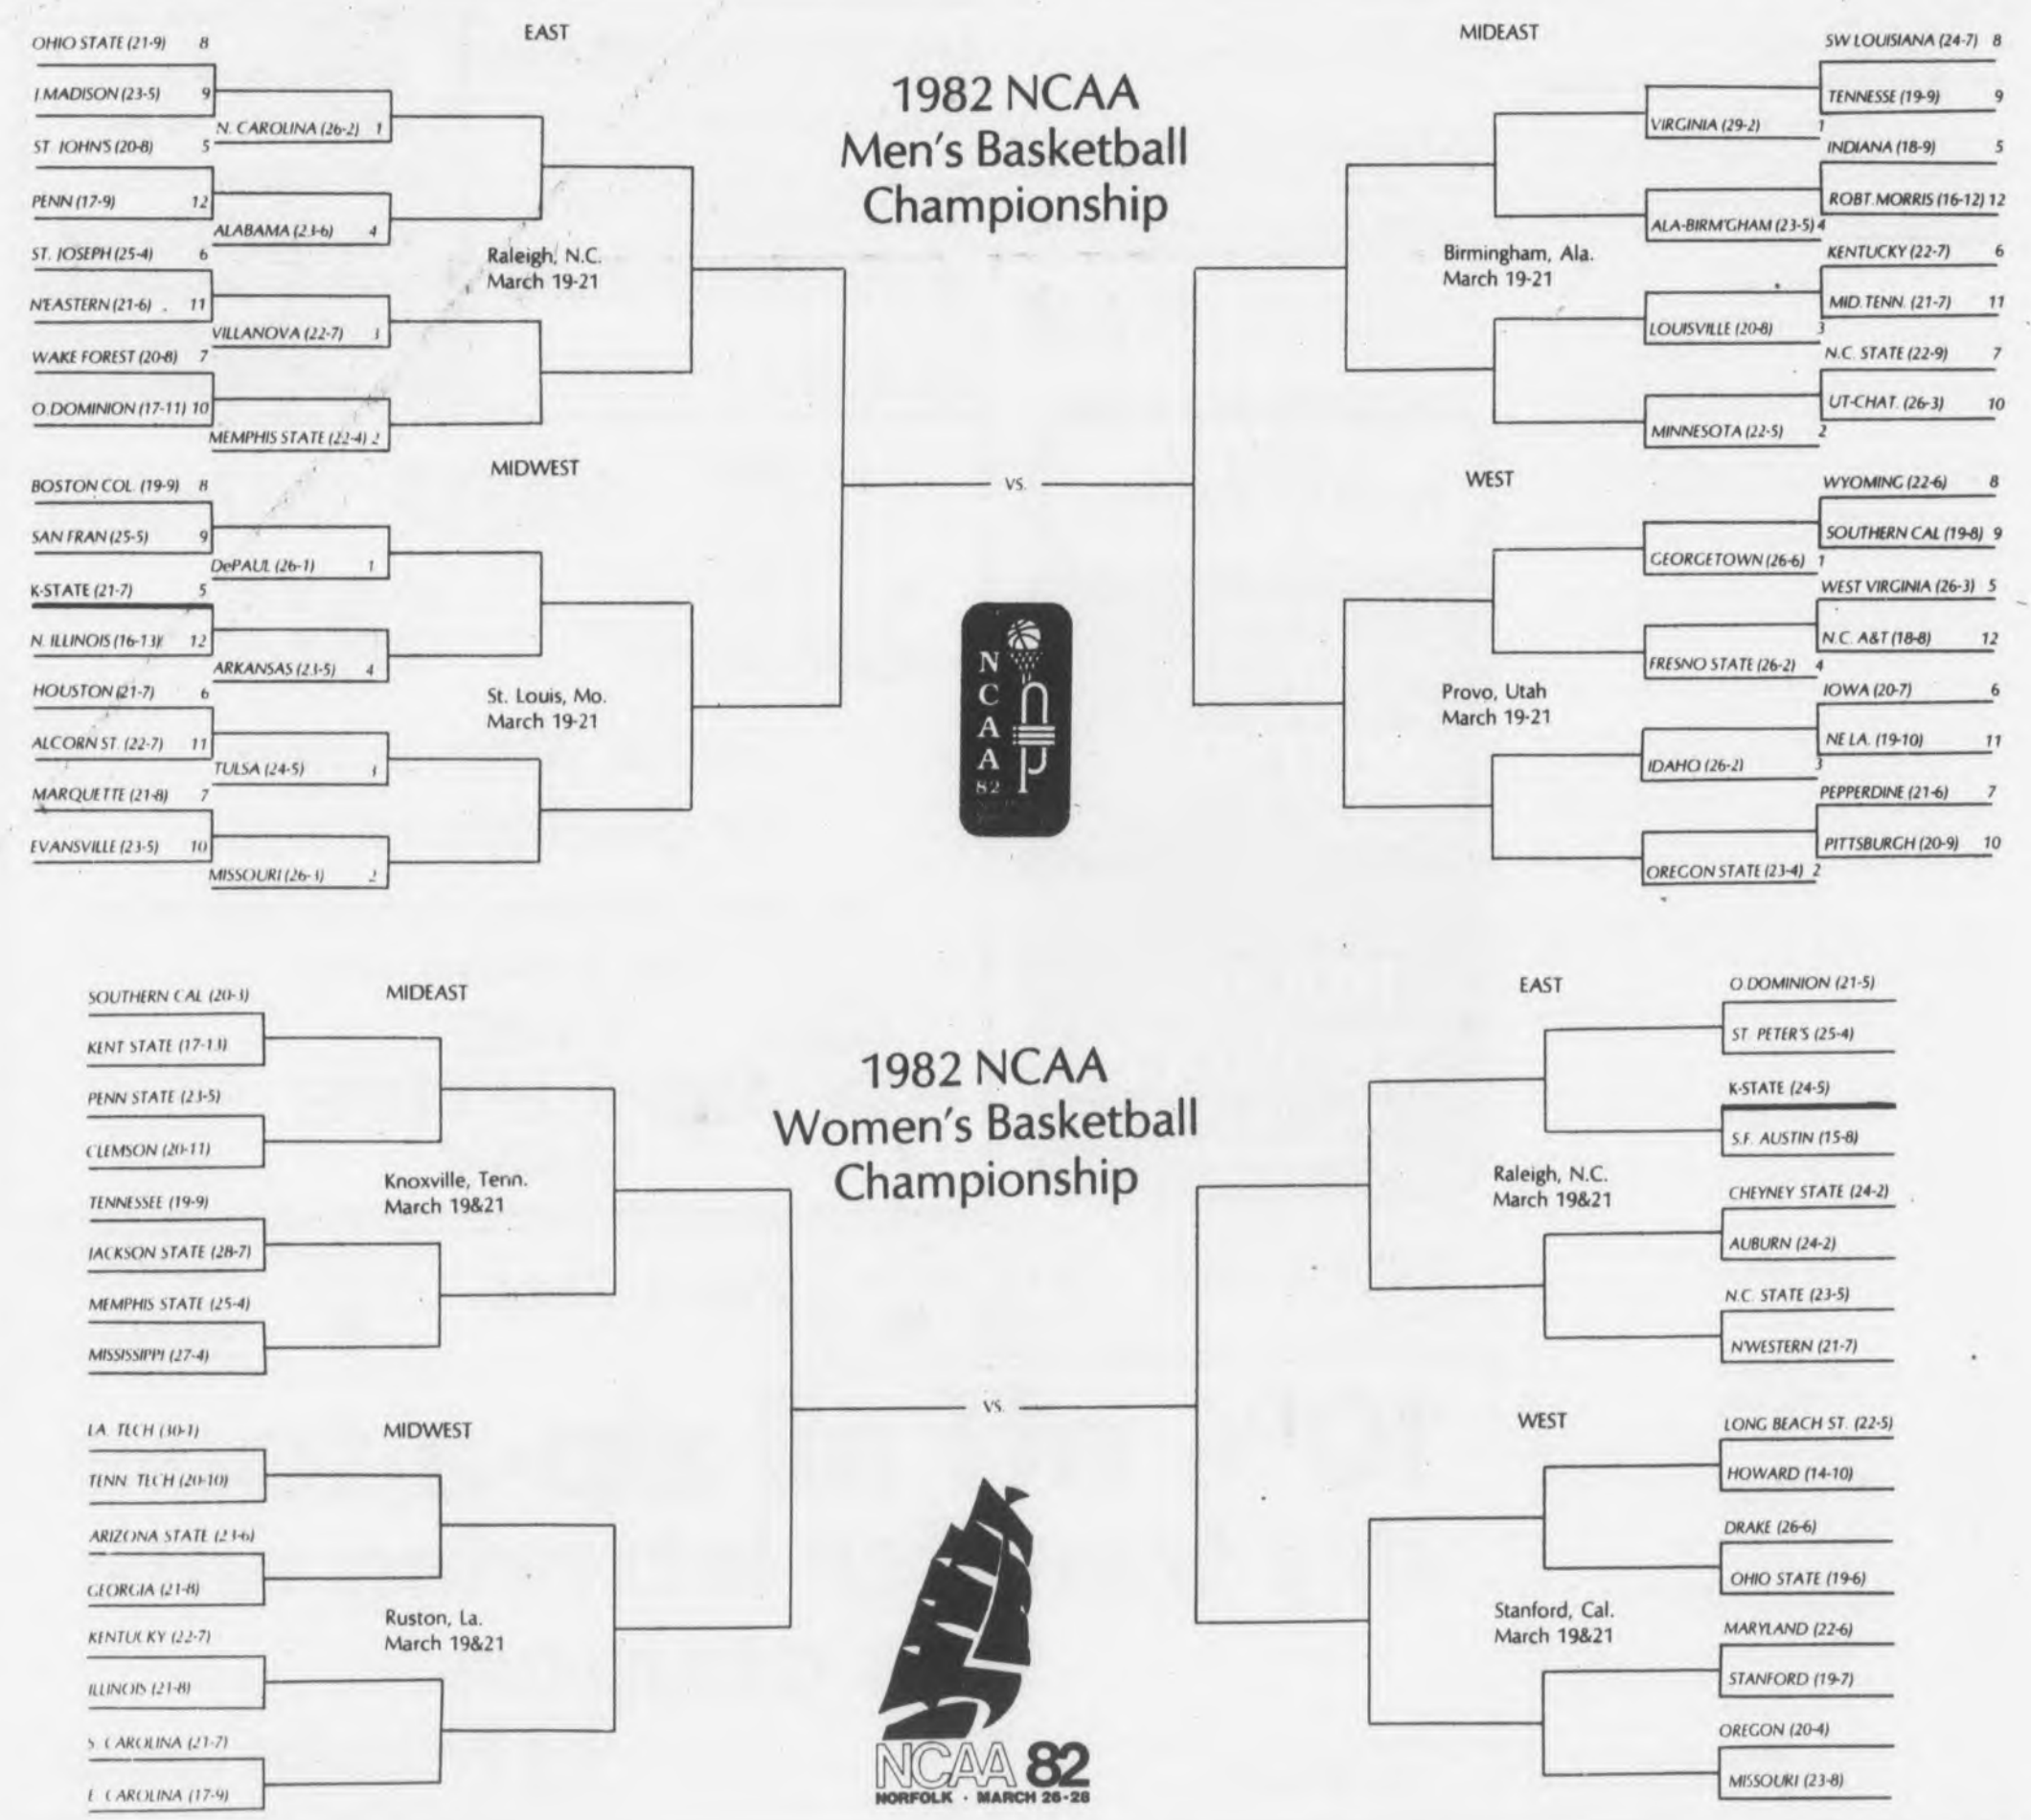
"I've lost 15 pounds. I'm not losing weight anymore, but I am losing inches of fatty tissue, which in turn is being replaced by muscle tissue," she said.

LINDSTROM HAS lost two and a half inches off each of her thighs and four inches off her hips. When she started body-building (six months ago), she stood 5-4, 135 pounds. She is now a toned 120 pounds.

The two women lift on Mondays, Tuesdays, Fridays and Saturdays, running on Wednesdays and Thursdays. Two of the days are spent working on the upper body (arms), and the other two for our lower body (legs), Lindstrom said.

"I lift for a total muscular look. I want definition in every muscle visible," Lindstrom said. "Yet, I want to keep a feminine look, I still want muscle definition, but I don't want big pectoral muscles or outstanding biceps, although Karri does."

McAdams said, "Body-building gives me a personal growth. My muscular growth keeps me going. I love the soreness from my workouts because I know then that I have worked out hard.



"I had a guy call me a freak the other day. It may turn some people off, but I don't care because I know what I want and what I'm going for and I'm gonna reach it," she added.

"My goal right now is to compete in the Miss Kansas competition this coming fall," she said.

STEVE COX, junior in electrical engineering, and Dan Johnson, junior in finance, expressed their views about women weight lifting.

"I think that if they keep it in reason and keep their femininity, it's fantastic. But if they carry it to the point that they're trying to compete like men for massive size and deep cuts, then I think it's repulsive," said Cox, an avid powerlifter and competitor.

(See WEIGHTLIFTING, p. 18)

Weightlifting

"I think that a women lifters have just as much right to build themselves as we men do. I don't think it takes away their femininity at all," Johnson said, between stations of his workout. "If not to get stronger, just toning their body is an asset to them, physically as well as asthetically. It might take away the traditional freshman spread."

Beth Anne Minor and Cristie Carriker, power lifting partners, have competed in meets in the past, along with Jamie Mock, sophomore in secondary health, physical education and recreation.

"We work out on a five-day schedule," Minor, sophomore in chemical engineering, said. "We work on the bench press on Monday and Friday, squats on Wednesday, back work (lateral pulldowns, wrist curls, seated rows) on Thursday and the dead lift on Saturday."

ALL THREE WOMEN competed in the Kansas state meet October and the Oklahoma City meet four weeks ago.

"I've lifted since last August, I became interested in powerlifting after I had bought magazines and read up on the sport," Carriker said. "Beth Anne and I help each other out in our lifts by yelling at each other. When you're trying to squat 180 pounds, then you need some encouragement."

Mock has improved her power lifts considerably over the span of one and a half years.

"I've improved my dead lift from 165 pounds to 265. I squated 192 pounds in the meet in Oklahoma City, which really pleased me." Her maximum squat when she started was 135 pounds.

Council is intermediary

Editor's note: This is the fourth in a series on K-State's judicial process.

By DEE ANNE HEADLEY
Collegian Reporter

Not a hearing body itself, Judicial Council serves as a stepping stone between the lower judicial boards and Tribunal, the appellate board.

The board has six members, each appointed to representa different group. The president of the Kansas State University Association of Residence Halls; presidents of Intrafraternity Council and Panhellenic Council (appointing one together); student body president (for off-campus students); Jardine Terrace Board of Mayors; Student Senate chairman and the director of Senate Operations Committee (appointing one together); and the Dean of Students make the appointments.

Each of the appointments is approved by Student Senate.

"The major function of Judicial Council is that it is responsible for assigning cases to the appropriate boards," said Steve Larkin, attorney general of the Student Governing Association (SGA), chairman of Judicial Council and graduate in history.

He said in his interpretation of the constitution, the council can dismiss cases and appeals which don't warrant a hearing. "When dealing with cases, we must keep in mind the disciplinary philosophy of the University and its primary goal of the personal growth and development of students,"Larkin said.

ANOTHER OF the council's main duties, he said, is to inform the University and the judicial boards about the judicial process.

"We are updating our pamphlet explainimg the SGA judicial system. We feel that it (information to students) has really been lacking in the past and we'd like to upgrade the level of information given to

Ahearn concert hiatus to end

J. Geils Band to appear April 19

By PETE MANFREDO
Collegian Reporter

The Ahearn rock-concert drought is over.

The J. Geils Band, whose recent album "Freeze Frame" has become No. 1 on the charts, will be performing April 19, in the field house.

Fritz Behrhorst, Union Programming Council Special Events chairman, said he had been going after the group since he found out in November they would be on tour.

"Hundreds of colleges across the country put in bids for Geils, so we had to really negotiate to get them here," Behrhorst said. "We had to increase our bids a number of times."

Ticket prices are on sale for $8.50, $8 and $7.50 for students, a dollar more for the general public. "Our ticket prices are an average of two dollars cheaper than anywhere else they're playing," Behrhorst said.

THE J. GEILS CONCERT will be the first major Ahearn production since Billy Joel in the spring of 1979. Behrhorst said that show sold 9,000 tickets and was considered successful. There are 9,500 available seats in Ahearn.

"This band is the most in-demand band on tour," Behrhorst said.

Barbara Burke, UPC program adviser, said she expects the concert to do well. "We knew we could get them to put us on their tour. It was routable and we made them an offer they couldn't refuse."

"To make sure we would get a show, we started working with Concert Ideas, which is a New York consulting firm that helps bring concerts to campuses. With their help we were able to secure J. Geils," Burke said. "Securing someone like J. Geils will make it easier to get other acts in the future."

THE J. GEILS BAND currently has the number one single "Centerfold" on the Billboard Charts and a second single "Freeze Frame" is in the Top 20.

The group started as the J. Geils Blues Band 15 years ago in Boston. Their first album in 1970 was a critical success, according to Rolling Stone magazine. A 1974 album bombed, putting the group into debt. They refused to give up and in 1980 the title track of "Love Stinks" boosted sales of the album to near-platinum.

"If this show sells out, there is the possibility of a free concert at the end of the year. It'll be on the order of the 'Welcome-Back Concert' — probably no big names," Behrhorst said. "Ideally, we would like to have one major concert a semester and if this one goes over well, we could be back in business."

Tickets can be purchased by mail orders postmarked no later than March 26. Tickets will be available for pick-up April 12 at the Union Ticket Office. There will be a limit of 20 tickets per order and one order per envelope. All seats are reserved.

Professor carries campaign against 'religious deception' to statehouse

By BETH BAKER
Collegian Reporter

After his daughter became involved with a religious group campaigning on campus, Frank Tillman, head of the Department of Industrial Engineering, began his own campaign against "religious deception." He is backing a bill that, if passed in Kansas, could have nationwide impact.

Tillman said his daughter was subject to "mind-control" and he has been trying to curtail the activities of groups that practice "religious deception." The bill he is promoting would "check these groups."

Joe Knopp (R-Manhattan), said the proposal is patterned after a similar bill that was passed twice by the New York State Legislature. He added that the governor vetoed the bill both times, claiming it to be unconstitutional.

The bill, according to Tillman, is "not meant to get after a person's beliefs but the illegal actions of groups." One purpose of the bill, he said, is to remove the possibility of parents being sued for removing their children from groups they believe to exercise "mind-control."

"The bill is simply for protection of the victim," Tillman said. "It is not trying to punish groups."

TILLMAN'S BILL provides for temporary guardianship of a person 18 years or older after all of several factors have been proven, according to Tillman. Another purpose of the bill "is to get children away from groups that exercise mind-control and to determine whether they (the groups) do exercise mind-control," he said.

The person would be evaluated by a professional in the field of psychology, Tillman said. It must be proven that he has undergone a substantial behavioral change and that the group has used coercion and deceptive practices.

A group must be shown to regularly and systematically misrepresent or commit other deceitful acts with respect to its true identity, Tillman said. It must be substantiated that the misrepresentation misled or could have misled the person regarding the organization's activities.

TILLMAN SAID his concern over certain groups arose after his daughter joined the local chapter of the Maranatha Campus Ministries International. Maranatha, which has its base in Gainesville, Fla., has grown to approximately 3,000 members on 52 American campuses during its 10-year existence.

Tillman said he first heard about the New York state bill when he attended a national convention of the Citizen's Freedom Foundation (CFF) in Tampa, Fla. CFF is composed of parents who have had children

Planet watchers

Members of a K-State astronomy class and interested others watched for the alignment of the nine planets early Wednesday morning atop Bluemont Hill. A book written in 1974, "The Jupiter Effect" predicted the overdose of lopsided celestial gravity would trigger wouldwide earthquakes, although the observers noticed no disasters.

Senate to discuss summer funding

Student Senate will vote tonight on the allocation of $42,000 for the operation of six services during the summer school session.

The Summer School Allocations Board has recommended that the Union receive $23,335; Student Publications — $5,000; Recreational Services — $4,700; Summer School Artist Series — $3,875; University for Man — $2,470; and K-State Players — $2,620.

Five-minute presentations will be given by 15 groups requesting funds from senate during tentative allocations for the 1982-83 school year. A representative from each group will explain the group's function and the activities it has done over the past year. The representative will also discuss how much money the group is requesting and why it needs the requested amount.

Last week 14 groups gave similar presentations.

The groups giving presentations tonight are: Associated Students of Kansas (a state lobbying organization for regents universities), ASK at K-State, Black Student Union, MEChA (a Chicano student organization), Puerto Rican Student Organization, Debate, Fine Arts Council, KSDB-FM Radio, Consumer Relations Board, International Coordinating Council (representing all foreign students), Crew, Parachute Club, Coalition for Human Rights, Vietnamese Student Association and the Infant and Child Care Center.

Geri Greene, senate chairman and junior in journalism and mass communications, said this is the first time Crew has requested senate funding. She said the Coalition for Human Rights was not granted funding last year.

The groups requesting funding must also make presentations to the Senate Finance Committee before tentative allocations begin in April, Greene said. She said finance committee will then make up tentative budgets to present to senate.

Senate will also vote to approve the appointments of the six chairmen of senate standing committees. Applications for the positions were taken from senators and non-senators.

The committees and those chosen as chairmen are: academic affairs — Stuart Jorgensen, junior in economics; communications — Heather Woodson, sophomore in political science; personnel selections — Jeff Dillon, sophomore in agricultural economics; senate operations — Lori Price, junior in accounting; state and community affairs — Scott Long, junior in journalism and mass communications; and student affairs — Paul Attwater, junior in economics.

Coronor confirms rumors of Belushi overdose

LOS ANGELES — Comedy star John Belushi died of an overdose of cocaine and heroin, the Los Angeles coroner announced Wednesday.

Coroner Thomas Noguchi said that Belushi died "due to intravenous injections of heroin and cocaine," and said that both drugs were found on the premises where he died.

Noguchi's secretary said that the coroner would comment on the results Thursday but would have no immediate comment.

The written announcement said that the medical investigation into Belushi's death has been completed.

The brief statment said, "The deceased died of an overdose due to intravenous injections of heroin and cocaine. Both the cocaine and heroin were found on the premises."

The 33-year-old comedy star was found dead in a rented bungalow last Friday.

Committee approves abortion proposal

WASHINGTON — The Senate Judiciary Committee on Wednesday approved a proposed constitutional amendment that would allow Congress and the state legislatures to prohibit or regulate abortion.

The 10-7 vote marked a major victory for foes of legalized abortion who have been sharply divided over how Congress should act to halt or reduce the 1.5 million abortions performed annually in the United States.

Never before have anti-abortion forces succeeded in pushing legislation through the full judiciary panel.

But the measures, sponsored by Sen. Orrin Hatch (R-Utah), face a tough battle on the Senate floor, where liberals have said they will use all parliamentary tactics including a filibuster to block passage.

"A right to abortion is not secured by this Constitution," says the proposal, which seeks to reverse the 1973 Supreme Court decision legalizing most abortions.

Congress and the states would have "concurrent power to restrict and prohibit abortion."

Diplomat: Martial law could last for years

WARSAW, Poland — Martial law in Poland "will last for months" and possibly years, a veteran Western diplomat said Wednesday.

"The trappings of martial law — the curfew, the restrictions on travel — could well be lifted," said the source, who requested anonymity. "But the fundamental reality — rule by military authority — could remain unchanged for a political generation."

Such a period, he said, would span at least 10 years.

The diplomat said no sustained, open opposition to martial law has been reported in Warsaw, and that he doubted the spring uprising predicted in some quarters would materialize.

"It's almost spring now, and I see no signs of rebellion in the making," he said.

He also said the addition this month of a fourth general to the Communist Party Politburo indicated the "deepening" military presence in Polish affairs of state.

The diplomat said the position of Polish leader Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski, who declared martial law Dec. 13, seems unassailable.

Police charge custodian in high school fire

RUSSELL — A 32-year-old custodian at Dorrance High School was charged Wednesday with setting a blaze that destroyed the school, Russell County Sheriff Gary Clark said.

Eugene Watkins, of Dorrance, was charged with one count of arson before District Judge Barry Bennington, Clark said. Watkins was being held in the county jail on $25,000 bond.

Watkins was taken into custody after helping firefighters battle the blaze early Tuesday, Clark said. Authorities were trying to determine a possible motive.

No one was injured in the fire, which caused more than $250,000 damage to the 65-yearold building.

Dorrance, in central Kansas 15 miles east of Russell, has a population of about 250 people.

Wholesale price reductions fuel local declines

LAWRENCE — Gasoline prices have fallen below $1 a gallon at three Lawrence service stations, reversing a trend started in late 1979 when the first $1-a-gallon gasoline appeared in Kansas.

How long the lower prices will last is anybody's guess.

"When this happens, you never know. It may be up tomorrow or it may last several weeks," said Charles Wood, owner of the Kerr-McGee franchise that operates two Lawrence stations.

Wood's two stations and the Lawrence Battery Co., managed by Ron Zeller, dropped the price for self-service regular gasoline to 99.9 cents a gallon this week.

"I think with the oil glut you have a lot of marketers dumping gasoline, and the wholesale (price) has been falling pretty fast in the last week. That's the main cause of it," Wood said.

Economic woes signal for revival

Check the attic or the local garage sales, the Hula Hoop is attempting a come-back.

The newest version, the Peppermint Hula Hoop with stripes and a peppermint scent, will undergo a reintroduction as the Grandson of Hoop. Time reports that the hoop will be a featured guest on The Dukes of Hazzard, one of the poorest trash offerings on the airwaves. Perhaps this nostalgic toy can survive such a promotion concept.

Wham-O, the toy's manufacturer, has analyzed the current economic woes as the perfect conditions to grab the fad followers. The Hula Hoop first gained popularity during the 1958 recession. The second version, the Shoop-Shoop complete with ball bearings for added sound effects, underwent a short-lived revival in 1967.

Females should anxiously watch the future role of the Hula Hoop. The next thing that could face resurrection, due to the economic gauges, just might be the miniskirt.

Reagan's foes offer few choices

Political campaigns for many national, state and local offices will be starting in the next few months.

Possibly the most important issue of the campaigns will be "Reaganomics" and the recession. In fact, many candidates will probably base their entire campaign against Reagan and his policies.

However, as the candidates decry their ideas, ask them if they have a real alternative. By not demanding specifics from the candidates, voters often find themselves unpleasantly surprised with their representatives.

Any idiot can criticize, but few can propose a realistic solution to the present problems. By hearing others' alternatives, the current programs and the current course of government does not seem to be off course.

Traditionally, all candidates pledge to fight waste and cut government spending. However, they rarely say where they will cut. Almost all government programs have strong constituents who become vocal if some Congressman dares to eye their sacred cow.

Most agree that government spending needs to be cut. As we are seeing today, what is easy to say on the campaign trail is not as easy to do in Congress.

Cruising down Memory Lane

Memories. Cruising down beside the Potomac toward Mt. Vernon. Laughing, drinking, talking with good friends (and some not-so-good friends). Life. No worries... no responsibilities...

Could it be true that you only remember the good times?

I don't think so. I think you remember the good times as well as the bad. We had both, my friends and I, and both seemed to pour out on our midnight drives along the Potomac.

Actually, we didn't start out beside the Potomac. We sort of worked our way up to it.

We were deprived high schoolers. Whereas most Kansans I know had the pleasure, the excitement, the experience of dragging main street on a Friday night, we didn't. Arlington, Va., simply doesn't have a Main Street, USA for draggin. We had to settle for back roads.

In 10th grade, we found what we called "Gol Dang Road" (Kirby Road). Gol Dang Road was a winding, binding, twirling stretch of pavement that could drive adrenalin through you. God it was exciting! We would drive just fast enough to glimpse death in each turn, yet well enough to avoid such a fate.

THINKING BACK, I don't know why we spent so much time pursuing the twists and curves of that road. I guess we saw it as an inexpensive night out with friends.

As I progressed in school, I went on to bigger and better roads. We graduated from the dark and empty Gol Dang Road, to the more interesting and even beautiful, George Washington Memorial Parkway. It wound down past an airport (you could see the monument's reflections on the river), through old-town Alexandria and on out to Mt. Vernon. Out of respect for the father of our country, we never did rename this road.

The talks we had. We analyzed everything from national policy to high school proms. We were experts on love. We were experts on everything.

We were even experts on the energy crisis.

The memories.

I REMEMBER THE summer after my freshman year — we would get up at 5 a.m. to sit in line for gas. I could never keep straight whether the license number was odd or even or on which days we could go to what stations. There was so much to keep track of.

Let's see, the green flags meant that there was gas, the red flags meant the station had unleaded (or was that premium?) ... the Black Flag meant no more roaches. Oh, I'm sorry, that's a different memory.

I don't, however, remember the price of gas. I know that my bank account sunk deeper each time I had to fill up my 15.2 gallon Volvo tank. I know gas had to be more than a dollar but beyond that I'm lost.

(I wonder sometimes how all these old people have such fantastic memories. Why, they can remember paying a nickel for a soda or a candy bar back in the "good ole days." I barely remember what I had for supper last night or what assignment is due when).

BUT I REMEMBER the gas lines.

We stumbled sleepily to the car and drove off to a predetermined station. It had to be on the way to work and comparatively inexpensive.

We often analyzed — is it better to leave the car running, or do you use less gas if you turn the car on and off each time you move up three feet? All I was really concerned with was how to sleep in the back seat of a Camaro without looking like I'd slept in the back seat of a Camaro.

During those bi-weekly pilgrimages to the pump, I had time to reflect on high school foolishness. Was it our fault there was a gas shortage? Weren't oil companies hording the fuel? And then there was always some oil-rich sheik who could be blamed for high prices.

Then I recalled those careless rides to Mt. Vernon, the jaunts down Gol Dang Road (memory lane). We burned up gallons of gas in those years as did most high schoolers.

I read in the newspapers that gas prices will go down soon — possibly less a dollar. I can't remember the last time gas was less than a dollar.

My immediate thoughts were of the freedom I would have to cruise Tuttle Creek Blvd. in my dilapidated chariot of the flat tires. With the somewhat indefinite warming trend, I would like nothing better.

But the lines creep into my mind — the realization that the thrill of a gas glut cannot last forever. Surely people won't return to their wasteful, thoughtless habits. We learned that lesson once. We're an intelligent society that learns from our mistakes.

Gregg Coonrod

A timeless visit to the Zone

"A place without time, without space, without dimension. A place where fears of being late, without a wrist watch, drive men to do the bizzare, the peculiar. This is a place called 'The Twilight Zone'."

-imitation Rod Serling producer of "The Twilight Zone"

As I sat at my desk Friday afternoon blow drying my watch I knew how it was going to be. Without my wrist watch I feel funny, different like I'm always behind or late. It's hard to explain but for anyone who has had a watch and then all of a sudden doesn't — it's an eerie feeling. The world is different, one of your perceptions of it (time) has been surpressed. The watch is no longer a slave to the bending of your wrist. Sounds like an episode for "the Twilight Zone".

There it was, on my desk, with my Conair Pro 1000 blowing hot air all over it. It's a Gruen. Sharp looking thing, silver case and band, with a brownish-silver face and real numbers, not those Roman things that always confuse people when they're upside down or turned sideways. It's also supposed to be waterproof and shock resistant.

I DID MY LAUNDRY Friday afternoon. I hadn't washed my clothes in two weeks and my sweat pants were calling me by name. When I loaded the machines I recognized some shirts I'd forgotten I owned and some I'd forgotten I had borrowed from someone I forgot. I tossed on a little "Fresh Start", which I definitely needed. The machine went into a high pitched whirl, but I was too vague to notice. Anyway, the characters never do on "the Twilight Zone."

How was I, a young unassuming college buff, supposed to know that machine No. 3 contained more than just 14 pairs of underwear, all from Sears; 20 pairs of tube socks, mostly from Sears; four hankerchieves with the little seams in them that rip the skin off around your nose (masochist nose wipes) from Sears, one white button down and two white t-shirts from, where else, Sears. My dad works for Sears and we get a 15 percent discount on everything except gas. I call it my "White Collection de Sears."

DURING THE UNLOADING procedure I found it. The situation seemed to be appropriate with the way things had been running that week. It was an omen, a "Zone" premonition. I had lost my checkbook the week before. My gloves and my scarf checked out on the same day. Then I had to spend $2.28 on a roll of film for Photo I to take one picture of a lousy white card because I'd taken one too many pictures on the other roll. For the usually cool and collected Coonrod it was, to say the least, not fun. The big brain bender, however, was missing lunch for five consecutive days. The old record was one.

When I saw my watch in the washer I figured I might as well run it through the dryer just to finish it off and bug the house mom. Then I stopped to consider the fact that it might still be breathing, but I had no clue of what to do. I couldn't pour the water out and who knows what damage occurred during the spin cycle.

AFTER CLIMBING the stairs I knew I'd have to do something before it was too late. I decided to dry it out. So I whipped out the old Conair and went to work. (You busy Gregg? No, come on in Bryant, I'm just blow drying my watch.)

That's when it really struck me — no more watch! That odd sense of timelessness between classes came over me. I could see myself running like a drug addict from one clock to the next, stopping complete strangers on the street and asking "Does anybody really know what time it is?" (great song).

But it's not like I haven't dealt with such adversity before. I had another watch. A John Cameron Swazye Timex. It was one of those ever-so-tough, mid-1970's black leather wrist bands which was held on by these little snaps that, whenever I got into a wrestling match or the wind blew, came undone and the watch proceeded to do its own thing.

BUT I'D HAD an incredible amount of luck with my Timex. It always came home. That was until one night in the middle of an awesome snowball fight a snow drift ate it. It was a hard two weeks until I got my new Gruen, or Ernie as I sometimes call it.

After twenty minutes with the Conair some water had seeped out and my hopes lifted. I stood the hair dryer up so I didn't have to hold it and left. It worked but it still had a little cloud inside the crystal.

Down at the jewelry store the young lady told me it would only take a couple of days to repair if there was only water in the crystal but as much as two weeks if there was rust on the inside. I told her to do whatever it takes and went out to live my pre-destined "Twilight Zone" with a naked wrist.

I have been waiting for someone to say "Why did you wash your watch?" so I can reply "Hey, it was dirty." Then I'd ask for their IQ.

So if you have a dirty wrist watch be careful how you clean it or it might end up in a washing machine "Twilight Zone". Doody-dodo-doody-dodo-doody-dodo-doody-dodo-doody-dodo...

Smokers protest new restrictions

Editor,

'Tis the season for a protest. Since the rights of smokers have been infringed upon by the Union doubling the size of its non-smoking areas, it is time for the smoking proletariat to band together and overthrow non-smoking bourgeoisie oppression: Smokers unite. Bill belong to groups that exercise "mind-control" and parents whose children are still members of those groups.

"This is not a religious issue," Tillman said, "but is a mind-control issue... it's getting after groups who do not give full disclosure of their activities."

According to Tillman, the bill is not unconstitutional because other state laws cover fraud and deceit and "we simply are focusing the same protection on this type of activity."

"The only ones who have anything to fear from this bill are the groups who practice unlawful things," he said, adding that parents can only try once to remove their child from such a group. "You get one hearing and after that you can't use it (the bill) for harrassment."

KNOPP SAID the bill is designed to address the problem of a person who has been brought into a group through deception and then manipulated. The bill allows the parents guardianship for 30 days.

Ivan Sand, Riley County republican, said he supports the passage of the bill.

"I approve of the bill," he said. "All we're trying to do is, if young people are joining up with these groups, help them escape that type of slavery." Sand added he couldn't see a parent going to "these extremes" if a child had just made a different religious change.

Erick Nilson, advisor for Campus Crusade for Christ and professor of agronomy, said although he wasn't familiar with the provisions in the bill, "when family members are under the influence of cults — cults use deceit and other practices to influence and control people which are not attributes of Christianity.

"The family unit was established by God," Nilson said, "and legislation should provide continued opportunity by parents to carry out their responsibilities in matters that affect the family unit."

NOT EVERYONE is in favor of the bill.

Mike Godwin, staff member of Maranatha Christian Assembly in Manhattan, said he attended house meetings when the bill was debated.

"Some arguments against the bill are the same as I have," he said. "The intent I am all for is to get people out of cults, but the infringement on adults' rights of association and freedom of conscience — those things are being violated by this bill."

According to Godwin, there was no legal way to take a person out of a group that the person willfully joined.

"All the constitutional lawyers were against it (the bill)," he said. "You know they don't like cults either — neither do I. No congressman in his right mind would want to be identified as 'pro-cult'."

IF PASSED, the bill will have no affect on Maranatha, Godwin said.

"It won't affect us (Maranatha) because of the conditions that have to be met. Our group is not anything like that. We're not isolating students from school or parents," he said.

The American Civil Liberties Union has made public statements opposing the bill. Lyman Baker, Kansas affiliate president and professor in English, said, "This bill which has been introduced in a number of other states violates First Amendment religious freedoms, privacy values that lie behind the Fourth and Fifth Amendments, and the due process guaranteed in the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments.

"We do not have a clear concept of mind-control," Baker said. "One symptom of peoples' confusion about the concept of mind-control, or at least about the proper limits of its application, is that none of the people who are willing to deprive an individual of his liberty under this bill on the grounds that he has been deprived of his free will, are willing to accept an appeal to the same concept of mind-control as a defense in a criminal prosecution."

JEREMIAH GUTMAN, New York state affiliate president of ACLU, also opposes the bill. According to Tillman, Gutman has been a lawyer for the Unification Church and Reverend Sun Myung Moon, along with setting up conferences for that church.

David Clark, counselor for people who have been involved in religious groups across the United States, said Tillman's claim concerning Gutman's activities was true. Clark added that "professionally and ethically there would seem to be a conflict of interest there."

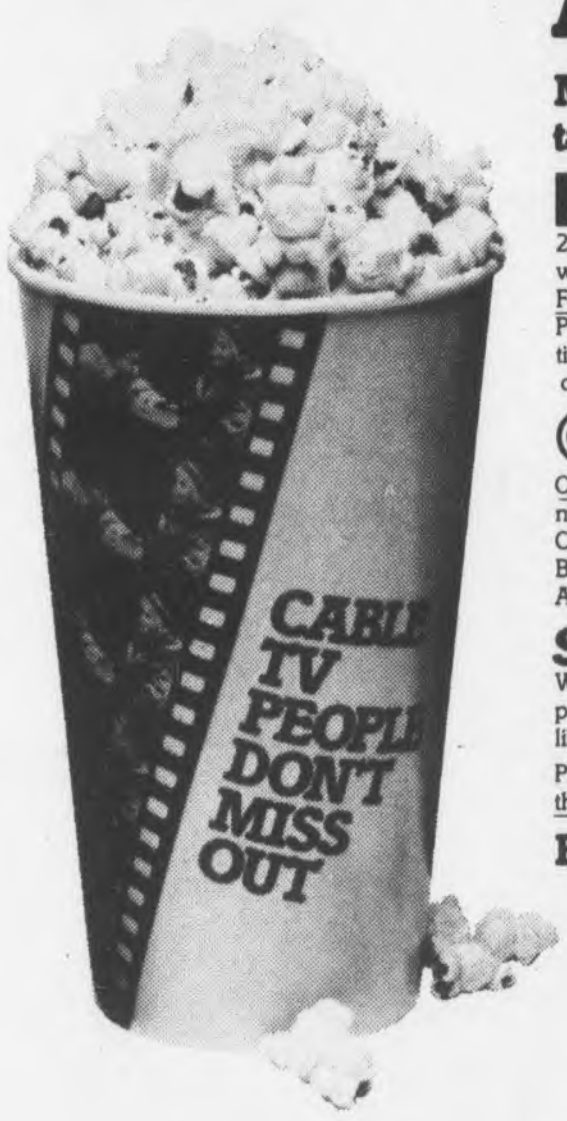
In a phone conversation with Gutman, he said he represents "a lot of religious groups" as a lawyer and those representations have nothing to do with his work for the ACLU.

"I don't set up conferences for the Unification Church," Gutman said. But he added that he has spoken on the subject of law at conferences sponsored by that church.

THE ACLU DEFENDS the rights of everyone under the constitution, according to Baker, and "often those rights come under attack in connection with specific individuals or groups that are highly unpopular with the general public."

Tom Irwin, president of KSU Bible Study, said his biggest concern with the bill is the possibility of its usage to discriminate against "an individual who has had sincere positive behavioral changes which may be perceived by others to be detrimental."

Tillman said there was the possibility of the bill being instrumental in helping to "keep some groups out of Kansas or they might be reluctant to come here."



The bill, number 2688, recently was passed in the House of Representatives by a vote of 97 to 28, according to Knopp. He said the bill will come before the Senate Judiciary Committee March 15 or 16.

students involved in the judicial process at the lower levels," Larkin said.

He saidone of council's current projects is planning a spring workshop for the upper boards, which are Tribunal, Judicial Council and Student Review Board.

"It will be an educational program to familiarize the boards with the specific procedures, rights and responsibilities they have," Larkin said. "The second phase will be in the fall, and it will be an intensive education program for the in-house boards."

John Friel, judicial affairs coordinator, council member and graduate in education, explained, "We (Judicial Council) now see it as more profitable to train the SGA (higher) boards. Then we'll plan for the training of the lower boards next fall. Many lower boards are not elected in time to be trained this year."

The bylaws of the constitution state that one of the duties of Judicial Council is to "recommend changes in jurisdiction, procedures, court organization and other matters." Larkin said one of the goals of the council this year is to review and revise the constitution and bylaws.

FRIEL SAID, "There are inconsistencies in the system as well as things that need to be deleted or changed. We're also looking at the duties of the boards, clarifying procedures and adding things that have developed that need to be addressed. We're looking at how procedures are currently being followed and looking at the by-laws to see if they need to be changed to fit what's being done," he said.

The most glaring additions that need to be made include a set of guidelines outlining the basis for appeals and procedures to follow in an appeal hearing, Friel said.

Senate passes bill stiffening penalties for drunk driving

TOPEKA (AP) — In an effort to reduce what one lawmaker called "carnage" on state roadways, the Kansas Senate unanimously passed and sent to the House on Wednesday a bill stiffening penalties for drunken driving.

Approval of the measure, on a 40-0 vote, came during a daylong session and under pressure of a deadline for consideration of most bills by their house of origin.

The bill would set, for the first time in Kansas, a mandatory minimum sentence for any conviction of drunken driving and prohibit plea bargaining arrangements to escape a charge of driving while intoxicated.

In 1980, 226 people were killed in alcohol-related traffic accidents in Kansas — about 38 percent of all fatal accidents, according to the Highway Patrol.

As passed, the bill would require:

—A mandatory three-day jail sentence for first convictions of driving while intoxicated (DWI) unless the person agrees to complete an alcohol education or treatment program; a $350-$500 fine; and restriction of the person's driver's license.

—A mandatory 90-day jail sentence for a second DWI conviction; $500 $1,000 fine; and one-year driver's license suspension. The jail sentence could be lowered to five days if the persons agrees to complete an alcoholism treatment program.

—A mandatory 90-day jail sentence for a third DWI conviction with no provision for it being reduced; $1,000-$2,500 fine; and revoking of a person's driver's license for one year.

Meat teams take honors at Houston

The meats judging team has returned from a weekend of competition at the Houston Livestock Show. The team members divided themselves into two groups and competed as the purple and white teams.

The purple team placed third overall in the contest. The team took first honors in the special award beef judging and grading contest. They placed first in beef judging, second in beef grading and fourth in pork judging. In individual placings Scott Schaake, sophomore in animal science, ranked sixth.

The white team placed 12th overall and eighth in lamb judging, according to Michael Dikeman, team coach and professor of animal science.

The Houston contest is the last national contest of the season for the team. "That is all for this season for the K-State judging teams (meats, livestock, and wool) on a national level. The livestock team may compete in a regional contest as a kind of practice contest at the University of Missouri," he said.

"I think overall, we (the three teams) did quite well. We have had better semesters. We've had a good season but we have our standards set pretty high," Dikeman said.

A presentation of voice... K-State music professors: tenor Jerry Langenkamp, mezzo-soprano Shirley Moore, soprano Jean Sloop and baritone William Myers perform in a Faculty Vocal Quartet in All Faith's Chapel.

Faculty artist series offers students varied music learning opportunity

By TANYA BRANSON
Staff Writer

It's the faculty version of a Nooner, on a formalized basis. Instead of the Catskellar filled with students, the Faculty Artist Series at All Faith's Chapel provides the forum for music professors to display their talent.

The Faculty Artist Series is a music department program in which professors perform their music specialty. The series this spring consists of eight performances, though the number varies from semester to semester, according to Jerry Langenkamp, associate professor of music.

"Most music faculty members are expected to perform. The idea of having a mature singer, pianist provides a model for young students, something to go by or imitate," Langenkamp said.

The series has featured music faculty with varied musical talents — organ, piano, brass quintet, trombone, oboe and recorder.

LANGENKAMP participated in the most recent series concert Sunday when a vocal quartet performed three pieces to a small crowd of students.

The songs were well-sung and Langenkamp's tenor voice combined with soprano Jean Sloop, associate professor of music; mezzo-soprano Shirley Moore; and baritone William Myers, instructor of music.

A German song by Brahms started the afternoon, followed by Six Chansons by Paul Hindemith. The recital ended with the lively Act IV of the opera Rigoletto by Giuseppe Verdi.

The audience attending the program was comprised primarily of music listening lab students.

"The audience varies a great deal from work to work and Sunday's are relatively small audiences," Langenkamp said.

"Music listening lab provides a lot of audience for every recital. They give a steady percent of people," he said.

MUSIC LISTENING lab students are required to go to a certain number of concerts during the semester — student and faculty. The faculty recital series counts toward the requirement. Students go to the concert, listen and then write their comments in a report.

"We as faculty are interested in their comments. We are interested in making music appreciated by not only the fellow faculty but our own students," Langenkamp said. "And sometimes they don't like it."

The purpose of Music Listening Lab is to "try to interest students in some body of knowledge they don't know much about."

The lab exposes students without a strong musical background to a variety of music, Langenkamp said.

Langenkamp said he is aware that students are required to be at the concerts but as a professor he knows it is his job to sell his knowledge and interest students.

Other regulars at the recital series are Manhattan residents. The Manhattan music scene is busy, he said, and a number of residents are devoted recital-goers.

The final recital in this semester's series features Myers in a solo performance. It will be held at 3 p.m., March 28 in All Faith's Chapel.

Theater plans three plays for summer

The way to fame and fortune may be paved for students through professional experience in Manhattan this summer.

Lewis Shelton, assistant professor of speech, plans to establish a repertory theater program for this summer. The project, in the planning for several years, was encouraged by interest exhibited in last summer's theater department production "On Golden Pond," according to Shelton.

Although the program is geared toward students, the speech department and the community, it leans toward the student's benefit, Sheldon said.

"We lose students because of no summer program. We need to offer students more opportunities and make K-State more attractive for students to come here," he said.

Each participant will be awarded a scholarship of about $500. All will be have to enroll in six hours of summer school courses taught by the three directors.

Directors are Shelton, artistic director, John Uthoff, technical and scene director, and Lydia Asenta, costumer. Tenessee Williams' "The Glass Menagerie," David Manet's "Sexual Perversity in Chicago," and Milan Stitt's "The Runner Stumbles," are the scheduled productions.

The company will include four men and women actors and technical workers — a shop carpenter, costumer, property master and costumer/stage manager.

Shelton chose the plays, which will be presented in the Purple Masque Theatre. Money collected for tickets will fund scholarships, he said. The plays will run from June 30 to July 29.

Manhattan's summer activiies may lessen support for the fledgling company, he said. But, "we will do it modestly, do quality work," and hope to expand a little more each year, he said.

Manhattan artist shows work in Topeka

By JULIE MAH
Collegian Reporter

Chicken heads and a shower of eggs enabled Richard Kinsman, Manhattan artist, to become a finalist in the Kansas Two art competition.

Kinsman is one of 22 artists whose works will be on display until March 12, in the Kansas Judicial Center in Topeka. Following the exhibition in Topeka, selected works will travel the state as part of "The Traveling Visual Arts Program" sponsored by the Kansas Arts Commission.

"I feel pretty honored," Kinsman said.

Two of Kinsman's artworks were selected for exhibition. "One is entitled 'Strange Weather We're Having'," he said. "It's a surreal scene where it's raining eggs on people with chicken heads. To me, it was my statement on the world the way it is."

The other was a narrative piece entitled "Idle Chatter," he said.

"It's of my mother and two of her friends. They're chatting and having coffee," Kinsman said.

BOTH OF THE ENTRIES were done in batik.

Batik is "a process of putting dye and wax on fabric," he said.

"It's an ancient oriental art and was originally used to manufacture fabric to wear. I've worked with batik for 13 years."

Kinsman uses an unusual batik method, he said.

"I combine the dye bath with painting on the fabric," he said. "Traditonally they submerged the whole piece in dye bath. In actuality, I've crossed over into watercolor."

Kinsman said knows of no one else who does this type of batik.

"I wanted to make it more of an art form than a craft," he said. "I guess no one else thought of it. I've taken it further than anyone has. I've had people like university professors in art and art historians tell me that I've come on to a new art form. They've never seen what I can do with it."

KINSMAN WAS BORN in Munich, Germany. He moved to Manhattan from Vienna, Va., in September. Kinsman discovered Kansas through visits with his parents who reside in Manhattan.

"I decided what I really wanted to do right now is paint the scenery of Kansas," he said. "I'm into surrealism right now and am very interested in the landscape around Kansas. It lends itself to surreal work. I like to do a lot of surreal."

Doing surreal work means never taking anything at face value, according to Kinsman.

"The longer you look at it, the more you see," he said.

Batik isn't the only medium Kinsman works in. He also does oil paintings and majored in interior design at Virginia Commonwealth University.

"After I left college I did residential and commercial interior design during the day and my artwork at night," he said. "I've been doing artwork full-time for six years. I've been very busy with commissions."

Commissions Kinsman has done include a six-by-20 foot mural for a restaurant. He has also designed the interior for a discotheque in Nashville, Tenn.

HIS WORK is influenced by many things, according to Kinsman.

"There are so many different things that can touch off ideas and inspirations," he said. "Just the total surroundings, seeing what other artists have done, and things I've learned through emotions. You must act like a sponge to a certain degree."

Kinsman said his favorite artists were from the Impressionistic period.

"I'm influenced by Gauguin, Van Gogh and Picasso," he said. "I'm also influenced by Dali who does surreal work."

Kinsman is entered in two other competitions in the state. One is the Mid-Four, an annual juried art exhibition at the Nelson Art Gallery-Atkins Museum in Kansas City, Kan. The other is a small oil painting exhibition sponsored by the Wichita Artists Association in Wichita.

Although entering Kansas is still a relatively new experience for Kinsman, he hopes to utilize Kansas landscape in more of his artwork.

"This (exhibition) is one of the first," he said. "I'm inspired by Kansas. It's so vast and open."

'Jukebox Dury' offers LP treat

By KENT HERMES
Collegian Reviewer

Another name to add to the list of performers you either hate or find refreshingly creative — Ian Dury. Not everyone is amused by his British working-class satire, his high-pitched screams and under-mixed narrative mumblings.

But for the loyal blockheads, "Jukebox Dury," named after the BBC program "Jukebox Jury," is a feast of classic and rare — here anyway — cuts from previous albums.

The album is a collection of his Stiff hits that gained him notice in Europe, "Wake Up and Make Love To Me," "Reasons To Be Cheerful (Part 3)," and "Sex, Drugs & Rock and Roll."

Some other tunes you'll never hear on normal radio like "Been Some Clever Bastards" and "I Want To Be Straight" make this LP a treat.

Kappa Alpha Psi takes basketball title

By JOEL TORCZON
Collegian Reporter

Former K-State basketball standout Glenn Marshall scorched the nets for a game-high 26 points to pace the Kappa Alpha Psi fraternity to a 55-46 thumping of the Fried Squids in the finals of the all-University playoffs Wednesday night in the Washburn Recreation Complex.

The Kappa's victory in the men's division concluded a lengthy playoff format in which there are three other divisional winners.

After a slow start in which neither team scored in the first five minutes, Marshall, a senior in social science, warmed things up by accounting for six points en route to an early 14-9 lead.

Mark Raaf, junior in animal science and industry, brought the Fried Squids to within two points, 14-12, on a three-point play. But as it turned out, it was to be their closest margin for the rest of the game.

Marshall unleashed two long bombs from uptown to boost the lead to six points, 20-14, before Chuck Wilson, senior in agricultural education, tipped in a shot to close the gap to four.

Kevin Gardenhire, junior in social science, replayed Marshall's act by swishing two longe-range jumpers capped off by another Marshall bomb to score six straight unanswered points and take a commanding 26-16 half-time lead.

The second half opened with both teams trading baskets in an intense seesaw battle until the score stood at 40-30.

Dexter Bohn, senior in industrial engineering, pumped in back-to-back field goals capped by a freethrow to bring Fried Squid to within five points, 40-35, their closest margin in the second half.

Marshall dashed the Squid's hopes of a comeback bid by popping in two more buckets, running the Kappa's lead to 44-35, a lead which was never relinquished en route to a 55-46 victory.

"We played real well as a team," Marshall said. "We wanted it (All-University Championship) real badly and we got it — it's a real thrill."

Asked about his hot performance, Marshall shrugged and said, "I was just taking the shot whenever I had a good chance."

Gardenhire had 10 points to finish second behind Marshall in scoring. James Johnson, graduate in entomology, finished with nine.

Wilson led a balanced scoring attack for the Fried Squids pouring in 13 tallies, while Raaf and Bohn were not far behind with 12 and 10 points respectively.

The Kappa's represented the fraternities in the All-University playoff while the Fried Squids were one of the two independent squads.

The other independent group, the P.E. Majors, were ousted Tuesday night in the semifinals by the Kappa's, while the Fried Squids defeated Marlatt 6 that same evening. Marlatt 6 was the representative team of the residence halls.

The three other division playoffs culminated last Monday, March 8. The Breakers took the women's division championship, defeating the Hot to Trotters. The 69er's captured the 6-foot and under men's division title defeating Deke's. The Pinkettes were the Co-Rec champions, as they topped the Fishermen.

Baseball squad tops Benedictine

For the K-State baseball team, winning games has become an easy task.

The Wildcats proved that Wednesday as they trounced Benedictine College in a double header, 17-6 and 10-5.

In the first game, the 'Cats, now 5-0, won easily collecting 17 runs off of 13 hits. Scott Pick, Brian Barlow and Kent Schaede each had homers for the 'Cats. Glen Perry, Barlow and Joe Goedart each tripled in the game.

The winning pitcher for K-State was Glen Perry. Perry gave up only seven hits and five runs in five innings before being replaced by Tony Smith.

Due to darkness, the Wildcat's only played four innings in the second game, which they won 10-5. Perry proved that his .750 batting average is for real, as he had a homer for the 'Cats. The winning pitcher was Tony Smith who gave up three hits and two runs in two innings.

K-State's next game will be today at 1:30 p.m. against Sterling College at Frank Myers Field.

Senator resigns, maintains innocence

WASHINGTON (AP) — Harrison A. Williams Jr. resigned Thursday after 23 years in the Senate, vowing that "history and Almighty God will vindicate me" even as his colleagues were poised to cast him out in the first expulsion since the Civil War.

"It is with sorrow that I leave good friends," the New Jersey Democrat said in a final address that once more asserted his innocence in the Abscam bribery and conspiracy case for which a federal jury convicted him last year.

Williams, 62, was the only senator among seven members of Congress ensnared by the undercover investigation. He was also the last to leave office. Rep. Michael Myers, (D-Pa.) was ousted by the House; the others either resigned or were defeated for re-election.

WILLIAMS SPOKE for 23 minutes, saying quietly at the end: "I announce my intention to resign. I know I broke no laws...I believe time, history and Almighty God will vindicate me.

"I leave in good spirits, in good heart and with strong resolve," Williams told the packed chamber, vowing to pursue his fight for exoneration through the federal appeals court. He was sentenced last year to three years in prison and fined $50,000.

"I have fought the good fight," he said, quoting the Bible. "I have finished my course. I have kept the faith."

Then, one Democrat after another walked to his desk to share the farewell. Jeanette Williams watched from the gallery, seated next to the radio evangelist, the Rev. Carl McIntire, who had long supported the senator's efforts to remain in office.

WILLIAMS, A liberal stalwart and former chairman of the Senate Labor and Human Resources Committee, sent his letter of resignation to Vice President George Bush, in his constitutional role as president of the Senate.

Bush now must notify the governor of New Jersey to make Williams' resignation formal.

As the Senate was ready for its sixth day of debate over Williams, it was clear his only chance to remain in office — a scheduled vote on the lesser penalty of censure — was doomed. Some of Williams' staunchest defenders had conceded that, and the senator himself was described as emotionally distraught.

For six months, Williams asked other senators, many of them close friends, to believe that the FBI targeted him without cause to believe that he was corruptible, then twisted his actions to frame him.

BUT HIS own words on videotapes made by the FBI's undercover team contradicted his insistence that Abscam "was a net that was so crudely wrapped around me" or that he was the victim of "a manufactured crime."

In one of the final speeches of the debate, Sen. Howell Heflin of Alabama, the senior Democrat on the Senate Ethics Committee, said Thursday that the case against him was built mainly "on the uncoerced words from the mouth of Harrison Williams himself."

Almost all of Williams' 99 colleagues had watched the tapes of seven meetings in which the senator met with undercover FBI agents, informants, and two political supporters from New Jersey, who were also implicated

WILLIAMS WAS convicted of accepting a hidden interest in a Virginia titanium mine in exchange for promises to obtain government contracts for the venture — and to introduce a private immigration bill for an Arab sheik, who actually was an undercover agent.

After several months' investigation, the six members of the ethics panel voted unanimously to recommend that Williams be expelled for "ethically repugnant" behaviour.

During the full Senate debate, there was a move by Sen. Alan Cranston of California, the Democratic Minority Whip, to lessen the penalty from expulsion to censure because alleged "abuses of power" by the FBI.

But the effort attracted little support, and by Wednesday it was clear that there was the necessary two-thirds vote for expulsion.

In retirement, Williams will receive a $45,000 pension. He would have received the same benefits if he had been expelled.

In its 193-year history, the Senate has expelled only 15 members, all for treason or disloyalty.

Tourney time...

'Cats take on Northern Illinois in Dallas

By HOWARD RICHMAN
Sports Writer

K-State's men's basketball squad will attempt to make Dallas, Tex., its home the next few days.

The Wildcats will face Northern Illinois in the first round of the National Collegiate Athletic Association (NCAA) tournament at 7 o'clock tonight at Reunion Arena in Dallas.

The winner of that contest will oppose Arkansas at 12:30 p.m. Sunday at Reunion Arena. The victor will move on to the Midwest regional semifinals March 19 in St. Louis, Mo. The regional final will be Sunday, March 21.

K-State is making its 16th appearance in the NCAA tournament. Only Kentucky, UCLA and Notre Dame have participated in more tournaments. The 'Cats have lost to the eventual tourney national champion five times since 1951. The most recent loss was to Louisville in 1980.

K-STATE'S TOURNAMENT record is 21-19. Last year the 'Cats made it to the West regional finals before falling to North Carolina, 82-68.

Northern Illinois will be making its initial appearance in the tournament. The school, located in DeKalb, Ill., finished the regular season 16-13, the worst record of any tourney team. But K-State Head Coach Jack Hartman said the Huskies' record might be deceiving.

"Northern Illinois has a very good basketball team. I believe their record is misleading because they have really come on at the end of the season," he said. "You know they will try and prove something since this is the first time they have been here (the NCAA tournament)."

K-State will face the Huskies with two starters who have been ill recently. Hartman said guard Tyrone Adams missed practices early in the week because of the flu but returned to the court for Tuesday's practice. Forward Ed Nealy is the latest to succumb to the bug, missing Wednesday's practice.

THE HUSKIES WILL be at full strength in the contest. They are led by 6-foot-9 center Allen Rayhorn. His 15.2 points per game and 8.9 rebounds tops the team.

Women seek NCAA victory in Ahearn

By TIM UNRUH
Sports Editor

It has been a season of firsts for K-State's women's basketball team.

The high-flying Wildcats have posted a 24-5 record, and can boast about their 15-game winning streak. Fifteen games without a loss is a first for the 'Cats.

But it is no time to dwell in the past. The 'Cats will take on Stephen F. Austin State University Saturday night at 7:30 p.m. in Ahearn Field House for the first round in the East Regional Tournament of the first-ever National Collegiate Athletic Association (NCAA) Basketball Tournament for Women.

The Ladyjacks, from Nacogdoches, Texas, finished the season with a 15-8 record. As one of the 19 at-large entrants in the tournament, the Ladyjacks are the number five seed in the East Regionals. K-State is seeded fourth.

A first-round berth in NCAA championships for women was a goal Head Coach Lynn Hickey made at this season's outset. Now that the goal has been met, Hickey said it is time to get down and concentrate on basketball.

"We're very excited to be in the first-ever NCAA playoffs," Hickey said. "And it's even more special to play at home. But we've got to go out there and play like it's our last game of the season."

K-State and Stephen F. Austin have met three times, with the 'Cats holding a 2-1 in the series. The two teams met last year in Ahearn with the 'Cats winning 83-75.

Ladyjacks Head Coach Mary Ann Otwell, leading her squad to two national tournaments in a row, was pleased with the selection and the seeding of the tourney. "We

Veteran softball squad opens season Saturday

By TRACY ALLEN
Collegian Reporter

Expections are high for the 1982 K-State softball season.

The Wildcats, who will have 11 returning players from last year's 22-27 squad plus six highly talented recruits, will be on the prowl this weekend as they kick-off their 1982 campaign under new Head Coach Ralph Currie. The Wildcat's will be competing in the Wichita State Triangular this Saturday.

Currie, a Manhattan native and avid softball fan, began his career in 1939 as he played for various local fast pitch teams. In 1966, Currie began his career as a coach. During that time he coached numerous teams to state titles. Currie's teams also won national titles in Missouri, Kansas, Iowa and Nebraska.

Currie came to K-State because of his love for the sport. "I'm a member of the Mike Ahearn Scholarship Fund and therefore I've always been behind K-State," he said. "Since my life recreation has been softball, I thought it would be a challenge to try something new. Since K-State was looking for a softball coach, I decided to go ahead and see what would happen."

According to Currie, the Wildcat's have room for improvement. "Our main objective and probably our biggest is that we become a fundamentally sound ballclub. I want to teach the players to know exactly what is expected of them — dedication, long hours and time," he said.

For the 'Cats, pitching seems to be the strongest asset for them this season. With the return of junior Janel Anderson and recruit Diana Punza, the 'Cats are hoping that this season's record will be better. Anderson, K-State's top pitcher a year ago, is expected to be even stronger this season as she will try to better her 1.39 ERA (earn run average) of a year ago. Punza, a junior college transfer, is expected to help Anderson out as she will add needed depth to a thin pitching staff.

Punza, who helped the Cloud County Community College team to a fifth-place finish in the national juco tournament last spring, is expected to be the biggest threat to opponents, Currie said.

Besides Punza, K-State will also be strong in catching as they return two players from last season, Pam Rufener and Brenda Holaday. Rufener, who is considered one of the team's leading long ball hitters, is expected to battle Holaday for the starting catching job.

Other valuable players of this year's squad are outfielders Kari Jones and Pam Hentzler. Hentzler was a teammate of Punza at Cloud County.

K-State will also have newcomer Kelly Scoles. According to Currie, "Kelly is a jack-of-all-trades in that she can play either infield or outfield."

Currie feels optimistic towards the season. "I feel that if we play up to our capability, then we'll be in every ballgame," Currie said.

'Cats

got a pretty good draw," Otwell said. "At this point, there are not too many easy slots. "We are excited to be involved in the playoffs. It is an honor and priviledge, plus these young ladies have earned the right to compete for a national championship."

Austin is led by 5-11 sharpshooter Tammy Mayo. The sophomore forward is averaging 20.3 points per game, while shooting 52.3 percent from the field. She is joined in the starting lineup by 6-2 center Sybil Johnson, point-guard Rosalind Polk, 5-11 center Kim Rodman, and a player Hickey compares to her own Priscilla Gary, 5-7 guard Pam Crawford.

"Crawford can jump just as well as Priscilla can, and the whole team likes to run up and down the floor," Hickey said. "This will challenge our team, but we will be ready to play."

Gary is the Wildcats' leading scorer, averaging 18 points a game. Right behind her is Tammie Romstad, who throws in an average 16.1 a game.

Tickets are still available for the game. Adult admission is $4, and student tickets are $2 each.

House speaker predicts severance tax support

TOPEKA — House Speaker Wendell Lady said Thursday he detects "some movement" toward increased support for the severance tax among members of the Kansas Senate, giving him encouragement that it can pass that body this session.

"I have had some discussion with senators," Lady told his weekly news conference as the Legislature adjourned for a long weekend to end the ninth week of the session, now in its final month.

"I'm not going to comment at this time, but I am starting to hear some movement over there," he added.

"I am confident that something is going to happen in the Senate at some point — that enough of the 40 senators are going to stand up and be counted and not let these bills be bottled up in committee."

However, Lady conceded there is no indication Senate President Ross Doyen and others in the Senate leadership have switched to support the severance tax.

French president to meet with Reagan

WASHINGTON — President Francois Mitterrand of France will make a quick trip to confer today with President Reagan in an effort to soothe irritations over mounting differences on Central America, Libya and the Soviet Union.

Mitterrand is scheduled to arrive in Washington at midmorning for a visit asting only about 10 hours. He is scheduled to spend three hours with Reagan at a White House meeting, then at lunch.

While Mitterrand's socialist government has agreed with the United States on some key issues, the Reagan administration has been dismayed by the French stand on others, particularly in Central America.

One high-level State Department official, asking not to be named, said the French stand on Nicaragua and El Salvador threatens to undercut American policy in the region.

Marathon Oil Co. merges with U.S. Steel

FINDLAY, Ohio — Stockholders of Marathon Oil Co. voted Thursday to approve a $6.2 billion merger with U.S. Steel Corp., the second-largest corporate takeover in history.

More than two-thirds of the common stock voted at a special stockholders meeting was cast in favor of the merger, officials of an independent accounting firm which tallied the votes told Marathon President Harold Hoopman, who then adjourned the stockholders meeting.

Michael Russo, Marathon vice president for public relations, said the counting was delayed for several hours by the large number of ballots.

Russo said more than 330 stockholders attended the session at the Findlay headquarters of the nation's 17th-largest oil company.

The size of the merger is topped only by the $7.8 billion acquisition of Conoco Inc. by DuPont Inc. last year.

Court rules in rental property damage case

TOPEKA — The Kansas Court of Appeals ruled Thursday that an inventory of a rental property is not necessary to establish that a tenant has damaged the premises.

The Appeals Court held that if a landlord and tenant do not have an inventory list for a rental property, the landlord can still use other evidence to prove the property was damaged.

State law requires landlords and tenants to jointly inventory a property within in five days after occupation. Written copies of the inventory are to be given to both parties.

In the case before the Appeals Court, the tenant made a list of needed repairs and gave a copy to the landlord who later lost it.

Upon vacating the premise, the tenant requested return of her $275 security deposit. The landlord kept the security deposit contending the tenant had damaged the building.

U.S. business leaders plan to cut spending

WASHINGTON — For the first time since the 1975 recession, American business leaders plan to trim spending for expansion and new equipment this year, after discounting for increases due only to inflation, the government reported Thursday.

The Commerce Department's chief economist, Robert Ortner, said later surveys could well show executives scaling back expansion plans even further in the next month or two — a hard blow to Reagan administration hopes for robust business investment.

But Ortner also said the same executives will probably be talking about more ambitious plans than now estimated for the second half of this year when they see for sure that the current recession "is not endless."

Also on Thursday, Treasury Secretary Donald T. Regan chided Wall Street securities dealers about high interest rates, saying both he and President Reagan were puzzled at why rates remain so high even though inflation has subsided.

Abscam ending retains dignity

After the Nixon-Watergate era, trust in the democratic government of the United States had fallen to a deploring low. The Abscam investigations present a similar situation, with the long career of a senator ending in a resignation, that feeds the mistrust of citizens.

The move by Senator Harrison Williams, (D-N.J.) to resign, before the eventual vote for an ousting from the Senate by his former collegues, was the only correct and respected avenue to take.

History is fickle. The events which may appear on the pages of a government history book will not cover his achievements or the service to his constituents but the events leading to his political downfall. A resignation will only fill a few paragraphs in relation to the space that would have been alloted for the events leading up to the second expulsion of a U.S. senator from Congress.

By choosing to resign Harrison has kept a sense of dignity, which should be attached to a federal legislative position, in tact. The dignity may be more psychological than actual but it is necessary for the process to work.

Harrison may feel that his resignation is an admission of guilt, which he maintains lies in the hands of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, but his resignation can be viewed as an effort to maintain the respect entitled to his legislative office.

NCAA battles brighten weekend

Thanks to a grand coilcction of male and female athletes, K-State basketball fans will have no excuse for boredom this weekend.

The National Collegiate Athletic Association's (NCAA) basketball championship's first round of the Midwest Regional Tourney is tonight in Dallas, and the men will battle Northern Illinois... that is one choice. But the best pick for the money takes place right here in Ahearn Field House Saturday night as the women's team takes on Stephen F. Austin, in their first round bout.

Both of the Wildcat contingents are excellent ball clubs with the potential to brighten any crowd's day. So take someone out to a ballgame this weekend.

Letters

Priorities need review

Editor,

This letter is in reference to the article "Salaries fall behind peer institutions," which appeared in the Collegian on March 8, 1982.

Student senate has allocated $5 million for a new sports coliseum. The $5 million is composed of funds from increased tuition, the alumni and state legislature. At the same time, however, we are losing teachers due to low faculty salaries. Also, some of our academic facilities and equipment (for example the chemistry department) are in disrepair.

Collegiate sports, especially basketball, are important to K-State. However, sports are not more important than academics. K-State is an institution of higher learning and therefore, education is our chief concern.

If we must have an increase in tuition, then the money should be used where it is really needed — for teachers' salaries and academic facilities.

Leisurely menu offers a variety

These words are food for thought for the force-fed twentieth-century Americans.

The pace has been offered, you've bought and are paying for it. You're entitled to all that you can stomach. What a deal, a real gut-buster. The capitalist powers-that-be have you feasting of their smorgasbord. You're becoming so obese you can no longer distinguish your appetite from what they say tastes good to you. They've captured your decision-making willpower and are directing your appetites of time, interests, pleasures and desires. You think not? I'll sketch a portrait of you.

Hurry up and wait. Go on, hurry up and wait.

Hurry to the end of this, because there's the sports to read and "briefly" and the personals.

You must hurry now, because there's your class you have to get to. You hurry to it and wait. You'll wait for the professor to arrive and to begin.

RUSHING THE END OF CLASS, you close the notebook before the professor can finish his sentence, but that's because you're hurrying to the next class so you can wait there too.

You hurry to lunch to wait in both the serving and check out lines. It's no different if you'd hurried in your car. You've waited at the stop lights on your way to McDonald's where your frustration mounts because you thought you'd be able to purchase a speedy burger only to re-live having to wait on their time-saving, no-wait delivery.

In any case, you've had your lunch and are ready to hurry through the afternoon. You hurry to an afternoon class or lab before rushing to the the bank, post office, laundry or store, where you can wait in line.

THEN THERE IS a hurried dinner of a pizza, pot-pie or macaroni. You've turned on the stereo from which the words can't be understood because of the hyped up beat. But that matters not because you aren't going to finish listening to it anyway. You take a shower while the record plays so you can hurry to the bar, as has everyone else. Yes, you're catching on, you get to wait for a drink.

The alcohol takes effect and you are slowed, but you succeed in getting home so you can hurry to bed. Having hurried to take off your clothes, or possibly not even taking time for that, you hurry to get under the covers to get to sleep, but again you will wait to go to sleep. Once asleep you hurry the dream, but it too has to wait, going unfinished because you are hurrying to shut off the alarm and get to breakfast.

AFTER A SPEEDY BOWL of sugary flakes or possibly none at all, you're out the door for another course of capitalist cuisine.

Somehow, in the week filled of hurrying and waiting, you without conscious effort managed to write a resume or summer job application, sent it, only to wait for a reply. Also within the week you hurried to complete homework and projects only to wait to have them returned or wait in anxiety to present it in the next class because not enough time was scheduled to give yours.

A school environment or schedule is no defense, they brainwashed you long before you came here to eat.

As a life-nutrition consultant, may I suggest a diet of robust individualism and organic self-discipline

Live for the moment. There's no real need to hurry, you'll get there. And you won't starve with a little less capitalist cuisine.

YOU COULD NAME on one hand what the hurry has accomplished for us. On the other you'd need a calculator to count the times and ways we've hurried to wait.

There seems to be a direct inverse relationship between how we hurry and how long we wait. It's surprising how often when you aren't chasing something it comes within your grasp but, if desperately seeking, you can't get what you are pursuing and the more you wait.

We don't lose or attain a this condition in a day. We are creatures of habit.

I'm slowly coming to believe that as much as our efforts are responsible for our lives, destiny has a hand in this whole drama.

We never know how close our close-calls are. Hurrying to meet a deadline, if we make it we don't know by how much and if we don't, we don't know by how much. The same goes for near catastrophies such as car accidents, sports injuries, plane crashes and natural disasters.

These are confirmations for a philosophy of taking your time. Eat what really tastes good to you, not what is prepackaged and advertised as being the real thing.

To paraphrase an Italian author of the last century: If it weren't for happiness which can be found on earth, the creation would be a monstrosity, and Voltaire would have been right when he called our planet the latrine of the universe.

When your number is called, it won't matter if you're hurrying to a class, to finish home work, traveling to a job interview or driving home for avacation. There is nothing they can try to feed you that is worth a life of hurries.

Tribunal hears appeals as 'court of last resort'

Editor's note: This is the last in a series on K-State's judicial process.

By DEE ANNE HEADLEY
Collegian Reporter

As the high court in the University judicial system, Tribunal mainly hears appeals from living group judicial boards and Student Review Board, as well as having other duties.

It is composed of five students appointed by the student body president and approved by Student Senate. One of the five is designated as the chancellor, who presides over the meetings

Two faculty members chosen by Faculty Senate also sit on Tribunal. John Friel, judicial affairs coordinator and graduate in education, serves as an adviser to the board.

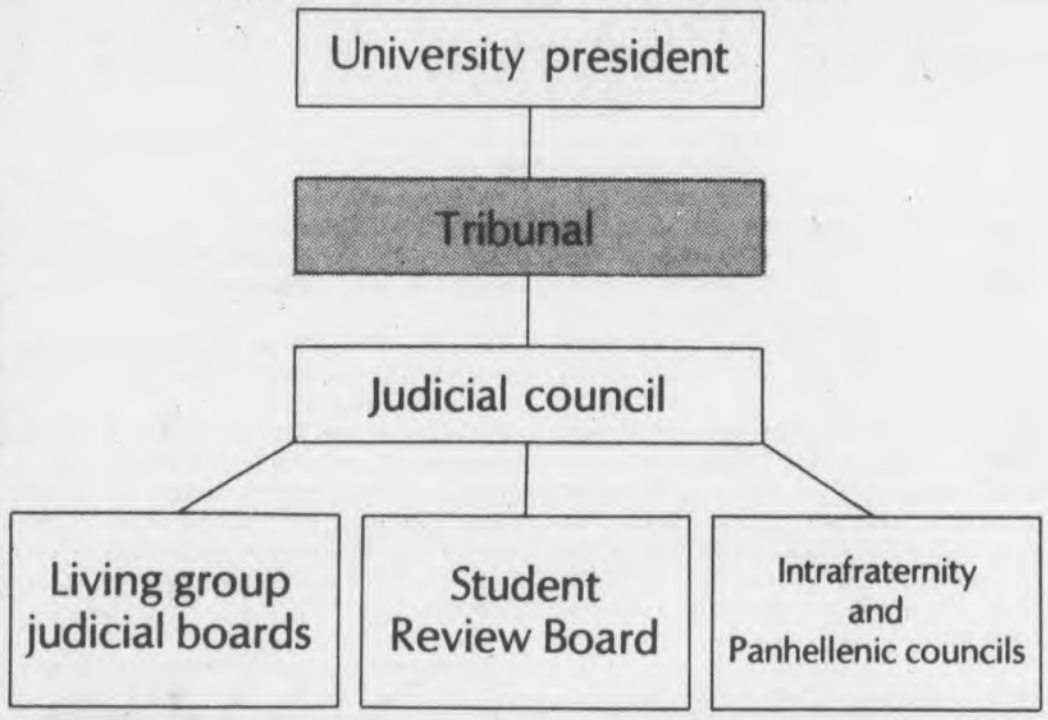
"Each hall has a different personality and this is reflected in their sanctions," Friel said. "Tribunal insures that student rights and the whole (University disciplinary) philosophy are upheld in the system. It tries to give each hall as much autonomy as possible."

GARY HORNBAKER, Tribunal chancellor and sophomore in agricultural economics, said, "Any case that comes to us goes through Judicial Council first. There are some cases that Judicial Council might send directly to us (for the first hearing.)"

For example, if a repeat offender has appealed cases to Tribunal numerous times and keeps committing violations, Tribunal may be the first to hear the case.

In this situation, the lower courts would be bypassed.

Hornbaker said Tribunal follows the same rules and procedures as the lower boards. However, he said sometimes the procedure normally followed during the actual hearings cannot be used in Tribunal since it hears appeals instead of first hearings.



He said it is often apparent that a student is guilty and it is Tribunal's job to decide if the sanction given him is appropriate.

"A lot of times the student will admit guilt, but doesn't agree with the sanction that's been applied (by the lower court)," Hornbaker said.

TRIBUNAL CAN also issue court orders.

Editor:

In the article "Committee hears student dispute; policy decision may set precedent" by Heidi Bright, which appeared in the Kansas State Collegian of February 26, there is a part dealing with the "language barrier" because the instructor is foreign-born. As the instructor involved, I feel obliged to divulge my name, so as to relieve the other foreign-born instructors from being suspected as the one referred to in the article. At the same time, I also feel that you have an obligation to allow me to present my side of the story so that my present and future students will not lose faith in my teaching.

I realize, and have realized, that my English is not as good as that of those who were born and raised in this country. To overcome this handicap, and to attain a high standard of teaching effectiveness, I prepare thoroughly for every class meeting, I write more on the blackboard, I encourage students to ask questions both in class and outside of class, and I assign and correct homework or give frequent short quizzes. I have tried very hard to make the quality of my teaching as high as possible.

For the purpose of improving my teaching techniques, I have had many students evaluations. Of course, the opinions expressed by the evaluators have been almost as diverse as the grades in the course, which sometimes have been from near zero to one hundred points. I should like to quote the comments made by a few of my former students, comments which show what they thought of my interest in them and my effectiveness as a teacher.

Student A: Dr. Hsu is an excellent teacher and an asset to the mathematics department. His English is a little difficult to understand, but his method of teaching makes up for it. Some students may complain about Dr. Hsu's English and may let their feeling about his class be blamed on him. Believe me, I have taken a few mathematics classes from teachers here at KSU and he is one of the best.

Student B: I think Hsu did a wonderful job teaching recitation for calculus. He always knew what he was doing and could explain it to the class. He was always very courteous and helpful when you went to his office for help or when you asked questions in class. Language was no barrier in this calculus class like it can be with other instructors who have accents. I got a lot out of the class.

A few years ago (1979), while we were "group-grading" the final calculus examination papers, Professor S.T. Parker pointed out to me the following comment written on the paper by one of my students:

Student C: I would just like to take this time to reiterate my feelings that Prof. Hsu is by far the greatest asset that KSU's mathematics department has!!

There have been many comments such as those quoted above, and they often came from students who were not at the top of the class. I have been very much encouraged by such remarks, and I should like to express my hearty thanks to these students who gave me such tremendous support. I shall continue to try to make all my students feel that they receive an education in mathematics of high caliber. If I fail to attain this goal, I apologize to those students who consider my teaching to be less than satisfactory. I realize that it is natural for them to want the best possible education.

Track trio heads to meets seeking All-American titles

By TRACY ALLEN
Collegian Reporter

For many students, the beginning of spring break marks that time of year when they forgo the hassles of tests and homework and head to the sandy beaches. However, Doug Lytle, Veryl Switzer and Mike Bradley will be heading for one of the top indoor track meets in the country, the NCAA Track Championships.

Beginning today and ending Saturday, Lytle, Switzer and Bradley will be in Pontiac, Mich., competing in one of the most glamorous meets in collegiate sports. For Lytle, this will be his second trip to the championships. In last season's meet, he placed fifth in the pole vault with a jump of 17-feet-4¾.

ALL THREE ATHLETES have a legitimate shot at becoming All-Americans in the meet, Head Coach Steve Miller said. "The top six athletes in each event will earn a right to become an All-American. Since Doug came in fifth last season, I'm sure he will make it again this season."

Concerning Lytle's chances, Miller sees Dave Volz of Indiana as the person Lytle will need to go after. "Volz is the defending NCAA champion in the pole vault and has one of the best vaults in collegiate track," he said. Volz, who has a jump of 18-feet-5½, will have four other 18-feet vaulters to look out for.

"Since the meet will have at least five 18-footers, Doug will almost have to jump 18 feet if he expects to even place in the meet," Miller said.

In the Big Eight indoor meet two weeks ago, Switzer, Lytle and Bradley each finished well for the 'Cats. Switzer, who did not participate in last year's National Collegiate Athletic Association meet, won the long jump with a jump of 25-feet-6, which is also a school record. Lytle won the pole vault with a vault of 17 feet-8½ and Bradley placed third in the 600-yard dash with a time of 1:90.

"Mike seems to be improving every week that he runs," Miller said. "In almost every event that he has participated in (400 and 600-yard dashes), he has had a lifetime best in each."

Bradley, who will be competing in the 600-yard dash, has the third best time in the country this season.

Besides these three, other K-State tracksters will also be bypassing the sandy beaches during spring break as they prepare for their first outdoor meet of the season. The 'Cats will be competing in the Louisiana Tech Invitational March 20 in Ruston, La.

Rayhorn, a senior, needs two points to become the all-time leading scorer in the Mid-American Conference.

The forward positions are manned by 6-foot-8 Tim Dillon and 6-foot-4 Jon Collins. Dillon averages 10 points and five rebounds a game while Collins tallies eight points. At one guard spot is 6-foot Leonard Hayes who averages 14 points a game. Hayes also handed out 96 assists this season. The other guard is Keith Gray, 6-foot-2, who averages eight points a game.

The top reserve for the Huskies is 6-foot-10 Ron Lindfors. Lindfors, a starter earlier in the season, averages six points.

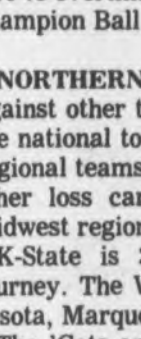
The Huskies qualified for the NCAA tournament by winning their post-season tournament. They did it by taking three games, two that went into overtime. The finale was a 79-75 overtime win against regular season champion Ball State.

NORTHERN ILLINOIS' record is 0-3 against other teams that will be playing in the national tournament. They fell to West regional teams Fresno State and Iowa. The other loss came to DePaul, also in the Midwest regional.

K-State is 3-2 against schools in the tourney. The Wildcats have defeated Minnesota, Marquette and Missouri.

The 'Cats and Huskies had one common opponent this season, Western Illinois. K-State won 67-57 while Northern Illinois lost 71-68.

K-State, 21-7 overall this season, is led in scoring by Adams and Randy Reed. Adams is averaging 14.8 and Reed, 14.4 a game. Nealy is pumping in 11 points and eight rebounds per contest. The 'Cats are shooting 52 percent on the year.



The Wildcats hold a 3-0 series lead with Northern Illinois. The last meeting between the schools came in 1977.

In other Midwest regional first round games, two were played Thursday night. Houston met Alcorn State and Marquette hooked up with Evansville. The winners will meet Tulsa and Missouri, respectively, on Saturday.

Tribunal

"If someone gets a sanction that we don't agree with, we can aply a court order to stop it," Hornbaker said. "That allows us more time to deal with the case.

"Usually we agree with the lower boards' decisions. We try to give sanctions that are educational and that stress the seriousness of the situation," he said.

Hornbaker said Tribunal tries to make the student understand why the actions were wrong by giving educational sancti.

For instance, if a person has broken a rule while intoxicated and it is determined that he probably would not have acted that way if he had not been drinking, Tribunal's sanction might be to have the person write a paper on the effects of alcohol on behavior.

IF A TRIBUNAL decision is appealed, it goes back to Judicial Council, then to the University president, who has the final decision-making power. Instead of deciding himself, the president often gives his authority to the vice president of student affairs, Friel said.

Earl Nolting, acting vice president of student affairs, said the president can decide to make the decision himself or pass it on. Technically, the vice president's decision is a recommendation to the president who can accept or reject it, Nolting said.

In addition to hearing appeal cases, Tribunal also interprets the K-State constitution. It hears trials for bills of impeachment of the student body president or student senators that are passed by Student Senate.

SUMMING UP the K-State judicial system, Friel said, "Students are the ones most directly affected by the actions of students. Since they (students) are affected the most, they ought to be able to deal with it (students' actions). Many places don't do that; discipline is still administratively handled."

The judicial system is "unique and challenging," Friel said. "It may not seem innovative as it is, but sometimes Kansas is the center of very independent thinking."

"It has been around (at K-State) for about 25 or 30 years and many schools are just beginning to look at this type of system. That says a lot about the commitment the University has made to the students," he said.

Senate passes requests for summer allocations

By DEE ANNE HEADLEY
Collegian Reporter

Student Senate passed a bill last night allocating $42,000 for the operation of six services during the summer school session.

The six organizations which will receive funding and the amounts they were alloted are: K-State Union — $23,335, Student Publications — $5,000, Recreational Services — $4,700, Summer School Artist Series — $3,875, University for Man — $2,470 and K-State Players — $2,620.

Budgets for the services were recommended by the Summer School Allocations Board, and representatives from each of the groups attended the senate meeting to answer senators' questions about use of the funds.

Five-minute presentations were given by 16 organizations which are requesting funding from senate during tentative allocations. The groups discussed their activities during the past year, how much money they are requesting and the reasons they need the requested funds.

Associated Students of Kansas (ASK) is requesting a 40 cent full-time equivalency totaling $14,109.60. This is a projected figure based on expected enrollment.

John Kohler, campus director of ASK and junior in economics and political science, requested $480, up from the $355 received last year, to pay for advertising, private car travel to Topeka to meet with legislators and expenses which will be incurred during the three legislative assemblies in Topeka.

Trudy Franklin,president of Black Student Union and freshman in accounting, said the group would like $2,172.13 for next year. This is down from $2,246.84 received last year.

MEChA, a Chicano student organization, is requesting $638.50. Mary Martin, president of MEChA and senior in English said the group's activities last year included a basketball tournament, sponsoring an international trade conference and attending state MEChA activities.

Antonio Matos, president of the Puerto Rican Student Organization and senior in architecture, said the group is requesting $783.28, up from the $656.35 they received last year.

Fine Arts Council requested an increased line item of $2.55, which would generate $79,000, said Provost Owen Koeppe, who spoke for the council. This figure is a 50 percent increase over the line item two years ago.

Fine Arts Council includes architecture and fine arts, arts and fine arts, the band and orchestra, choral groups and opera, the K-State Players, Ebony Theater, dance, minority cultural programs and McCain Auditorium operations.

Consumer Relations Board is asking for a funding increase of $505, Pam Kohlman, director, said. The money will be used to pay for salaries, postage, advertising, printing costs, travel expenses and dues and subscriptions.

K-State Crew is asking for $2,500 to pay for boat and dock repairs and maintenance.

Parachute Club is requesting $600 to cover the costs of having emergency chutes repacked.

The Coalition for Human Rights is requesting $1,435 for honorariums, film and slide rentals and xeroxing.

The Infant and Child Care Center is asking for $4175 to pay the salary of a graduate teaching assistant.

The K-State Soccer Club, which was not scheduled to make a presentation at the meeting, sent a representative to request $410 to pay for the costs of hiring referees, communicating with other schools chalking the playing fields and to pay for five new soccer balls.

Other groups which asked for funds at the meeting were the debate team, KSDB-FM Radio, the International Coordinator Council (a group representing all foreign students) and the Vietnamese Council.

Senate also approved the appointments of the six chairmen of the senate standing committees. They were chosen through interviews by the senate chairman and vice chairman.

Senate passes requests for summer allocations

By DEE ANNE HEADLEY
Collegian Reporter

Student Senate passed a bill last night allocating $42,000 for the operation of six services during the summer school session.

The six organizations which will receive funding and the amounts they were alloted are: K-State Union — $23,335, Student Publications — $5,000, Recreational Services — $4,700, Summer School Artist Series — $3,875, University for Man — $2,470 and K-State Players — $2,620.

Budgets for the services were recommended by the Summer School Allocations Board, and representatives from each of the groups attended the senate meeting to answer senators' questions about use of the funds.

Five-minute presentations were given by 16 organizations which are requesting funding from senate during tentative allocations. The groups discussed their activities during the past year, how much money they are requesting and the reasons they need the requested funds.

Associated Students of Kansas (ASK) is requesting a 40 cent full-time equivalency totaling $14,109.60. This is a projected figure based on expected enrollment.

John Kohler, campus director of ASK and junior in economics and political science, requested $480, up from the $355 received last year, to pay for advertising, private car travel to Topeka to meet with legislators and expenses which will be incurred during the three legislative assemblies in Topeka.

Trudy Franklin,president of Black Student Union and freshman in accounting, said the group would like $2,172.13 for next year. This is down from $2,246.84 received last year.

MEChA, a Chicano student organization, is requesting $638.50. Mary Martin, president of MEChA and senior in English said the group's activities last year included a basketball tournament, sponsoring an international trade conference and attending state MEChA activities.

Antonio Matos, president of the Puerto Rican Student Organization and senior in architecture, said the group is requesting $783.28, up from the $656.35 they received last year.

Fine Arts Council requested an increased line item of $2.55, which would generate $79,000, said Provost Owen Koeppe, who spoke for the council. This figure is a 50 percent increase over the line item two years ago.

Fine Arts Council includes architecture and fine arts, arts and fine arts, the band and orchestra, choral groups and opera, the K-State Players, Ebony Theater, dance, minority cultural programs and McCain Auditorium operations.

Consumer Relations Board is asking for a funding increase of $505, Pam Kohlman, director, said. The money will be used to pay for salaries, postage, advertising, printing costs, travel expenses and dues and subscriptions.

K-State Crew is asking for $2,500 to pay for boat and dock repairs and maintenance.

Parachute Club is requesting $600 to cover the costs of having emergency chutes repacked.

The Coalition for Human Rights is requesting $1,435 for honorariums, film and slide rentals and xeroxing.

The Infant and Child Care Center is asking for $4175 to pay the salary of a graduate teaching assistant.

The K-State Soccer Club, which was not scheduled to make a presentation at the meeting, sent a representative to request $410 to pay for the costs of hiring referees, communicating with other schools chalking the playing fields and to pay for five new soccer balls.

Other groups which asked for funds at the meeting were the debate team, KSDB-FM Radio, the International Coordinator Council (a group representing all foreign students) and the Vietnamese Council.

Senate also approved the appointments of the six chairmen of the senate standing committees. They were chosen through interviews by the senate chairman and vice chairman.

Kassebaum stresses strong economy

By LUKE BROWN
Managing Editor

A strong U.S. economy is vital to trade with foreign countries, Sen. Nancy Kassebaum (R-Kan.) told a meeting of the International Trade Conference (ITC) last night at the Ramada Inn.

"Our own strong and healthy economy is as much a factor in the relationship we have with our neighbors abroad as anything else. We must have a strong and healthy economy," she said.

See related story, p. 2

Kassebaum, a member of the Foreign Relations Committee, the Budget Committee and the International Economic Policy Subcommittee, as well as chair of the African Affairs Subcommittee, addressed the opening meeting of the eighth annual ITC.

THE ITC was held by the International Trade Institute, from the Department of Business; and the International Trade Council, a group of businessmen. Each year the ITC meets to discuss a topic dealing with foreign trade and this year the topic was the Arabian peninsula.

Kassebaum said a problem with the U.S. economy is the high interest rates and the projected high budget deficits. Kassebaum said a bipartisan approach is needed to make a budget in the Senate that would have a lower deficit and would result in lower interest rates.

"The times demand a courageous approach to the budget. We (Republicans) can't do that alone, we need a strong, bipartisan approach," she said.

"We could end up with no budget at all, without bipartisan cooperation," Kassebaum said.

THE SENATE needs to establish priorities in the budget, Kassebaum said, and compromise is needed.

"President Reagan has indicated he is open to compromise, although he is still holding firm," she said.

An alternative to the current budget that Kassebaum supports is to freeze the budget at 1982 levels.

"It is an equitable approach that would be so total and simple, some would say simplistic, that it could solve the problem," she said.

The proposal currently does not have a great deal of support in the Senate, Kassebaum said, primarily because it would freeze defense spending as well as other spending. However, Kassebaum said the defense budget has $30 billion in unobligated funding, where the $15 billion in years past was thought to be more than adequate.

KASSEBAUM SAID if her proposal didn't draw more support, she would support a similar plan — proposed by Sen. Pete Domenici (R-N.M.) — that would also freeze the budget at 1982 levels but allow for a 10 percent increase in defense spending.

Kassebaum said entitlement programs, the largest part of the budget, should also be looked at. Besides including pension programs, the $260 billion program includes

Space shuttle prepared for midmorning liftoff

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — The weather was perfect, the astronauts ready, and the space shuttle fit and trim for a Monday morning launch — Columbia's third and most ambitious voyage into space. Huge crowds of vacationers awaited the roaring spectacle of liftoff.

"We are certainly go," test director Norman Carlson said Sunday. "We are confident of a 10 a.m. (EST, 9 a.m. CST) liftoff." He called it a "clockwork count." The critical hours in the countdown when problems usually arise was still ahead, early Monday.

"Communications, navigation, flight control and instrumentation systems have all been turned on and checked out," NASA reported at midafternoon. "Teams of inspectors have combed the launch pad cleaning up debris and have declared the pad ready for launch."

MEANWHILE, IN the desert of New Mexico, a 448-ton trainload of special landing equipment arrived from California and crews practiced handling an unwanted off-runway touchdown of the shuttle. Equipment delays forced NASA to cancel rehearsal of a normal landing, but ground operations manager Jim Harrington said "we will be ready" on Monday.

Astronauts Jack Lousma and C. Gordon Fullerton, eager to begin their seven-day mission, spent two hours practicing lan-

Economist predicts deficits to be smaller than forecast

WASHINGTON (AP) — Economist Milton Friedman, calling on President Reagan to stick to his economic program, predicted Sunday that federal budget deficits in the coming years will be "far smaller" than those now forecast.

The serious consideration given to deficit forecasts is "absurd" since they have proven to be "very unreliable," Friedman said.

"There's no reason to suppose that these are more than numbers on paper," he said. "Moreover, they are numbers that are subject to the control of Congress by its actions on spending."

Reagan has projected a $96.4 billion deficit for fiscal 1983, but the Congressional Budget Office puts the figure at $121 billion.

Friedman, appearing on NBC's "Meet the Press," contended that Reagan's economic program of tax and budget cuts would not produce deficits exceeding $100 billion. "My prediction is that the actual deficits over coming years will be far smaller than is now forecast," he said.

He urged Reagan to standfast against mounting criticism on Capitol Hill over the president's refusal to reduce his planned military buildup or increase taxes.

In fact, Friedman said he would be favor of an additional tax cut — reducing the top rate on personal income taxes from 50 percent to 25 percent.

"That would both raise more revenue and cost the taxpayer less," he said, adding that it would take away the incentive for people to look for ways to avoid paying taxes.

"Contrary to the common opinion, I believe the president has achieved a great triumph," he said. "I believe he has forced Congress to consider the issue on the right terms.

Observers doubt vote will end Salvador war

WASHINGTON (AP) — Members of a U.S. team that will observe next Sunday's election in El Salvador say they doubt the vote will resolve the country's bitter civil war, but that it could be an important step in that direction.

"Those of us going don't go with any strong belief that it will be the be-all and end-all of the problems in El Salvador," said Sen. Nancy Kassebaum, (R-Kan.), head of the delegation. "It would be foolish to think that."

In interviews with The Associated Press, Kassebaum and other observers expressed only limited hope that the election will lead to a quick settlement of the war.

Some observers on the official seven-member team suggested the election could serve as a prelude to negotiations between Salvadoran President Jose Napolean Duarte and leftist guerrillas.

Their opinions contrasted with the high hopes the Reagan administration has expressed for the election.

"Personally, I would hope it (the election) would strengthen President Duarte's hand," Kassebaum said. "If the elections do do that with sufficient numbers, it would give him the ability to be open to negotiation."

Duarte and the Reagan administration have repeatedly ruled out a negotiated settlement with the leftists, arguing instead that the election would legitimize his government and undercut the guerrillas.

Leftist opposition parties, claiming their candidates would risk death at the hands of government security forces, are boycotting the election. Instead, they have called for a negotiated settlement that would produce a cease-fire before any election is held.

The team of observers was picked by the State Department. It also includes Rep. Bob Livingston, (R-La.); the Rev. Theodore Hesburgh, president of Notre Dame University; Clark Kerr, president emeritus of the University of California at Berkeley; Everett E. Briggs, deputy assistant secretary of state for inter-American affairs; and two election experts, Richard M. Scammon and Howard Penniman.

Scammon and Penniman also were observers at the 1967 South Vietnamese elections, which they defended at that time as fair and honest.

The team members are generally considered supporters of current U.S. policy in El Salvador and several have openly stated they hope Duarte and his Christian Democratic Party win the election against five rightist parties.

Hesburgh described himself as a longtime friend of Duarte, noting that he helped Duarte gain his freedom after the Christian Democrat was imprisoned in 1972. Hesburgh said his personal friendship with Duarte will not affect his objectivity as an observer.

The observers said their first responsibility was to see if the election was fair. The election will choose a constituent assembly that will be empowered to draft a constitution and name the president.

Doctors say cutbacks may cause malnutrition

BOSTON — Several Boston pediatricians say some children began suffering from malnutrition after they were cut from federal food programs and predict that other youngsters will face a similar fate if Congress passes President Reagan's next round of budget cuts.

"It's hard to watch kids starve, but that's what we do," said Dr. Jennifer Rathbun at Children's Hospital Medical Center. "There's no question we are seeing more children with malnutrition than we saw a year ago."

The doctors said they have traced some cases of child malnutrition to federal budget cuts, although other children recently diagnosed as malnourished have lost federal funds because their parents did not pick up the vouchers necessary to file.

They concede that a problem existed before Reagan took office, but contend that the situation has been exacerbated by a downturn in the economy and recent budget cuts in food stamps and other nutrition programs.

"We're going to see things get worse if more funds are cut," said Dr. Deborah Frank of Boston City Hospital. "The treatment for malnutrition is food, and we see money for providing poor children with food dwindling."

The Reagan administration cut $2.3 billion from the food stamp program in fiscal 1982, forcing 875,000 people off the rolls and reducing benefits for about 21 million others. The administration proposed an additional $2.3 billion cut for 1983.

Public forces combat team to ban simulations

SEATTLE — Public outrage has forced the Army to ban use of simulated blood and fake limbs in performances of the elite hand-to-hand Ranger combat team, an Army spokesman said.

"People don't understand that whenever they see hand-to-hand combat, they're not seeing collegiate wrestling where points are awarded for pinning somebody to the floor," Lt. Col. Fred Ussery, public affairs officer at Fort Lewis, said in a recent interview.

The simulated blood and gore were scrapped from the Rangers' demonstration after their performance received negative reviews at a half-time show at a basketball game two weeks ago.

Hyatt gets permit to build new walkway

KANSAS CITY — A work permit has been issued for construction of another walkway at the Hyatt Regency Hotel in Kansas City.

A city plans examiner, Charles Evans, said the permit was issued last month for construction of an outside walkway that will be on the roof of the atrium lobby and will link the guest-room tower with the rooftop tennis courts of the health spa.

James Dawson, a spokesman for Crown Center Redevlopment Corp., the owner of the hotel, said the walkway will also serve as an additional fire exit. Hotel officials estimated the cost of the work at $60,000.

The collapse of two skywalks in the hotel lobby July 17 resulted in the death of 114 people.

Boy escapes sticky situation, muddy but safe

LINCOLN, Neb. — Mud sure can wreck a good wormhunting expedition.

Lincoln police say two boys, aged 7 and 9, went out Saturday in search of worms along Salt Creek here. Rain had turned the creek's banks to goo, and the 7-year-old soon found himself stuck, according to Officer Marty Ortez.

The 9-year-old, unable to pull his friend from the muck, went for help and returned with police and Fire Department rescuers. But the 7-year-old was gone.

Search plans were canceled when police got a call from a representative of nearby Northwestern Metal Co.

The 7-year-old had freed himself and was found, shivering and covered with mud, by company employees. The workers gave him a hot shower and a hot cup of soup, and then telephoned authorities.

Police wouldn't reveal the names of the children. Both boys were safe at home Saturday afternoon.

Diabetic student safe after night in Rockies

DECKERS, Colo. — A diabetic college student was found safe after spending a bitterly cold night in the foothills of the Colorado Rockies and going without insulin for more than 24 hours.

Lila Bleyenberg, 18, of Edgerton, Minn., was found Saturday afternoon about three miles from where she was last seen, said Hunter Holloway of Colorado Search and Rescue.

Bleyenberg was among a group of 14 students from Dordt College in Iowa arrived at a guest ranch north of Deckers early Friday morning for a spring vacation, according to Holloway.

Weather

Spring has arrived, which simply means that students can look forward to slightly warmer but still-unpredictable weather. Those returning from warmer climes may have to readjust to Kansas temperatures. Fair through Tuesday. Highs today in the upper 40s to low 50s. Lows tonight 30 to 35. Highs Tuesday in the upper 50s to low 60s. Winds light and variable today.

Drawing the line

The four-door Fleetwood inched back into the too small parking space with a malicious confidence. Although drippiness and sloppy streets reigned and cars cruised coated with mud, this determined vehicle had obviously snaked its way through all the slop without being commonly marred. Its whitewalls lived up to their name and the chrome challenged my eye to look at it — reflecting the sun in daggers of light.

Plush maroon seats accompanied the car's commanding appearance. It was the kind of car you'd sit down in and never rise back out of — swallowed by its overwhelming marooness.

THE DRIVER completed the strange picture. He must have been 40 but looked 55. He had a lean, hard face with lines in all the wrong places. Lips slightly parted to hold a cigarette revealed thin, broken teeth with dark stains. His eyes were hawk-like — rather direct and hypnotic, causing a rush of adrenalin in whomever was captured by them. Instinct told me not to stare but I was hypnotically drawn to keep looking, searching for a spark of some comforting common characteristic. Feeling nothing but a stealthy chill begin to invade me, I looked away. But not casually enough. It was an obvious move and a loss of footing for me.

What type of person can intimidate you through two windshields and eight feet of space?

What type of person could make me want to discreetly lock the doors, yet a desperate feeling pushed me down in my seat — frozen as an animal gazing into oncoming headlights.

HE MUST HAVE SLID out of the car while I was eyeing how far it was to reach the doorlocks. I blatantly watched him take purposeful strides down the sidewalk.

He moved like I knew he would, with his tailored leather coat wrapped loosely around his spare frame. His alligator-skin boots ate up the pavement, not detouring for even a moment to crush out the discarded cigarette — half-smoked. His leather gloved hands mocked the warmth of the day. He couldn't have been more defiant if he had worn all white.

I'm not naive, or at least I don't think of myself as being naive, but it would be foolhardy to say I'm worldly and I carry a hope that I never will be. Unfortunately, that may be a fast-dying wish, because the day I accept a pimp's existence as readily as I do my own is coming soon. In the typical modern approach of being well-disciplined to concentrate on oneself, it only took me 15 minutes after "the encounter" to shrug it off — knowing pimps and prostitutes weren't my problem or part of my world.

ONE FALLACY lies in that thought.

Around my busy collegiate life is the world. I am swallowed now with 18 to 30 year olds, classes, instructors, sports and so much culture it's mind-boggling. But having been shuffled from the days of milk in pint cartons and afternoon naps to the more advanced Pepsi from the Union and afternoon deadlines, I have found myself thoroughly indoctrinated with "the educational experience." I always dream of the actual application of it — the great "out-there" waiting for me with open arms. Open arms of nine-to-five, client discussions over lunches, corporate charm ... maybe not so exciting after all.

But who wants to be a peroxide blonde, poorly dressed with a heavily layered-on face and two bright crimson spots applied where the soft curve of her cheek should be?

Who wants the pimp in the alligator shoes to open the Fleetwood's door and let its marooness swallow them up, as it did the blonde?

But what about the boss in the tweed suit who opens the door to a room full of desks or drafting tables, leaving you to fall in among the cloned masses?

Which is more oppressing? And where do you draw the line?

Earthquake shakes Japan, injures 99

TOKYO (AP) — A major earthquake hit Japan's northernmost island of Hokkaido Sunday, injuring 99 people, destroying homes and triggering landslides in coastal fishing villages, police said.

Authorities said no deaths were reported.

The Central Meteorological Agency said the quake — the strongest to hit Japan in nearly a decade — had a magnitude of 7.3 on the Richter scale of ground motion, with a series of aftershocks. An earthquake measuring 8.3 killed about 200,000 people in Yokohama and Tokyo in September 1923.

The agency placed the epicenter of the quake near Urakawa, on the southern coast of Hokkaido about 93 miles southeast of the provincial capital of Sapporo.

In Urakawa, police said 57 people were injured, three seriously; by flying glass after the jolt broke windows and toppled dishes from cabinets. Some of the injured were burned when hot water kettles on top of their space heaters were overturned, police said.

In a telephone interview with The Associated Press, one Urakawa resident who asked not to be named said, "We're still feeling aftershocks about once every hour, so I don't think I'll be able to sleep tonight."

"We often have quakes in our town," she said, "so (when the quake hit) I just sat on the living room floor thinking it would stop. But furniture and books fell to the floor one after another, so I finally ran out of the house."

AP correspondent Jim Abrams, who was visiting the Hokkaido city of Hakodate 102 miles west of Urakawa, said it was "one of the biggest and longest quakes" he had felt during more than six years in Japan. "It seemed like it went on for about 20 seconds, and felt like a train was coming through the house," he said.

Shinnichi Urafunai, a police officer in Urakawa, said he telephoned his home after the quake at 11:32 a.m. (8:32 p.m. CST Saturday) and heard that furniture had toppled and plates and cups were smashed.

Students distracted from classics; readers prefer Garfield, preppies

By DARCY LINDSTROM
Collegian Reporter

You can tell a lot about a generation from the books they read...

An article appearing in The Wall Street Journal reported that students today steer away from the once-popular pop-psychology, consciousness-raising, social reform books and are now reading humorous and cartoon books.

These best-selling humor books, however, are not top-sellers at K-State, according to Jerry Fields, book department manager of the Union Bookstore.

"The best-seller list can be misleading. The students at this University have never been ones to follow it. We might sell four technical books to one current best-seller," he said.

Varney's Book Store employee, Gayle Paulseen, agreed that K-State students don't follow national best-seller trends, except when buying a book as a gift. However, some of the hottest-selling books a Varney's are the humorous national best-sellers.

"The Garfield books, 'The Official Preppie Handbook' and '101 Uses for a Dead Cat' have all been fast-moving books for us," she said.

A BIG SELLER at the Union bookstore has been a collection of science essays entitled "Godil, Enscher & Bach," according to Luann Baker, bookstore employee.

"We can't seem to get enough copies. They're sold almost before we get them," she said.

Students are still reading serious literature, though all are not reading the same type, Fields said.

"People are independent about what they buy now, there is no unity like there was a dozen years ago when everyone was reading "Love Story" or "Jonathan Livingston Seagull," he said.

Other books which were popular at K-State during the '70s were: "Bury My Heart at Wounded Knee," "Everything You've Always Wanted to Know About Sex," and "I'm OK — You're OK," according to Fields.

"I think students now are more apt to buy a book that will help them with their profession than a book about current issues or pop-psychology," he said.

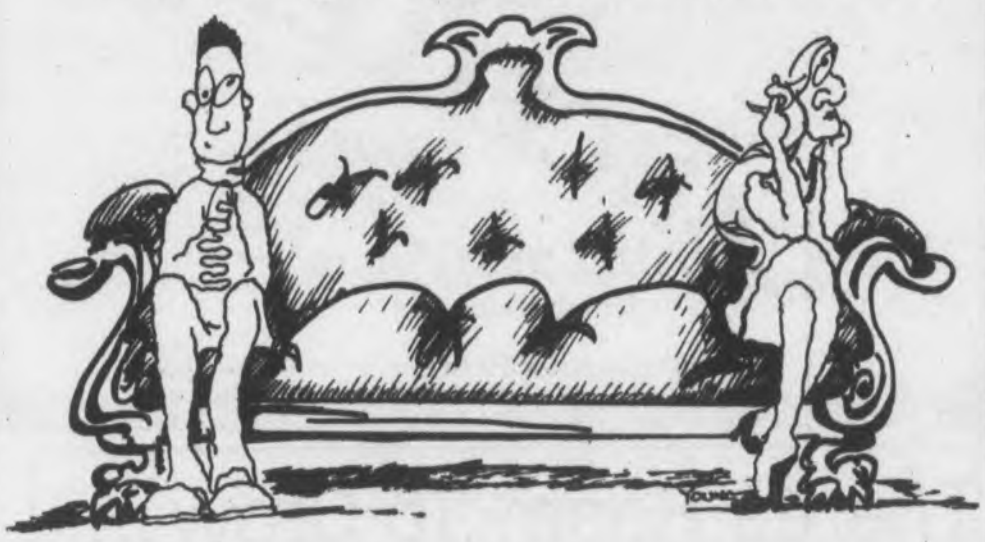
STUDENTS APPEAR to have developed a serious interest in establishing a career, according to Steve Peifer, employee of Varney's.

"Students of today are more career-oriented. Ten years ago most of the kids who came to college didn't know what they wanted to do — they just came to get an education. Now students come with a career in mind. They spend less time on books that will lighten their spirits, and more time on books that will get them ahead. It doesn't take much time to read 'Garfield at Large,'" he said.

Literary tastes may not reflect a readers interest's as greatly as it reflects a publisher's advertising strategies, according to Paulseen.

"Advertising makes a big difference on how a book sells; unless you back it with money even a good book won't sell," she said.

THE CURRENT interest in Harlequin romances has caused Varney's to receive some pressure from customers to stock the series. So far, Varney's buyers have resisted stocking them, but if the demand is there they may begin stocking them, she said.



Interest in classic books remains, according to employees of both bookstores. And there is a strong interest in science fiction and fantasy books, particularly "The Hobbit" series, Fields said. Contemporary authors that attract student interest include: James Michener, Stephen King and V.C. Andrews, Paulseen said.

"These cartoon books are kind of like the pet rock fad," she said, "pretty soon they'll just be put up on a shelf and forgotten."

Cats get warm home in zoo expansion plans

By JOY CULVER
Collegian Reporter

Manhattan is the home of the Wildcats, but a few Manhattan wild cats do not currently have a heated building to live in. But help is on the way. If everything goes as planned, these cats will soon have a home constructed specifically for them.

The cats are not the kind that play on a basketball court, they are Bengal tigers and African lions living at the Sunset Zoo. The Ruth Glenn Large Cat Preserve will be their new home.

There are also improvements in the works as a result of new priorities set forth by Sunset Zoo Director Gerry Brady. Brady became director seven months ago, and began re-evaluating the zoo's priorities immediately.

According to Brady, the city commission has given its approval of the plans and the process has begun for the improvements. The next step will be to find out how much the projects will cost and get bids from contractors, he said.

On March 16, city commissioners gave the go-ahead for the taking of bids.

ACCORDING TO Brady, the Ruth Glenn Large Cat Preserve is the biggest project planned. It includes a new complex with a heated building and outside area for the large cats, and will be situated just below the existing cat exhibit. The estimated cost of the project is $55,000.

Another project in the planning stages is the expansion of zoo offices. Brady said at the present time no offices exist for the director, secretary, education coordinator or curator of the zoo.

"The major priority for building offices is to organize things at the zoo," Brady said. The project is estimated to cost $27,500.

Another top priority is to renovate the top tier area of the zoo. The tier is the initial area seen by visitors and Brady said he wants to make it a "more sightly area." Currently nine cages with concrete floors are housed in the area. The plans call for the removal of the cages and the installation of four pens to create a more natural atmosphere for the animals. He said the plans for the top tier also call for the installation of additional trees, shrubs and dirt floors.

"I think the public will appreciate seeing the animals in a more natural environment," Brady said.

The top tier project is expected to cost $16,000 to $17,000.

RENOVATION OF the beaver pond (at an estimated $2,500) is a necessity, according to Brady, because the wall in the pond collapsed years ago and needs to be replaced.

Brady said an improvement that will benefit the visitors is the renovation of the restrooms near the pavilion. He said the restrooms are being modified to be used all year. Currently the restrooms are only fair weather facilities. Brady said the improvements (on the restrooms) could be finished by June 1. The estimated cost is $5,500.

Brady said he hoped all the improvements could be completed in the coming year. He said the cat preserve should take about five or six months, and the beaver pond could be finished during the spring or summer.

"These improvements are the first step in a long plan," Brady said. "More improvements are being planned for coming years."

Bats bomb as weapons after World War II trial

NEW YORK (AP) — The United States spent $2 million during World War II to develop the ultimate animal weapon — bats, attached to tiny incendiary bombs, which were to be unleashed on Japan from airplanes, American Heritage reports.

In its April-May issue, the magazine says the 27-month project was abandoned in 1944, but not before some of the bat bombardiers destroyed a general's automobile and buildings at a small California airport.

According to the magazine, the plan was concocted by Lytle S. Adams, a Pennsylvania dental surgeon who returning from a trip to Carlsbad Caverns, N.M., which is home to millions of bats, when he heard about the attack on Pearl Harbor.

Somehow, Adams got the ear of President Franklin Roosevelt and convinced him the idea merited some thought, the magazine said.

AND EARL Stevenson, a top official of the National Defense Research Committee, agreed that the use of the bats — perhaps released from submarines as well as bombers — could be very demoralizing, especially to a "superstitious people."

Donald Griffin, a zoologist, and Louis Fieser, a chemist, both noted Harvard faculty members, assisted in the project, American Heritage said.

Fieser desiged a celluloid case, three-quarters of an inch in diameter and 2 inches long, which could be filled with napalm gel. Each device was equipped with a 15-hour timer and was attached to the loose skin of the bat's chest with a surgical clip and a string.

THE BATS, kept in cold storage to make them hibernate, were to be dropped from planes in cases designed to slow their fall. It was hoped that they would find refuge in buildings, bite through the strings and leave the explosives behind.

But a May 1943 a test of the bat weapon at Muroc Lake, Calif., was an unmitigated disaster, the magazine said. The bats were harder to capture, handle and force into hibernation than had been expected. The containers did not do enough to slow the descent; many bats broke wings or never awakened.

The bats dropped from the planes were not equipped with bombs, but others on the ground that did have the devices somehow escaped, igniting hangers and other buildings as well as an unidentified general's car.

WHEN IT appeared that the government was going to give up on the project, Adams lobbied the Navy to carry on. Adams himself was squeezed out of the project after numerous disputes, including one time when he decided to release 10,000 bat bombs in the California desert. The release did not take place.

More tests were more successful, and production of as many as one million bat bombs was scheduled to start in March 1944. But in March the chief of naval operations ordered a halt to the program, citing "uncertainties" involving the behavior of the bats and the length of time before an actual strike could be launched, the magazine said.

Citizens save mayor's home from auction

ST. JOSEPH, Mo. (AP) — Fund-raisers have come up with more than $9,000 to pay an overdue loan and interest for St. Joseph Mayor Gordon Wiser, thereby averting the scheduled auction of his house Monday, a bank official said.

William Pasek, director of lending for American National Bank, said Sunday the volunteer fund-raisers told him they had raised more than $9,002 to cover the debt of $8,776 plus interest.

"There will be no sale," said businessman William Guenther, who initiated the "Save the Mayor's Home Fund" March 12 to keep the bank from selling Wiser's house.

However, Wiser, whose beverage company has been beset with financial problems, plans to declare bankruptcy soon, a St. Joseph newspaper and his former lawyer, David H. Morton, reported Sunday.

Wiser on Sunday neither confirmed nor denied the reports, but he scheduled a news conference for Monday.

Stop excusing your life away.

Shuttle

dings on the Kennedy Space Center runway, then paid a visit to launch pad 39A to thank the countdown crew.

The astronauts, their wives and children had dinner together — not the usual steak, but beef stroganoff, pineapple rings with apricot centers on a lettuce leaf, cake and ice cream.

The weather Sunday was brilliant and hot with only a few light, fleecy clouds in the sky. The forecast for Monday called for predawn ground fog, burning off at launch time, low winds and good visibility.

HUNDREDS OF thousands of vacationers jockeyed for viewing positions in the Cape Canaveral area, midway on Florida's East coast. Parking spots on the Indian River, with a spendid view of the launch site, had been filling for days with recreation vehicles. As many as a million people were expected.

Before dawn Sunday, Columbia's servicing structure was moved aside, exposing the gleaming white orbiter and its rockets and fuel tank to view. The orbiter stood nose-to-sky with its back toward the Atlantic Ocean — clinging like a giant moth to the light brown fuel tank.

NASA decided to save 600 pounds of weight by not painting the 18-story fuel tank, which was coated in white for flights one and two. Will that affect the shuttle's rocking slightly when its engines ignite. "It should look exactly the same as last time," said Shuttle program director Glynn Lunney.

LAUNCH DIRECTOR George Page said the shift in landing sites would cost at least three days' delay in Columbia's fourth flight in late June.

The astronauts were to be awakened at 5:10 a.m. for their flight, the first in space for the 45-year-old Fullerton, the second for Lousma, 46. After breakfast, the astronauts were to get a weather briefing, suit up, and enter the cockpit at 7:35 a.m.

Twice before, Columbia has flown in space. Both times, near-perfect countdowns gave way to postponements. Nonetheless, last April's maiden mission was a textbook success. November's second flight achieved most of NASA's objectives, but early-flight fuel cell trouble force the agency to cut the mission in half.

LANDING AFTER both flights was at Edwards, in the Mojave Desert. But the runways there are rainsoaked and NASA officials decided to redirect Flight 3 to the alternate landing site — Northrup Strip on the Army White Sands Missile Range in New Mexico.

"It will be a major security problem," said Gen. James Abrahamson, associate administrator of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration. He said the security concerns and White Sands' remoteness led to the decision not to allow the public onto the range to watch Columbia land.

Landing is scheduled for March 29; White Sands also is the prime landing site in the event of launch day trouble.

As the countdown progressed, two ships — the Freedom and the Liberty — moved from Port Canaveral into the Atlantic where they will recover the shuttle's booster rockets. Two minutes after launch, the boosters fall away and parachute into the ocean 158 miles down. Six minutes later, the external tank breaks away to bust up over the Indian Ocean.

HUGH HARRIS, the voice of launch control, said estimates are that "somewhere between 800,000 and 1 million people" will view the launch.

"I have never seen the good vantage points so up with campers as soon as on this mission," said NASA's Rocky Raab. "If that continues, we are very likely to have the biggest crowds ever."

Local authorities say the largest crowd to see a space shot was an estimated 1 million for the nighttime launch of Apollo 17, the last moon flight, in 1972.

Speeding car pulls stroller for 13 blocks in New York

NEW YORK (AP) — A car speeding out of Central Park ran over a stroller carrying an 18-month-old baby, wrenching it from her mother's hands and carrying the stroller and baby for 13 blocks under the car. The girl was in critical but stable condition Sunday.

The child's ordeal began just before noon Saturday as she was being pushed across 96th Street by her mother. A man driving a blue Pontiac Le Mans east out of Central Park jumped the traffic light, raced across Fifth Avenue and hit the stroller, ripping it from Marion Filley and pushing it down beneath its undercarriage, officials said. The stroller somehow became attached to the undercarriage.

As the woman watched in horrified disbelief, the car and the stroller with its captive passenger sped off across 96th Street.

The driver took a left onto Madison Avenue and sped uptown, followed by two motorists. As the chase moved across 100th Street into Spanish Harlem, more pedestrians joined the pursuit, waving and shouting at the car.

At 108th Street, after a last, loud screech, the stroller squirted out from under the car, which roared off uptown.

World's Fair: Landlords evict Knoxville tenants, raise rents in order to profit from high-paying tourists

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. (AP) — The 1982 World's Fair, the first ever in the Southeast United States, is expected to bring more than 11 million people to this Tennessee city — a fact not lost on some landlords who are evicting tenants in hopes of getting rich on high-priced rentals during the six-month exposition.

The displaced have included the elderly and handicapped, University of Tennessee students, professional people — and even two members of the city planning commission staff.

"...I don't want any part of the World's Fair," said Eddie Lee Griffin, a retired registered nurse who was forced to move from her two-bedroom $295-a-month apartment.

The City Council passed an ordinance March 16 designed to stop the evictions by fining landlords who rent rooms by the night without a special city license.

LEADERS OF a group called Tenants for Fair Housing estimate that more than 1,500 people have been evicted to make way for World's Fair visitors. Mayor Randy Tyree says the number is less than 1,000 — about 5 percent of the renters in this city of 183,000 residents.

World's Fair consultants say that except for holidays and a few weekends, the Knoxville area will have more than enough hotels, motels and campgrounds to house tourists without the make-shift lodgings the landlords plan to offer.

That's not much consolation for Griffin who found another apartment similar to what she had for $495 a month, a $130 increase.

Ruby Forrester doesn't yet know what her son, Mike, will do.

HE WAS one of 11 people told last month to remove their trailers from a Knoxville mobile home park. The park's owners plan to move in units and rent them to tourists.

"When you live somewhere 15 years, it's not just a mobile home park. It's your home," Forrester said.

Tee Needham, 63 years old and confined to a wheelchair, said he got a letter from his landlord telling him to "get out" of the $125-a-month apartment he has lived in for three years.

"I have money in my pocket to pay the rent, but he won't take it," Needham said.

Gail Smith, president of the Knoxville Apartment Council, the city's apartment-owners' group, said the fair has made the apartment market much tighter than it was. She said the fair doesn't seem to have caused a big increase in apartment rental rates, except for those units being rented short-term to tourists and fair workers.

STATE LAW allows a lease to be canceled if an apartment is to be renovated or turned into a condominum. Some landlords have used that as a ploy, or simply raised rents so high that tenants had to move.

Residents of one four-unit apartment building were told their rent would rise from $245 per month to $910 per week.

Tyree said he plans to strictly enforce the new ordinance, under which landlords could receive $50 fines and 30-day jail terms each time they rent a unit short-term without city permission.

"The city of Knoxville is giving landlords permission to do something, but we're saying that in return they are going to have to abide by some restrictions," he said.

BUT JOE Levitt, a lawyer who rents more than a hundred apartments, said he thinks the ordinance is unfair and unconstitutional, and he may challenge it in court.

"If it is challenged, we will fight it in court," Tyree said. "But by the time we get an answer on it, perhaps the World's Fair will be over."

Most area hotels and motels will raise rates during the 22-nation exposition, which runs from May 1 through Oct. 31.

Double-occupancy rooms at the downtown Hyatt Regency and Hilton will cost $82 a night — up about $20 from current prices. Two-person rooms at the new Holiday Inn next to the exposition site will start at $69.

Some smaller motels plan to rent rooms for up to $125 per night. And one small downtown hotel in a run-down area is raising its double-occupancy rate from $18 to $80 a night.

SEVERAL ENTREPRENEURS are building temporary motels which will be dismantled after the fair.

One developer is working on a 1,200 room prefabricated floating motel on barges docked on the Tennessee River near the fair site.

A 200,000-square-foot tobacco warehouse five miles from downtown is being converted into 750 small windowless rooms. Without telephone, television or baths, they will go for $66 a night.

The University of Tennessee, whose 30,000-student campus is beside the 72-acre exposition site, plans to rent spare dormitory rooms to fair tourists for $14.50 a night. And about 1,500 Knoxville homeowners have signed up to rent rooms to tourists.

Dick Rogers, World's Fair housing director, said much of the make-shift housing won't be needed.

World's Fair consultants have predicted that most visitors to the fair will live within 100 miles of Knoxville.

Steve Cotton, sophomore in general business adminstration clears 6-6 in the high jump at the Louisiana Tech Invitational in Ruston Saturday. Cotton finished the event with a winning jump of 6-10.

Lytle captures NCAA indoor title; tracksters win first outdoor meet

It has taken time, but the tide has turned for the men's track team. This was apparent after K-State's performances in the National Collegiate Athletic Association (NCAA) Indoor Championships March 12-13 and in the Louisiana Tech Invitational meet Saturday.

At the NCAA Championships, the Wildcat's finished 10th with 16 points — higher than every other Big Eight school and only 14 points behind runner-up Arkansas.

Texas El-Paso won its third straight title with 67 points.

For the Wildcats, Doug Lytle captured the championship in the pole vault and Veryl Switzer finished third in the long jump.

Lytle became the seventh K-Stater to win a national championship when he went 17-9¾. Switzer jumped 25-4 for his third place finish after being the 11th of 12 qualifiers for the finals.

Also competing for K-State was Mike Bradley, who placed seventh in the 600-yard run. Although he didn't score for K-State, he gained All-American honors. This title is given to the top six American athletes in each event.

After K-State's successful performance at the NCAA indoor meet, it began the outdoor season on the right foot by winning the Louisiana Tech Invitational.

"It's a good way to get the outdoor season started and to gain confidence," Barry Anderson, assistant track coach, said. "We had a lot of personal bests."

The Wildcats won all but four of the events and took the first three places in the javelin and steeplechase. Ray Hansen won the javelin with a 264-1¾ throw. This was the second best in school history and it also qualified him for the national outdoor meet along with Lytle and Switzer after their performances at the NCAA Indoor meet.

Donnie McKinnis placed second in the event with a throw of 244-3 and Mark Perbeck finished third with 225-6½. In the 3000-meter steeplechase, Mark Sageser captured the title with a time of 9:09.7. He was followed by Jim Gleason with 9:18.7 and Monty Johnson with 9:21.9.

Also placing first was Rodney Brogden in the long jump with a jump of 23-11. Gregg Bartlett won both the shot put and discus with throws of 58 feet and 169-8, respectively.

Mark Smith placed first in the triple jump with a 47-7 leap while Steve Cotton finished first in the high jump with 6-10. Lytle jumped 17 feet to win the pole vault.

In the intermediate hurdles, Julius Mercer placed first with a time of 53.08. Mike Bradley captured the title in the 400-meter dash with a time of 47.7 and in the 800-meter Sammy Rotich placed first with 1:52.7. John Holliday won the 5000-meter run with a time of 14:34.6 and the 1600-meter relay team placed first with 3:14.78.

The women's team, which doesn't have an NCAA national indoor meet, will open their outdoor season March 27 against Texas-El Paso. Both squads will travel to Austin, Texas April 2-3 for the Texas Relays.

Men defeat Huskies, Razorbacks, fall to Boston College in tourney

Another winning season has come to an end for the men's basketball squad.

K-State made it to the final 16 of the National Collegiate Athletic Asssociation (NCAA) tournament before bowing to Boston College 69-65 Friday night at the Checkerdome in St. Louis, Mo.

The 'Cats finished the season with a 23-8 record. The team defeated the Northern Illinois Huskies in the first round 77-68 and Arkansas in the second round 65-64. The victory over the Razorbacks set up the meeting with Boston College in the Midwest regional semifinals.

Against the Golden Eagles, the Wildcats grabbed a 41-36 halftime advanage in the contest. The 'Cats ran into foul trouble as Ed Nealy and Randy Reed both picked up three fouls before the half.

THE GOLDEN EAGLES chopped K-State's lead and eventually tied the score 53-53 midway throught the second half. The Wildcats missed their next three shots which helped the opponents take a 59-55 lead.

The 'Cats closed within two, 61-59 with just under two minutes remaining, and had possession of the ball. Ed Galvao was dribbling up court for the 'Cats when Boston College's small but extremely quick Michael Adams knocked the ball away from Galvao. The Golden Eagles grabbed the loose ball and never gave the Wildcats the opportunity to get near the lead.

Boston College's John Bagley soon cashed in two free throws extending the Eagles' lead.

K-State was led in scoring by two players who finished their college playing careers. Randy Reed pumped in 16 points and Tyrone Adams also netted 16. Another senior, Tim Jankovich, put in 10 points in his last game as a Wildcat.

Senior Ed Nealy did what he did best all season — lead the team in rebounding. The 6-7 Nealy grabbed 10 boards for the Wildcats.

Boston College was led by John Garris and Michael Adams with 20 points apiece.

THE 'CATS earned the right to play the Golden Eagles when they edged Arkansas 65-64 March 14.

Arkansas missed a chance to win the game when Scott Hastings' jumper from the baseline rimmed off in the closing seconds to secure the Wildcats victory.

K-State shot 60 percent in the contest. Adams popped in a game-high 21 points. Les Craft tossed in 13 and Nealy added 11.

Two days earlier, the Wildcats defeated Northern Illinois 77-68. K-State jumped to a 31-25 halftime advantage and never fell behind to the Huskies, making their first appearance in the NCAA tourney.

Women fall in regionals

The K-State women's basketball squad was a force to be reckoned with in the first-ever NCAA Basketball Championships.

The Wildcats started a quest for the east coast at home, edging Stephen F. Austin 78-75 in the first round of the East Regionals March 13.

With the 32-team field cut in half, the 'Cats made another giant step as they dumped the No. 1 seeded and No. 3 rated Old Dominion Monarchs 76-67 last Thursday. But K-State fell dead in its tracks bowing to the No. 2 seed Cheyney State 93-71 Saturday.

In the first game with the Lady Jacks of Stephen F. Austin, the Wildcats staged a dramatic second-half comeback before 3200 fans.

Stephen F. Austin (SFA) opened the game with a hot hand shooting 51 percent from the field in the first half. As a result, the 'Cats trailed 42-35 in the first half.

K-State's shooting heated up to 63 percent in the second half, and SFA's hot hand was chilled to 30 percent. As a result the 'Cats were able to swish right back into things. With the combined talents of Tammie Romstad and Priscilla Gary, K-State took the lead with 13:55 to play. Romstad connected on a crib shot after a missed Gary freethow attempt.

K-State took the lead again and never relinquished it. Gary led in scoring with 24 points. Romstad was next with 22.

Wildcat Head Coach Lynn Hickey took her contingent right to the heart of women's basketball Thursday night. In her 100th appearance as the K-State mentor, Hickey defeated one of the best women's programs in the nation — No. 1 seeded Old Dominion, and the 'Cats ran their record to 26-5. The win also marked the 17th in a row.

K-State held the Lady Monarchs 12 points under their season average and outrebounded the third toughest squad in the nation on the boards, 36-34. Once again, it was Gary and Romstad taking charge on offense, with 18 and 15 points, respectively.

It was K-State's quickness against Old Dominion's size (6-8 and 6-5 on the front line). In the second half, the score was tied three times, and the lead changed hands four times. Barbara Gilmore's baseline jumper with 6:54 to play, put K-State ahead for good.

Good foul shooting keyed the Wildcats to victory. K-State slated 30 points at the charity stripe. Old Dominion mustered only 11. K-State's Angie Bonner was the hero at the line, as she poured in 11 of 13 tries. The freshman also grabbed a team leading seven rebounds. The Wildcats advanced to the finals of the East Regionals, but that's as far as they went.

The doom of the 'Cats fell in the hands of Cheyney State. The Lady Wolves advanced to the Final Four, and left the Wildcats behind with a season-ending 93-71 loss.

K-State's season ended abruptly, but not without some cherished memories. The 'Cats proved to the nation they could play with the best, and in fact, finished in the final eight. K-State's 26-6 record is the best since the 1975-76 season when the Wildcats went 28-6. Their 17-game winning streak stands as a K-State record.

Baseballers win over break

The K-State baseball team was busy over the spring break, hosting eleven games at Frank Myers Field. Over the span of these games, the Wildcats won eight and dropped three. K-State sports an impressive 13-3 mark, going into today's doubleheader with Marymount, a make-up twinbill that was rained out March 19.

The most recent game was played March 20 with Northwest Missouri State serving as the opponent. The Bearcats proved to be one tough customer, losing the opener to the host school in one extra inning, 5-4. The Missouri school salvaged the nightcap, 5-4, in a game that was stopped because of darkness during K-State's final at bat.

In the opener, K-State, entering the final inning down 4-1, came through with clutch rbi by Don Grause, Scott Pick and Jay Kvasnicka to knot the score at four and send the game into extra innings.

In the bottom of the eighth, after the Bearcats didn't make any noise in the top of the inning, Glynn Perry lined a single to centerfield, scoring Joe Goedert from second base with the winning run. Dave Schmitz was the winning pitcher for K-State.

Led by Perry, K-State is hitting .342 as a team. Perry is hitting at a torrid .581 average. He is also the rbi leader on the team, along with first baseman Joe Goedert. Each have driven in 25 runs to date.

Goedert has hit at a .388 clip, Pick's

Softball squad wins big over break

The softball team, hoping to change its image from previous seasons, went looking for opportunities to change that image during spring break. And the Wildcats found a way as they competed in two tournaments, the Wichita State Triangular on March 13 and the Oklahoma Invitation, March 18-20.

The 'Cats, in search of a brighter season, came closer to their expectations as they compiled a 3-2 record. In the WSU tournament, K-State won both games — over the host Shockers, and West Texas State.

"Our team performed better than we expected," Wildcat Coach Ralph Currie said. "The fielding was impressive, we hit the ball well and both of our pitchers turned in complete games."

In the WSU game, K-State walloped the Shockers 9-4. The winning pitcher for 'Cats was Janel Anderson. Anderson, who, had a earned run average of 1.39 going into the contest, was a deadly weapon against WSU as she retired 17 of the last 19 batters.

The biggest inning in the game for the 'Cats was the sixth. Behind 4-3, they scored five runs, three coming from errors.

In the second game, K-State proved to be even more powerful as they upped their record to 2-0 by beating West Texas State 4-3. Behind 1-0, the 'Cats pounded their way back in the seventh inning as they collected three runs off five hits. According to Currie, the Wildcats never gave up.

"In both ballgames, we were behind," he said. "But, because of our determination, we seem to come back and win each one. To me, that's a good indication that the girls are ready to play ball."

As the 'Cats traveled to Norman, Okla., to compete in the OU Invitation, things were much different from the two earlier games. This time though, K-State came up short, dropping two of three games.

In the first game on Thursday, K-State edged the University of Oklahoma, 2-1. Anderson again proved her dominance as she improved her record to 2-0. Going the full distance, she gave up only one run and five hits.

Everything changed for the 'Cats on Friday as they lost to Western Illinois 1-0 and New Mexico State, 2-0.

Against Western Illinois, the team had trouble producing runs as it collected eight hits and was unable to send any runners home. The losing pitcher was K-State's Diane Punza. Punza, 1-1, played up to Currie's expectations as she allowed only two hits.

In the game against New Mexico State, K-State had more problems as it committed three errors, one of them coming in the fourth inning which helped produce both of New Mexico State's runs.

"In order for a team to win, you have to produce some hits," Currie said. "As for us, we just didn't get the kind of hitting needed to win."

The next game for the women will be 3 p.m. Wednesday against Pittsburg State University at Cico Park.

Practice boosts Houston Cougars to Final Four

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

His team shot more than 53 percent Sunday, but Coach Guy Lewis said the key to unranked Houston's advance to the Final Four in the NCAA Basketball Tournament may have been a practice session 24 hours earlier.

The Cougars, anticipating problems from a pressing Boston College defense, worked out 75 minutes on the same floor where they won the Midwest Regional by defeating the Eagles 99-92 Sunday.

The workout paid off. En route to its victory, Houston turned the ball over only three times in the opening half.

"I'm overwhelmed, really," said Lewis after taking his 499th career coaching triumph in 26 seasons.

"I felt that if we could beat the press, we could win the ball game," he added. "They made it extremely tough. I'm just so happy with the way the guys handled the ball."

With his team clinging to a slim advantage late in the contest, Lewis went to a seldom-used substitute to help nail down the Cougars' 25th victory in 32 games.

Reid Gettys, 6-6 freshman, rewarded the coach by sinking 10 foul shots in the final five minutes. Before the game, Gettys had scored only 32 points in 18 contests.

Lewis said the move to his bench was dictated by Gettys' shooting proficiency.

"Michael Young wasn't having a very good game," Lewis said. "We knew Gettys was a good foul shooter. We felt like we could count on him at the line."

Boston College co-captain Dwan Chandler agreed with Houston's coach in labeling the Cougars' effectiveness against the press as instrumental in the outcome.

"You have to give them a lot of credit because they did a good job," Chandler said. "Our press wasn't as good as we would have liked it to be. It was a combination of our not getting the job done and their doing the right things at the right time."

"We knew what we had to do," said Lynden Rose, a 6-foot-3 Houston point guard who handed out seven assists and scored 15 points.

The triumph advanced Houston to an assignment Saturday against No. 1 North Carolina, champion in the East Regional, in one of the Final Four showdowns at New Orleans.

"I don't know how we're going to play it; I know North Carolina is a great basketball team," Lewis said. "I'd say no doubt we'll have to play an outstanding game."

Slick-shooting Rob Williams, restricted to 10 points during Houston's 79-78 victory over Missouri in the regional semifinal, was selected as the standout player of the Midwest Regional.

He was joined on the all-star team by John Garris and John Bagley of Boston College, who combined for 45 points for the Eagles in a losing effort. Other members of the team were Larry Mischeaux of Houston and Ricky Frazier of Missouri.

"That Bagley was everything they said he was," said Houston's Lewis of the chunky Boston College guard, who connected on 11 of 18 shots in the title game and kept his team close.

Auto insurance coverage: there's a model to fit you

(Editor's note: Consumer Corner is a project of the Consumer Relations Practicum class.)

By LISA BAALMAN
Contributing Writer

An automobile insurance policy is simply a combination of any or all of six basic types of coverage that provide financial protection.

Bodily injury liability insurance pays for your legal defense and for damages assessed against you if the insurance company agrees — or a court decides — that you are legally liable or negligent. You are covered as long as you, a member of your immediate family, or another (with your permission) is driving the car. It also covers you and the immediate family when driving someone else's car with his permission.

Property damage liability applies when you damage the property of others, such as cars, lampposts and buildings with your car. It will pay for legal defenses and payments for damages in which you are legally liable up to the limits of your policy.

COVERAGE IS usually stated as 25/50/10 (thousand) or 100/300/25 (thousand) with the first amount being the maximum amount paid for bodily injury for one person; the second amount, the maximum paid for bodily injury for any one accident; and the third amount, the maximum paid for property damage in any one accident.

Coverage for medical payments includes payments of expenses resulting from accidental injury to you or your family, and is effective whether you are driving your own car, another's or are injured while on foot. It differs from bodily injury coverage in that it covers you and your family as well as others in your car and is paid regardless of who is at fault.

Protection against uninsured and underinsured motorists applies to bodily injuries in which an uninsured, underinsured, or hit-and-run driver is legally liable. This covers you and your family if in your car, someone else's or if struck by a car while walking. Persons riding in your car are also covered.

COMPREHENSIVE PHYSICAL damage protection insures you against losses resulting from damage to your car. This damage can be caused by things such as broken glass, falling objects, water, hail, vandalism or similar causes. It doesn't include mechanical difficulties or collisions.

Collision insurance applies when your car is damaged in a collision or turns over. Damages are paid regardless of who is at fault.

Physical damages, comprehensive and collision coverage are usually sold with a deductible. This means in the event of accidental damage you pay the stated deductible amount first (usually $50 or $100) and the insurance company pays the rest.

NO-FAULT INSURANCE was developed to counter the delays, inconsistencies and expenses of the court system in determining who is at fault when the accident occurs. The concept of no-fault insurance is that the person's financial losses are paid by his own insurance company regardless of who was at fault. It includes the amount to be paid for medical or funeral expenses, amount of lost income to be paid to an injured income producer, amount to be paid to a person hired to perform services a non-income producing member of the family is unable to perform and conditions governing the right to sue.

As of Jan. 1, Kansas law requires private passenger vehicle owners to have and maintain a no-fault insurance policy with minimum limits of $25,000 per person, $50,000 per accident, $10,000 for property damage limits and the basic personal injury package of benefits continuously throughout the registration of the vehicle. Policies may be purchased with higher limits. Policy holders must now have uninsured motorist and underinsured motorist protection.

Medical payments coverage in excess of personal injury protection, comprehensive and collision coverages are at the option of the buyer.

Kassebaum

farm price supports.

In his budget, Reagan calls for a 10 percent increase in foreign aid, but Kassebaum said, "We can't assume that money will buy friendship. I wish, particularly in the Caribbean, we would give more one-on-one aid."

She said she would support sending and training teachers, doctors and others to "build up and support a strong middle class structure."

KASSEBAUM SAID, from letters she has received, she believes Americans are becoming more "isolationist."

"They are saying, 'Why should we help other people when we can't help our people at home'," she said. "We're in an independent world, we're no longer an isolated country.

Problems that have brought this about are the threat of an embargo, the oil glut and the energy situation, and the Polish debt.

Kassebaum said she supports helping Poland out.

"I don't know what good it would have done to have let them go into default," she said. "I don't know what we could have claimed. It was far better for us, having made the loans, to prop them up."

Kassebaum said the United States needs to be more cautious when making loans, but she noted that "It's mostly agricultural products that are the benefit of those loans."

AGRICULTURE IS a vital part of foreign trade, she said.

"Many times in Washington they will ask why a senator from Kansas would want to be on the Foreign Affairs Committee. They ask 'Do they really understand foreign affairs out there?' and it's really insulting at times," she said. "But I think we have a far better understanding than on either coast because this is where most of our foreign exchange comes from."

The threat of an embargo, despite the claims of President Reagan and Secretary of State Alexander Haig that there would be no embargo, continues to be a "cloud over the head of the farmers," she said.

Kassebaum said she supports "free and fair trade" with other countries, and said trade with Japan should be more fair to the United States.

The conference is scheduled continue today in the Union. During the morning session, Joe Twinian, department assistant secretary in the State Department, will speak on U.S.-Arab relations. Tonight, Governor John Carlin is scheduled to present Exporter of the Year Awards at the session at the Ramada Inn. The conference is scheduled to end Tuesday.

Parking costs may double

By DARCY LINDSTROM
Collegian Reporter

A 100 percent increase in parking permit costs was approved Thursday by the Traffic and Parking Council, but before the proposal can go into effect it must be approved by the Board of Regents, according to Helen Cooper, space analyst for University Facilities.

According to the proposal, student parking permits fees would increase from $10 to $20. Fees for faculty and staff would increase from $20 to $40 for those with salaries above $10,000, and from $10 to $20 for those with salaries below that level.

The cost of an eight-hour reserved parking space would increase to $60 plus a $40 initial fee. Reserved 24-hour parking permits would cost $100 plus a $40 initial fee. Motorcycle permits would cost $20.

PARKING FEES FOR basketball games would also increase from $1 to $2. It is estimated that the increase will provide about $6,000 annually to assist in maintaining the Ackert lot and possibly other lots as well, according to a memorandum from the Office of the President.

The memorandum also states there will be a change in the policy for parking state and federal vehicles. The new proposal would have state and federal vehicles, where feasible, park in lots or sections of lots designated for that purpose. Costs for construction and maintenance of those spaces will be borne by the University.

The Traffic and Parking Council has also been asked by the Office of the President to consider a proposal whereby the user of a state or federal vehicle may park his personal vehicle in the state or federal vehicle space while the latter is in use.

THE PARKING PERMIT increase is substantially less than the 200 percent increase proposed by the Ad Hoc Parking Fee Review Committee.

One result of the downward adjustment will be postponing two major projects which were to be funded by the proposed 200 percent increase, according to Charles Long, Traffic and Parking Council chairman and associate professor of extension horticulture.

The projects, which included resurfacing the West Stadium and Ackert parking lots, will possibly have to be postponed indefinitely, Long said.

ACCORDING TO Gene Cross, vice president of University Facilities, the specific number of projects that will have to be postponed or eliminated will not be determined until after the increase has been in effect long enough to generate funds.

"As of now, we're looking at an extension of two to three years for smaller projects and up to five years for larger projects," he said.

According to President Duane Acker, the University erred in not making periodic adjustments after fiscal year 1974. In future years, there will be an annual review of parking fees, Acker said, and any adjustments will likely be in dollar increments.

Any increases in parking fees will be determined by the economy and the needs of the University, according to Cross.

"No one knows what the economy will do. Traffic and Security must be a self-supporting fund. If inflation continues, then parking fees will have to increase," Cross said.

Copies of the proposed Traffic and Parking regulations for 1982-83 will be available for public review through Wednesday at the reserve desk in Farrell Library, Student Governing Association office in the Union and the Faculty Senate office in Eisenhower 22.

Carlin backs ITC funding

The economic importance of international trade to employment and the growth of Kansas was underlined in a brief speech by Gov. John Carlin Monday night at the Ramada Inn Crystal Room.

Carlin was in Manhattan to present the International Trade Council (ITC) Exporter of the Year awards to David Kerr, president of Agronomics International Inc., a Kansas firm involved in landscaping and irrigation in Saudi Arabia, and to Ed King, chairman of the board of King Radio Foundation, a Kansas avionics firm. King's award was accepted by Robert Cox, president of King Radio.

Gov. John Carlin

Carlin has been a strong proponent of the ITC, twice proposing an increase in its budget to the Legislature. This year Carlin proposed a $110,000 budget for ITC, according to President Duane Acker, who introduced Carlin.

"We must all work together with state officials and legislators to enhance international trade and to support ITC," Carlin said.

According to Carlin, the economic growth of Kansas depends more and more on international trade.

"With each passing day Kansans will increase their part in international trade on the private, public and university level," Carlin said.

Contract fee helps ensure space in campus housing

By LAUREEN MOORE
Collegian Reporter

Twenty-five dollars. It will buy about eight pitchers of beer, several dinners out, a textbook or the application fee for a residence hall contract.

Students who want to live in residence halls must pay a $25 fee in order to apply for a housing contract. The fee prevents students from getting contracts "just in case they might need them," according to Tom Frith, director of housing.

"If they pay the $25 fee it shows us that they are really serious about living in a residence hall," Frith said.

For the past few years, 300 to 400 students each year who were "really serious" about living in a residence hall changed their minds — they thereby foreited their application fee, he said.

The $25 fee is non-refundable whether or not the student decides to live in a residence hall.

"If we did refund the fee it would cost half of the amount (the $25 fee) just to process. It would not be feasible to refund it," Frith said.

APPROXIMATELY 4,500 students who live in residence halls pay the $25 fee each year. The fee is also paid by students living in Jardine Terrace Apartments, but only once because their contract is one of continuous occupancy, according to Frith.

The total amount of money collected from the application fee is about $130,000 a year, according to Frith.

"Well over one half of the money goes into a social and educational fund for the residence halls. This year close to $90,000 went to the fund and the rest goes to operating expenses," he said.

Third voyage: Experiements to test ability of Columbia to survive temperature extremes of space

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Columbia set off spectacularly on its third and longest journey Monday — a 3 million-mile test of the shuttle's ability to withstand the incredible temperature extremes of space.

One hundred-fifty miles above Earth, commander Jack R. Lousma and pilot C. Gordon Fullerton immediately began scientific and thermal tests that will make their seven-day, 116-orbit flight Columbia's busiest yet.

They circled the globe every 89 minutes, 20 seconds.

"Unbelievable — much fun," Fullerton, a rookie astronaut, told Mission Control's Sally Ride, an untested colleague. "You've got to try it." She agreed, and he called working in weightlessness like "learning to swim."

Lousma and Fullerton asked for, and got, permission to spend a few minutes being just tourists. Their reaction to a view privileged to few mortals was typical of all the astronauts who had been there before them.

"The first part of the flight was a real barnburner," said commander Lousma.

"We've got a pretty spectacular view," said Fullerton. "We're looking down at Hawaii down there somewhere. We see a lot of clouds and blue water."

MORE THAN A MILLION people watched the launch from waterside sites along the Florida Space Coast. Authorities said it may have been the largest spaceshot crowd ever. No spectators are being permitted next Monday when Columbia is scheduled to land on the Army's White Sands Missile Range.

President Reagan watched liftoff on television and called it "a magnficient achievement." On launch-eve, he telephoned the astronauts, wished them Godspeed and good luck and said: "All America is proud of you and those who made it possible."

There was a cauldron of fire and an outlandish roar as Columbia's three engines and two rocket boosters catapulted the ship off launch pad 39A at 11:00:08 a.m. EST. Seven seconds later, the ship cleared the 347-foot launch tower and arced majestically backward over the Atlantic Ocean. Ten minutes into the flight, the astronauts were in orbit, skimming over the world at 17,400 mph.

LOUSMA HAD BEEN in space before, on the 59-day flight of Skylab 2, but his heart rate at launch jumped to 132 beats per minute — double the rate at rest. Fullerton took launch with placid 92 beats.

Half-way to orbit, one of Columbia' three auxiliary power units (APUs) overheated, but Holloway said it probably would right itself when cool. "Right now the APU is considered healthy and usable for entry," he said. The same unit gave trouble on the Flight 2 launch, had to be shut down prematurely, and worked on reentry.

The units operate the steering systems on ascent and reentry.

The errant unit reached a temperature of 330 degrees — five degrees above the danger line — when it was turned off.

DURING THE FLIGHT, Columbia will be a methodical sunbather, carefully measuring exposure on all sides to gauge its effects. Late Monday, the astronauts were to point the ship's tail to the sun, holding it there for 28 hours. On Wednesday, Lousma turns the ship's nose to the sun and leaves it that way for 80 hours. Saturday, the open cargo bay and its instruments are pointed to the sun for 28 hours.

In sunlight, Columbia's systems must endure temperatures of 250 degrees Fahrenheit; in shadow, readings drop to 215 below zero.

Opening the 60-foot cargo doors — to expose scientific experiments and dissipate heat — was the astronauts' first major task in orbit and it went smoothly.

The experiments involve honey bees, velvetbean caterpillar moths, a miniature greenhouse with pine seedlings, and a small suitcase full of sunflower seeds.

THE FLAGSHIP OF NASA's "Ace Trucking Company" — as the astronauts like to call the Space Transportation System — left an hour late because of a pre-dawn breakdown in ground fueling equipment.

Columbia's maiden launch last April was two days behind plan; the second flight, in November, was eight days late.

Monday, as the ship, its rockets and expendable fuel tank rose, a cotton-white tower of tightly coiled smoke marked the ascent. The ship ducked into a cloud briefly and then reappeared in the brilliant azure sky for two minutes or more.

Then the solid rockets, strapped to each side of the tank, dropped off and parachuted into the Atlantic, exactly on target and in view of NASA's fleet. The fuel tank, jettisoned after nine minutes' flight, broke up in the atmosphere over the Indian Ocean.

On this trip, Columbia is to double its time in space, adding 2,960,000 miles to the 2,764,800 logged on flights one and two. Each 90-minute trip around Earth adds 25,600 miles to Columbia's odometer.

Severance tax supporters seek Senate vote

TOPEKA — Supporters of an oil and gas severance tax urged a hostile Senate Ways and Means Committee Monday to send a House approved, but heavily amended, bill to the full Senate for debate and a vote.

However, there were indications both this bill and another one still held by the Senate Assessment and Taxation Committee were headed for summary execution by the Ways and Means Committee later this week.

There are six solid votes against the severance tax on the 11-member panel.

Sen. Jim Allen (R-Ottawa) served notice Monday he will make a motion during the Senate session Tuesday afternoon to discharge the second bill from Assessment and Taxation.

That would send it to the Ways and Means Committee where it was doubly referred, and where the House bill was sent last Friday after the Assessment and Taxation Committee amended it and endorsed it, 6-5.

Mudslinging marks El Salvador campaign

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador — Most Salvadorans who vote next Sunday will have only a vague idea of who they are backing and why because of a campaign marked more by mud-slinging than by serious debate on issues.

Electioneering, getting dirtier by the day, ends Wednesday for the more than 300 candidates from six rightist parties. They are vying for 60 seats in a Constituent Assembly.

Most of the attacks have been aimed at junta President Jose Napoleon Duarte, who is not running for anything but whose Christian Democrat Party is considered the one to beat.

On Monday the National Conciliation Party described Duarte in a newspaper advertisement as "pathetic, terrifying, apocalyptic, offensive, emotional, dramatic, melodramatic, exhausting, comical, waggish, festive, foolish, grotesque, ridiculous, laughable, hilarious, ribald, burlesquish and satirical."

Leak prompts Three Mile Island alert

MIDDLETOWN, Pa. — Radioactive water was found to be leaking today from the coolant system of the damaged Three Mile Island nuclear reactor, prompting officials to declare a low-level alert that lasted two hours.

Officials canceled the "unusual event" declaration at 12:18 p.m. after the leak had stopped. At its peak, the water was leaking at a rate of 2.2 gallons per minute.

Phil Fine, spokesman for GPU Nuclear, the plant operator, said between 150 and 200 gallons of the slightly radioactive water leaked from a makeup water supply system into the plant auxiliary building.

The unusual event, the lowest classification on a four-step emergency scale, was declared at 9:25 a.m. after instruments indicated water was leaking from the Unit 2 reactor coolant system.

Woolworth Co. to expand in Junction City

NEW YORK — The F.W. Woolworth Co. plans to close its distribution center in California and shift most of those operations to a similar facility in Kansas, a company official said Monday.

The Pacific Distribution Center in South San Francisco, Calif., which serves 185 Woolworth stores, will shut down by June 1, said Joseph Carroll, company vice president of public affairs.

The responsibility for supplying most of those stores will be transferred to the South Central Distribution Center in Junction City, Carroll said.

Carroll said Woolworth was making the move because of "technological obsolescence" at the California center and "underutilization of more technological advances at other centers."

About 150 workers in South San Francisco will be laid off as a result of the action, while 30 to 40 jobs are expected to be added at the Junction City center, which already serves 507 stores in 19 states.

Senate panel studies bank deregulation

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — The nation's bankers must "pull their heads out of the sand" and become part of a revolution in the financial services industry, the chairman of the Senate Banking Committee said Monday.

"It would be nice to go back to the time when everybody was providing a specialized service and when the prime rate was at 5 percent," Sen. Jake Garn (R-Utah) said. "But those days are gone."

Garn, a leading advocate of bank deregulation, said his committee is taking a comprehensive look at financial regulations "so we can try to come up with some proposals on what to do in the next couple of years."

Garn, who was attending a banking seminar in Kansas City, said he is dissatisfied with the lack of a consensus among the nation's banks and savings and loans over how to proceed with deregulation.

Reduction plans are propaganda

The timid game of nuclear arms reduction continues as the Kremlin and Leonid Brezhnev presented their latest pitch, a plan to delete medium-range missiles in the Soviet European region.

Both Reagan and Brezhnev have now made ceremonial attempts to smooth the antagonistic anti-nuclear force which has been growing in Europe and spilling across to the shores of the United States. Each effort deserves the title bandied by officials for each country from the other, propaganda.

Such checkerboard moves do not deserve the presentation nor the expected rebuttal given them. The basic mistrust that has shrouded diplomatic exchanges between capitalism and communism since Yalta prevents any efforts to dismantle the game. Each player is there to win and defense is touted as the key to a standoff or a victory.

Each move may be viewed as an attempt to develop a base for dismantlement, to agree on one minute section of the game board that will serve as an initiative.

However, when the moves are accompanied with reports of Soviet promises of military aid to thwart possible attacks from U.S. military supplies to Pakistan or threats of "retaliatory steps" by armament in the U.S.'s "territory" if missiles are increased in Western Europe, the moves become tainted.

The coloring is equally applicable to he expanding Reagan budget proposals for the Pentagon and the U.S. plans to proceed with the installation of Pershing II and cruise missiles in Western Europe, not to mention its expanded military exports and aid to El Salvador.

Such empty-handed proposals only succeed in temporarily satisfying the spectators and proving again that it is difficult to dismantle a game until the final conclusion produces a psuedo-victor.

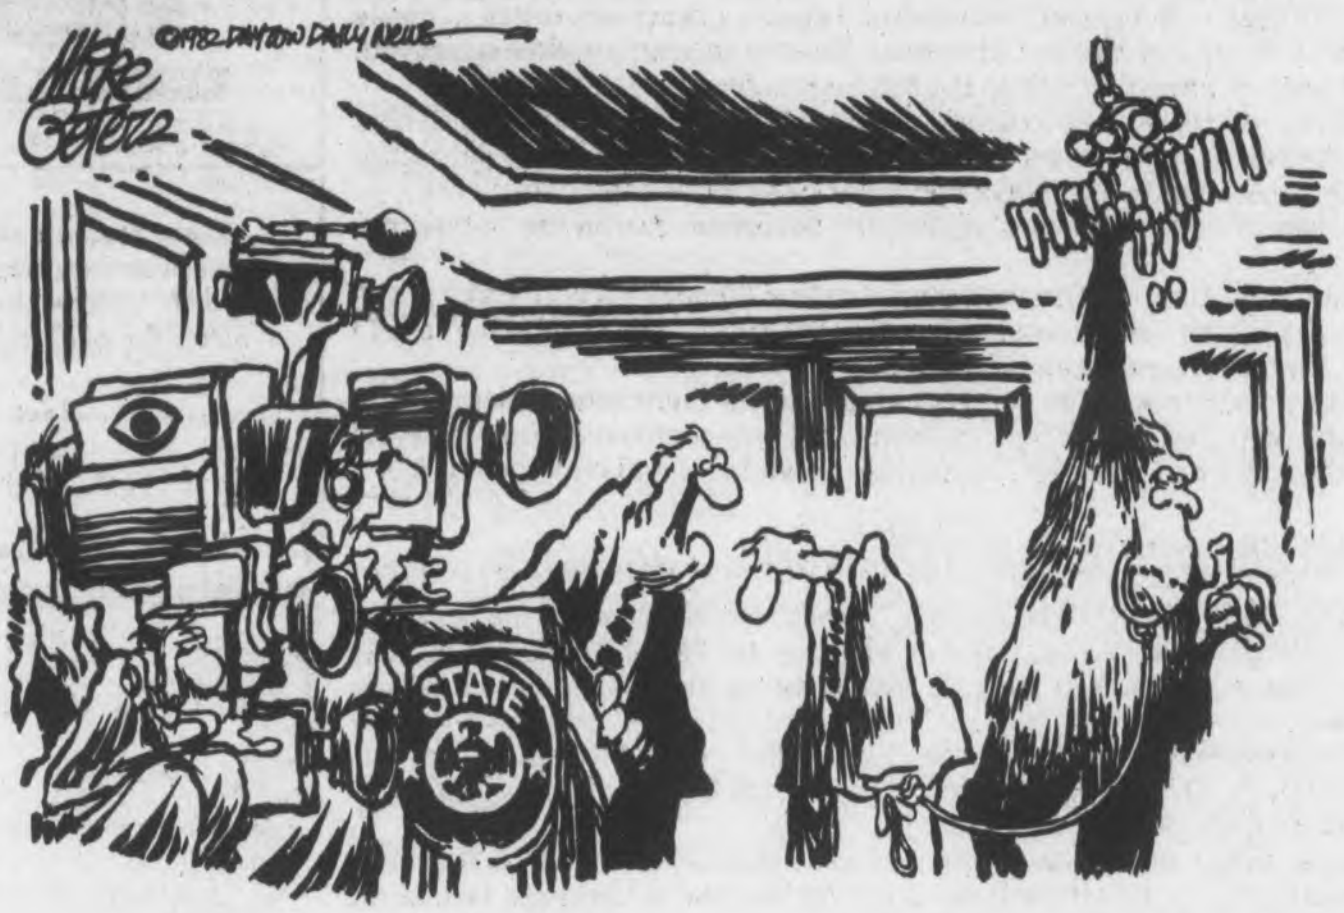
Representation is a valued asset

K-State fans enjoyed the pleasure of national representation in the men's and women's NCAA tournaments.

A thank-you is extended to these athletic ambassadors of the University.



The talented Wildcats provided their academic cohorts with some excellent basketball entertainment. For those students not economically able to travel, the games provided an excitement often lacking during a vacation spent "at home." For those students traveling, the Wildcat's achievements enabled them to raise the level of familiarity with K-State to others. "You go to K-State? Oh yeah, the school with the basketball teams."

GUERRILLA, YOU IDIOT... I SAID FIND A NICARAGUAN GUERRILLA...

Pete Manfredo

Let there be referees, and there were

The scene: 7:30 a.m. on Dec. 19, 1977. It was on this cold winter's morning that I stumbled — hung over — into my final final. I was a lowly freshman in the dreaded 7:30 English Composition I. No studying was necessary, just bring your brain and pen. I checked when I arrived to make sure I had both.

The graduate teaching assistant, in his infinite wisdom, had decided the topic choices for the final essay would be: (1) religion, (2) sports or (3) cheating. "S---," I thought semi-quietly to myself. Why didn't he pick a topic I know something about, like how to party in New Jersey. I didn't know enough about any of those to write a three-page paper.

Suddenly, idea!

The result: A story entitled "God Will Get You If You Cheat At Sports," an editorial according to Kerrigan (remember him seniors?).

IN THE BEGINNING God created Man. After frolicking in the Garden of Eden for a few weeks, Man became extremely bored. God was growing tired of listening to Man's complaints every day, so he decided to invent sports. Man was very pleased.

On his own initiative, Man quickly invented the rules and equipment necessary to be proficient in sports. After amusing himself with his sports, Man again became bored. Since God was in bed with the flu, Man took it upon himself to invent what he called cheating. Cheating brought a new challenge to sports. Man, again, was very pleased.

When God came back to work one day, he was amazed at the accomplishments by Man, that is until he noticed cheating. Needless to say, God was extremely pissed-off. Yet, being the nice guy that He is, God decided not to deprive Man of his inventions. Instead, He began to devise a way to stop Man from cheating at sports.

AFTER MANY YEARS of thought, He came up with a brainstorm. Seconds later, God appointed referees to keep a holy eye on the action. From that day forward, the referee became the Cardinal of sports. God knew that was good.

Man was not so pleased this time. He knew God was up to something. God then told Man not to argue with the referees because their decisions were always final. Man tried to get the referee to change his mind, but it was to no avail. Man stomped on the ground, pulled his hair out and threw tantrums because he could not handle the restrictions.

ONE DAY Man went over the head of the referees and went straight to the top. Man complained that the referees had called him out when he was caught sneaking towards the next base in a baseball game. God spoke angrily, "Of course you were out, idiot. You know stealing isn't allowed around here!" Man took God's words to mean that referees were here to stay, so he learned to live with the referees.

God gives much credit to his guardian angels of sport because without His help they make decisions immediately after they see cheating, leaving him free to enjoy His golf game. Many controversial games have been decided by the single decision of an umpire or a referee. For example, a penalty in the man-made game of football can cost Man up to 15 yards of his playing field.

OF COURSE these split-second decisions made by the referees are always right, for we must never forget that the average apostle of God is blessed with the gift of hindsight. To be sure that the referees do make the proper decision, God has decreed that a referee must never make a wrong call or he shall, by divine province, be mugged by irate New York fans. This unwritten law has been the basis for every decision ever made by a referee.

In addition to hindsight, the referee is also blessed with the ability to be everywhere on the playing field at any time. Many players have been thrown into a state of shock caused by turning and seeing the unexpected messenger of God.

You may well ask, "What happens to referees after they expire?" Truthfully, only He knows for sure, but rumor has it the original twelve referees have been put on standby and are prepared to catch cheaters on the judgment day.

Stay tuned. Tomorrow: God Gets Even.

Report charges Soviets with chemical warfare

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration charged Monday that Soviet-supplied chemical weapons have killed more than 10,000 people in Afghanistan, Laos and Cambodia and appealed to other nations to join in condemning such practices.

A State Department official, Gary Crocker, said there are also reports of an unknown and unseen "mystery agent" used on anti-Soviet freedom fighters in Afghanistan. He said it kills so swiftly it freezes victims in position when it strikes.

The death toll from so-called "yellow rain" and other chemical weapons was 6,310 in Laos, 981 in Cambodia and 3,042 in Afghanistan, the department said in a 31-page report that summarizes the U.S. government's evidence.

MOST OF THE CHARGES have been aired before, but the administration said it was issuing the report to ease doubts that it lacked sufficient evidence for the charges. It said the information was based on eyewitness accounts from defectors and victims and physical samples taken from areas where chemical attacks had occurred.

Walter J. Stoessel Jr., the deputy secretary of state, said the report is being sent to Congress and to the secretary-general of the United Nations and all U.N. members.

"The Soviet Union and its allies are flagrantly and repeatedly violating international law and international agreements," Stoessel told reporters at a briefing. He said the weapons are being used against nations which are least able to defend themselves.

Richard Burt, director of the State Department's office of politico-military affairs, said that the administration hopes to raise the issue "higher on the international agenda" to bring pressure on the Soviet Union to halt the use of chemical weapons.

THE ADMINISTRATION HAS been discouraged that more nations haven't joined in condemning the use of chemical weapons.

The attacks occurred over a seven-year period, the report said. It listed 10,527 known dead. Officials said the figure could be higher. The Soviets and their allies deny using chemical weapons.

Two-thirds of the deaths occurred in Laos, the report said. It charged that "Lao and Vietnamese forces, under direct Soviet supervision" have used mycotoxins, or fungi poisons, and other chemicals against Hmong tribesmen in Laos since 1976.

A GROUP OF United Nations officials who investigated the U.S. charges said last month they could neither verify nor refute the charges involving Afghanistan, where Soviet military forces have been fighting Afghan rebels since the Soviets entered the country in 1979.

Officials acknowledged that the use of toxins was less conclusive in Afghanistan than in Laos and Cambodia, but said it believed that chemical agents were being used.

Burt denied any suggestion that the administration was making public the evidence of Soviet use of chemical weapons to help generate support for U.S. development of chemical weapons of its own. The administration wants to spend $705 million for military chemical programs in fiscal 1983. No U.S. chemical weapons have been made since 1969.

Contracts

The social and educational fund is allocated to the residence halls at the beginning of each school year. The money is to be spent for activities, tutors, bands and food for parties, and part of it may be spent for beer for residence hall parties, according to Frith. The rest is to be used as the hall residents designate.

AT HAYMAKER HALL the money is used for rental and recreation equipment, the semi-formal and formal parties, Christmas trees and refreshments for parties, according to Dave Deckert, senior in accounting and Haymaker treasurer.

"We also use the money to pay to get the vacuum cleaners fixed — it seems like they are always breaking down. If a lamp or something gets broken and we can't find out who did it, then we take money out of the fund to fix or replace it," Deckert said.

The $25 fee for residence hall contract applications has been in effect at K-State since 1965. Many colleges and universities have the same type of policy, Frith said.

"This is earnest money. If they really want to live in a residence hall they will put up the money to show their intent," he said.

"The fee makes it possible to be fairer to students. We put a halt to the number of applications sent out so that there are not more applications out than spaces available. This way we can more accurately tell them the status of housing space," Frith said.

Government assistance aids businesses in foreign trade

By PAUL HANSON
Collegian Reporter

Business relations between the United States and Egypt may be more a result of compatible bureaucracies than of the Camp David accords reached between former Egyptian President Anwar Sadat and former President Jimmy Carter, according to Walter Evans, an international attorney from Washington, D.C.

Evans spoke at an afternoon meeting of the eighth International Trade Conference Monday in the Union. This year's conference focuses on expanding trade with countries on the Arabian Peninsula.

Evans is the United States lawyer for the Qatar embassy, and assists the embassies of Japan and Sudan. He is advising businessmen about nuances of commerce with countries in the Arab Gulf region.

EGYPT IS KNOWN among businessmen for having an almost impenetrable bureaucracy, Evans said, and the United States Agency for International Development (AID) has much the same reputation.

"It is possible that our relations are due less to the charisma of Anwar Sadat and Jimmy Carter's wishes for peace than the fact that Egypt's bureaucrats look at the AID and say we finally found a bureaucracy to rival ours," he said.

Personal relationships and long-term committments were stressed by Evans as important to the success of any business venture in the Middle East.

"The American businessman may be too used to coming in and giving his presentation, and expecting a yes or no answer," Evans said.

In Arab countries there is great disdain for "one-week wonders," the businessman who comes in and makes a great one-time deal and is never heard from again.

ALTHOUGH MANY businessmen look askance at government interference and are skeptical about governments' ability to assist in their business practices, Evans said foreign trade is an area where government can help businessmen.

"The government can provide detailed documents that are of real value to business," he said. "It may make you wonder about how you taxes are being spent, but you can even get documents that describe the apparel market in Yemen."

Evans said it is a mistake to think of the Arab Gulf as an entire region rather than individual countries.

"You can drive 100 yards across a border and see the people driving different kinds of cars, wearing different clothes and living under different customs," he said.

One way people can accustom themselves to the Arab way of business is to get to know some of the Arab students in the United States, Evans advised.

"Here at most any university you have a good number of Arab students," Evans said, "and though the contacts you make may or may not prove to be of any business value, the friendships you make will stay with you forever."

Oversupply, price support causes glut in dairy goods

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — The nation's dairy farmers are churning out butter, milk and cheese so fast this year that the government expects to buy twice as much cheese — 200 million pounds — in its price support program as it can give away to the nation's poor.

"Clearly, there's an economic incentive to produce dairy products for government warehouses in this country," Merritt Sprague said Wednesday as a federal conference on the $2.2 billion dairy price support program opened.

"It's like they used to say in the old Superman program, it's up, up and away," said Sprague, an Agriculture Stabilization and Conservation Service official, of the bulging government stockpile.

Agriculture Secretary John Block called dairy producers and distributors together after concluding costs of the price support program had reached "intolerable" levels.

No quick fixes are expected at the conference.

"We have no program or plan to announce," said Richard Lyng, deputy agriculture secretary.

The price support program is designed to eliminate "temporary seasonal gluts and shortfalls in production (which) would cause very erratic prices for farmers and consumers," according to a U.S. Department of Agriculture statement.

The government must buy enough dairy products to support the price of milk at a level specified by Congress "to assure an adequate supply and productive capacity sufficient to meet anticipated future needs."

But dairy production has shot up dramatically in the past two years, leaving the government wallowing in 306 million pounds of butter, 585 million pounds of cheese and 918 million pounds of nonfat dry milk.

Outside of the money spent to acquire the stockpile, the USDA will spend another $390 million this year in storage, transportation and interest costs, Sprague said.

Shortly after taking office, the Reagan administration convinced Congress to delay an increase in the price support level as a means of encouraging farmers to cut production.

Carlin seeks disaster relief

TOPEKA, Kan. (AP) — Gov. John Carlin asked the federal Small Business Administration Monday to declare Crawford, Cherokee, Labette and Montgomery Counties in southeast Kansas as disaster areas.

In his request, the governor placed the total amount of damage to non-farm buildings in the four counties at slightly more than $2.5 million.

If the declarations are granted, it would make residents of the four counties eligible for low-interest loans to help them rebuild from devastating tornadoes which raked the area the evening of March 15.

"I am urging the Small Business Administration to approve my request as soon as possible so that those citizens who suffered damage to their homes or businesses can begin to rebuild," Carlin said in announcing his decision to seek the declarations.

"In addition, I am expecting to receive complete reports this week on the damage caused to farmers in southeast Kansas from the storms. I will be making a request to the Farmers Home Administration for assistance to them when those reports are received."

The governor's office said if the SBA issues the disaster declarations for Crawford, Cherokee, Labette and Montgomery Counties, loans would become available to storm victims "to aid them in recovering from the damages."

The tornadoes which swept across northeast Oklahoma, southeast Kansas and southwest Missouri a week ago Monday night left three dead and about 20 injured in Kansas. Carlin said there were 13 tornadoes identified in 11 counties of Kansas.

Carlin's report on damage, which he sent to William Powell, Kansas City regional SBA administrator, listed $900,000 worth of damage in Crawford County, $835,000 in Labette, $475,000 in Montgomery and $300,000 in Cherokee.

He said indications are that about 35 percent to 40 percent of those losses are not covered by insurance. Fifteen of 45 homes destroyed in the four counties had no insurance, he added.

Carlin listed 23 structures destroyed and 35 damaged in Crawford County, four and 38 in Montgomery, six and 21 in Cherokee and 12 and 50 in Labette.

"There is considerable farm home and farm building damage," Carlin added. "Assistance will be requested from the Farmers Home Administration for this damage.

"In view of the devastating destruction and the overwhelming personal losses, it is requested that the Small Business Administration declare Crawford, Cherokee, Labette and Montgomery Counties disaster areas for the purpose of obtaining loans to aid residents and businesses in recovering from the damages."

Bill could extend sales

TOPEKA, Kan. (AP) — When the clock strikes midnight, private clubs in Kansas have to stop serving 3.2 percent beer even though "strong" beer can keep flowing another three hours.

That provision in Kansas law would be changed in a bill considered Monday by the Senate Federal and State Affairs Committee.

The bill would allow 3.2 beer to be sold during the same hours as all other alcoholic beverages — 9 a.m. to 3 a.m. Monday through Saturday and Sunday noon to 3 a.m. Monday.

Currently, 3.2 beer can not be sold on Sunday and only until midnight all other days. Strong beer has an alcoholic content greater than 3.2 percent.

The bill eliminates the sale of 3.2 beer for off-premise consumption by private clubs, now allowed. Trade associations support the changes.

Committee chairman Sen. Ed Reilly (R-Leavenworth) indicated he was interested in seeing liquor laws changed to allow beer to be sold in grocery stores on Sunday and allowing sales for off-premise consumption to continue. Previous efforts to allow Sunday sale of beer by grocery stores have been defeated repeatedly.

Rev. Richard Taylor, of Kansas for Life At Its Best, urged the committee to bring conformity to the sale of 3.2 beer and alcoholic beverages by restrictig hours to midnight rather than 3 a.m.

"By 3 a.m. every drinker will be a safer driver," he said.

Thomas Kennedy, director of the state Alcoholic Beverage Control Division, said the law would make enforcement easier.

He said some private clubs do not carry strong beer, but will continue to sell 3.2 beer after midnight to satisfy customers.

The committee will take action on the bill at a later date.

K-State's Dr. Andy Kiorpes, assistant professor in anatomy and physiology, lectures as a part of the Student American Veterinary Medical Association (SAVMA) Symposium at the Veterinary Medicine Complex.

Veterinary symposium: labs, lectures, parties

More than 1,670 veterinary students and spouses invaded the campus over the weekend to do everything from attending labs on treating caged birds, listening to prominent speakers and partying at the Holiday Inn Holidome.

The students, who were from 27 universities, including one Canadian university, were attending the annual Student American Veterinary Medical Association (SAVMA) Symposium. The convention was the first of its kind ever to be held at K-State, according to Linda Johnson, junior in veterinary medicine.

The purpose of the symposium was to give veterinary students from all over the country a chance to meet each other and to learn what other curricula are like, according to Glenn Engelland, junior in veterinary medicine.

Engelland and Johnson were co-coordinators of the symposium entitled "Challenge of '82: The Impact of Veterinary Medicine." Twenty committees and chairmen also helped out, Johnson said.

THROUGHOUT FRIDAY and Saturday students attended lectures, labs, short discussion groups and social events, according to Johnson.

"We tried to cover topics in lectures that aren't normally covered in curriculum," Engelland said.

"We organized a meeting of special interest groups on Thursday night," Johnson said. "That hasn't been done before."

The majority of speakers were from K-State and their topics were divided into small, large and exotic animals, according to Jim Humphrey, junior in veterinary medicine and chairman of the public relations committee. The schedule also included lectures on veterinary law and ethics, Humphrey added.

"Wet labs," which were labs where students could participate in demonstrations or get closer views at procedures, were held at various times throughout the two days, Johnson said. Each school was responsible for deciding who would represent them in these labs.

Some wet labs involved showing how to do a necropsy (autopsy), testing for pregnancy in horses, goat de-bleating and vasectomies, and corrective horseshoeing, according to Dale Williamson, sophomore in veterinary medicine.

THE FEATURED SPEAKER, Dr. Baxter Black, a well-known veterinarian and consultant spoke in McCain Auditorium Saturday night. He relayed his philosophy concerning everything from cowboys to veterinarians' ethics and vegetarians' beliefs using poems, songs and his own brand of humor.

Black told students that this part of their lives would be the hardest and having a sense of humor would help get them through.

"The hours don't get easier," he said, "but it gets a lot more fun."

Expressing his views on veterinary ethics, Black said, "Ethics is a personality thing. If you knew right from wrong when you were a kid then you know it now."

Dr. Michael Fox, director of Animal Health Institute, Washington, D.C., spoke about animal welfare and rights. Fox said he was concerned with people's perception of animals.

"There is a simple wonder and awe in animals," he said, "and we destroy that when we try to dominate them."

IN HIS LECTURE on Friday, Fox called for a change in the oath that veterinarians take because "as it now stands one is bound to render services for the benefit of society first, not animals." The oath should be primarily linked to the well being of animals, he said.

Rick Huneke, sophomore from Virginia Maryland Regional College of Veterinary Medicine (Virginia Tech) said he thought Fox's lecture was "one of the best because it was a real controversial issue." Huneke also said that Kansas was not as flat as he thought it would be.

Dr. Cecil Moore, professor at the University of Missouri, presented lectures on small and large animal eye diseases. Moore said that after he gave the lectures students could get a close view of the animals during a lab session.

"The symposium was very well organized and showed a lot of advance planning," Moore said. There is a tendency for students to think their school is the only school and the symposiums can be "a real eye-opener for them," he said. "They learn that everybody is going through the same thing."

"Table topics," or short speeches followed with a question-and-answer period, were also presented. These discussions were an

K-State vaulter eyes '84 Olympics

By TRACY ALLEN
Collegian Reporter

When Doug Lytle was a senior at Shawnee Mission North High School, becoming an Olympic competitor was something no one at his age would ever dream of. But in Lytle's case, a dream like that could someday become a reality.

Lytle, K-State's All-American pole vaulter, has all the credentials needed to make it to one of the most dreamed about and glamorous events of an athlete's career. Just take a look at his senior year in high school.

The Shawnee Mission prepster was ranked second in the nation in the pole vault with a jump of 16 feet 9 inches. He was also considered by coaches and sportswriters as the fourth best pole vaulter in the world among those in his age group. That's not bad considering he spent most of his career teaching himself to pole vault.

"I started as a high jumper in grade school," Lytle said. "My uncle got me started in sports since he was really active in it himself. However, I really didn't take an interest in the pole vault until junior high school."

ACCORDING TO LYTLE, two friends in junior high led him to try the event.

"Two of my best friends used to pole vault in junior high," he said. "One day while they were practicing, I decided to try it since I kind of felt out of place because I was the only one there who wasn't a pole vaulter.

"At first, I wasn't very successful at it," he said. "But because I'm so competitive and like to try new things, I was determined to keep trying it."

In the beginning stages of his career Lytle used closet rods as a pole for jumping.

"I would take closet rods from my parents' closet, drill holes in them and attach them together using a pipe," he said. "Then I would go outside to my long jump pit and practice for a couple of hours.

"However, I kind of gave that up idea after I broke a few," Lytle said with a chuckle.

During those years, Lytle improved immensely in the pole vault.

"In one meet, I jumped 8-feet-2, which was six inches better than my friends," he said. "Since I was doing fairly well, I continued to compete as a vaulter even though I felt that I still wasn't as good as I wanted to be."

LYTLE CONTINUED to compete in the high jump and pole vault until his family moved to McPherson. At that time, he began to compete only in the pole vault.

In two years at McPherson Junior High School, Lytle improved his vaulting by three inches.

"When I was in the ninth grade, I jumped 11-9," he said.

But for Lytle, his improvement did not stop there as his family moved back to the Shawnee Mission area. According to Lytle, the Shawnee Mission schools had better facilities.

In high school, Lytle became an instant success as he established numerous records for the Shawnee Mission North Indians. However, success was not that easy since he had to compete against two of the top pole vaulters in the country at that time — Steve Stubblefield, Wyandotte, and Jeff Buckingham, from Gardner.

Doug Lytle

"Stubblefield used to beat me quite a bit my senior year," Lytle said. "He would always jump at least 17 feet whereas I was still jumping 16 feet. The same can be said of Buckingham."

ACCORDING TO his high school coach, Merlin Gish, Lytle was a dominant factor for the Indians' track squad.

"Doug was always a good athlete," Gish said. "Not only was he good at the pole vault, but he was also good at other events as well, such as the triple jump and high jump."

In his senior year, Lytle competed in the triple jump, pole vault and high jump in the city's league meet. In that meet he placed high in each event.

After his senior year, Lytle came to K-State determined to become one of the best pole vaulters in the country.

In his freshman year, Lytle came close to proving that as he accomplished what few freshmen would ever dream of doing — becoming an All-American. He earned that honor by finishing fifth in the National Collegiate Athletic Association indoor championships with a jump of 17-feet and third in the outdoor championships with a jump of 17-4½.

But according to the 6-1 sophomore, he still has not accomplished his ultimate goal of becoming an Olympian.

"I feel fortunate for what I have been able to do thus far," he said. "However, I don't feel that I have reached my peak yet. Sure I'm one of the few 19 year olds who has a chance to going to the Olympics. But I do my best of trying to remain open-minded about my chances."

FROM LYTLE'S viewpoint, he is just

Baseball team splits double-header; weak pitching contributes to losses

The K-State baseball team split a doubleheader with Marymount Monday afternoon. The Wildcats' record is now 14-3-1.

In the second game, Mike Wright, 2-0, pitched a one hitter leading the 'Cats to a 10-0 victory. Because of the 10-run spread rule, the game was called in the fifth inning.

Wright, a knuckleballer, credited his teammates for his fine performance.

"The catcher (Cary Colbert) called a really good game," Wright said. "He was mixing them up very well."

"The guys played really well behind me. They deserve a lot of credit," he said.

The Wildcats capitalized on weak pitching by starter Mike Gist and reliever Lance Stokes to score eight runs in the second inning. The 'Cats added one in the third and another in the fifth.

The 'Cats pitching was not as effective in the first game. Marymount scored six runs off three pitchers in the first inning.

However, K-State fought back and was down 7-6 after five innings, but two errors by centerfielder Jeff French allowed four unearned runs to cross the plate in the top of the sixth inning. Marymount held on for an 11-6 victory.

Bob Picket was the winning pitcher with Chris Hamilton getting his first loss of the season.

Cary Colbert hit his fourth round tripper of the season. He is now leading the Wildcats in that category.

Jay Kvasnicka, an outfielder for the 'Cats, was 4-7 for the day. He raised his batting average for the season to .500. He was inserted into the starting line up about a week ago since he started his hitting binge.

The Wildcats host Emporia State today at 1:30 p.m. at Frank Meyers Field.

Tennis team scores victory in season's opening match

The tennis team served its first win of the season by defeating Southwest Missouri State by a 6-3 margin.

In the men's singles division, K-State won four out of the team's six matches — losing the other two matches narrowly. Matt Westfall, Steve Webb, Patrick Theuns, and rookie Mark Hassenflu were the singles winners, and veterans Curt Thompson and Gary Hassenflu were narrowly defeated.

The men's doubles players were just as effective. K-State won two out of three matches with wins from Thompson and Gary Hassenflu, Webb and Westfall. Theuns and Doug Livingston were not as successful. In spite of the victory, Head Coach Steve Snodgrass said conditioning is a concern.

The team has 10 days to prepare for its next match and Snodgrass said he plans to work on an eight-ball drill. This drill consists of selecting shots under fast repetitions. It is designed to increase the team's stamina and to create a challenging atmosphere.

The team's next match will April 2-3 against Arkansas at Little Rock, Oral Roberts at Tulsa, Okla., and Southwest Baptist at Bolivar, Mo.

Lytle

another athlete who is hoping that through hard work he can achieve his ultimate goal.

"You have to prove yourself and win respect from the older guys," he said. "Just because you were a success in high school doesn't necessarily mean that you will become an instant success in college.

"I still consider myself as the little person on the totem pole who still have a long way to go before I ever become what you call as a success," he said. "For me to win nationally, it's going to take a lot of work and effort on my part."

For Wildcat Head Coach Steve Miller, Doug has already proved he is capable of becoming one of the best vaulters ever to compete in the event.

"The best way to describe Doug is that he is a person who has a lot of intensity," Miller said. "I have coached two world record pole vaulters and four Olympians and none of them have had the mental toughness that Doug has. Doug's one of the few people I know who wants to be the best pole vaulter in the world and that's good.

"Doug is one of the few vaulters who has the desire to be the very best in his field," Miller said. "That's the reason why you can classify him as a world class pole vaulter."

BESIDES HIS MENTAL TOUGHNESS, Lytle and Miller's relationship as athlete and coach has also been prosperous.

"We've been together for three months now and we both have learned a great deal from each other," Miller said. "Doug is the kind of guy who always feels unfulfilled. If you talk to him, you think he hasn't accomplished anything. He always says that he can do more.

"But because of his desire, he has taught me that a person shouldn't feel bad about wanting to achieve so much," Miller said.

As for Lytle, "Miller is a fantastic coach. When I was in high school and even in my freshman year in college, I really didn't have a coach until he came along. He is one of the few coaches I know who has any knowledge of the pole vault."

Because of their friendship, Lytle has recorded a number of lifetime bests as well as setting and breaking a couple of school records.

Symposium

effort to supplement the formal lecture schedule, Johnson said.

Dr. Charles Olson, a veterinarian from Salina, gave a talk concerning the cutback of federal funding to research programs.

"We're (veterinarians) going to have to pick up the difference," he said.

"I've been impressed with the caliber of persons speaking here. They've got some top-notched speakers... and it's being run just like our national meetings," Olson said.

IT WAS THE fifth symposium attended by Dr. Arthur Tennyson, SAVMA adviser, who said that the convention went very well from what he could tell by feedback from students.

Tennyson acts as a liaison between the student chapters at the universities and the American Veterinary Medical Association (AVMA).

Part of his job is to speak about what organized veterinary medicine is and does, Tennyson said. It is essential that students know why a national veterinary association is needed, he said.

Before Baxter's talk Saturday night, Tennyson announced eight universities whose last graduating class members had all joined the AVMA. Each of these universities, including K-State, received a plaque.

Many students said they were meeting many other students at the symposium while learning at the same time. They said they enjoyed social events which included a western banquet Friday evening, a wine-and-cheese party Saturday evening and dances both nights at the Holidome.

"The symposium set-up gave you lots of options and events were more planned," Robin Hayes, a junior from Auburn Unversity, said.

"I enjoy Kansas... it's not what I expected. When I thought of Kansas, I thought of wheat fields and dust," Hayes said.

SUSAN SEARCY, a sophomore from Louisiania State University, said she found Kansas "too windy." Searcy said she found a lab dealing with the review of small animal cases "really interesting."

A sophomore from Virginia Tech, Joyce Harmon, said, "I think the facilities are superb here. We could put our little building inside one of their rooms." She added that Virginia Tech is a new veterinary school and she will be a member of the first graduating class.

Nolton Pattio, a junior from the University of Pennsylvania, said, "I've been to the last three conventions and this is one of the more hospitable areas."

K-State won its bid to have the symposium on its third try in three years, according to Engelland. Each school who wants to organize the next symposium makes a bid to the SAVMA house of delegates, which is composed of two members from each university and two persons who represent the three Canadian veterinary schools, Engelland said.

Johnson said that K-State presented a program showing slides of the veterinary school and also of Manhattan and Kansas.

NEXT YEAR'S SYMPOSIUM will be at Michigan State University, Tennyson said.

John Lyons, sophomore in veterinary medicine, was one of several who gave tours of the veterinary clinic. He estimated that between 1,200 and 1,500 students were given tours of the clinic.

Money for the symposium came from registration fees, donations from industry, pharmacuetical companies and from the national organization AVMA, according to Engelland.

The cost of registration was $20 a student, Johnson said. Free housing was provided for about 700 students, she added. The students provided their own transportation to the symposium, but bus service for the students during the convention was provided, Johnson said.

Johnson said that the reasons she wanted to have the symposium was "because we wanted to show off our facilities, faculty and students."

Engelland added, "Also to show other people Kansas."

Dr. Marvin Samuelson, associate professor of veterinary medicine, said that one of the purposes of the symposium was to buld confidence among students, with students and for students. Samuelson is the faculty adviser for the K-State SCAVMA chapter.

Samuelson also said that the net benefit will be to help K-State to recruit graduates and faculty.

Reagan vows to avoid agricultural embargoes

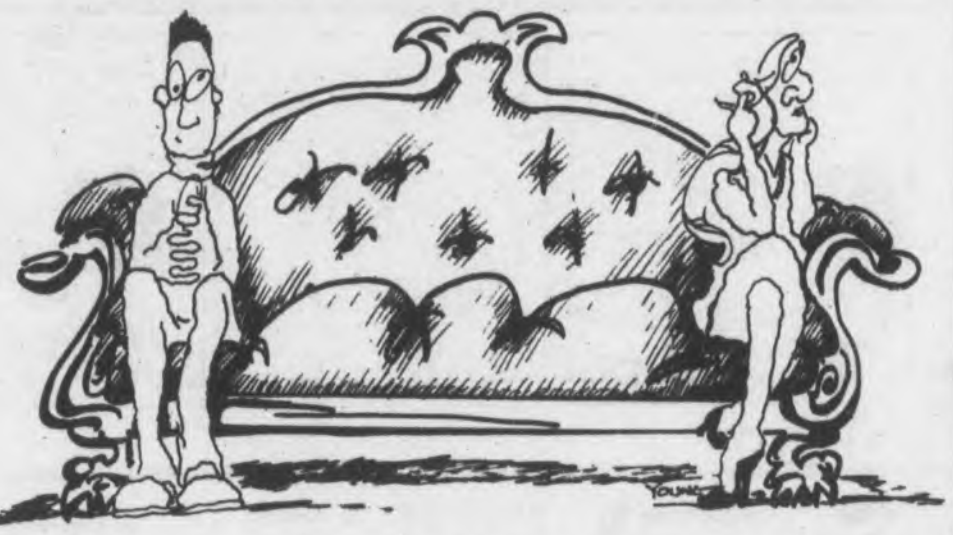
WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan pledged to farmers Monday never to clamp an embargo on agricultural exports unless it is part of a complete boycott of goods backed by America's allies.

Outlining a three-part policy on farm exports, Reagan denounced the Carter administration's 16-month-long partial embargo on corn and wheat exports to the Soviet Union as "totally ineffective" and said it "caused great economic hardship to U.S. agriculture."

In addition to his no-embargo pledge, Reagan promised not to impose any restrictions on farm exports because of rising domestic prices, and declared that "world markets must be freed of trade barriers and unfair trade practices."

The president said, "There is no quick fix for the economy or for our farmers," adding that the weather will be a major factor in determining agricultural prices.

"Some farmers will not make it through this difficult period of readjustment, but the vast majority will," said Reagan. "And they are going to discover a better environment to conduct their business and realize a meaningful profit."



Addressing a group of agricultural editors, Reagan said American farmers are caught in the "third straight year of economic recession. Right now," he said, "many of our farmers must be wondering if the sky has not fallen."

"A vicious cost-price squeeze, high interest rates and uncertain markets have combined to erode many farmers' confidence and hopes for prosperity," the president said. "The tragedy is that much of this misery did not have to happen."

Committee hears plea before severance vote

TOPEKA (AP) — The Senate Ways and Means Committee is scheduled to discuss, possibly amend and vote Wednesday on two bills to impose a severance tax on oil, gas and perhaps coal after hearing a final plea from producers Tuesday that the tax could decimate them.

Representatives of oil, gas and coal producers paraded before the committee late Tuesday, saying the declining price of oil, lack of new gas discoveries and the delicate condition of Kansas' coal industry combine to make this a most inopportune time to impose the tax.

They followed by one day proponents of the tax, who claimed the oil and gas industry is reaping such inflated profits under federal deregulation — and will reap even more when more production is exempted from the windfall profits tax next year — that it can easily afford to pay more to help fund schools and highways in the state.

THE FINAL HEARING, featuring foes of the tax, came after the Senate earlier Tuesday rejected an effort by Senate Democratic Leader Jack Steineger to debate and vote on the Senate's severance tax bill, then voted to withdraw that measure from one committee and send it to almost certain death in the Ways and Means Committee.

Ways and Means already had a House-passed bill, which last Friday won endorsement of the Senate Assessment and Taxation Committee.

Sen. Paul Hess (R-Wichita), chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, said his panel would take up both bills after the Senate adjourns its Wednesday afternoon session.

VIRTUALLY NOBODY expects either bill to survive the 11-member Ways and Means Committee, where there appear to be six ironclad votes against the severance tax, and perhaps as many as eight no votes.

But Sen. Don Montgomery (R-Sabetha), whose vote killed a House-approved severance tax bill in Assessment and Taxation in 1981 and helped pass this year's House measure out of that committee last Friday, said he would offer his amendments to the Ways and Means Committee Wednesday in the hope they would get it advanced to the Senate floor for debate and action by the entire Senate.

Montgomery wants half the revenue derived from the tax, after 15 percent is set aside to be rebated to counties and school districts to offset the erosion of their tax bases, committed to property tax relief by writing into the bills that half the revenue must go into the ad valorem tax reduction fund.

"I haven't given up hope," Montgomery said.

However, Senate President Ross Doyen remains as adamantly opposed to the severance tax as ever, and he and Hess said they want the bills voted up or down in the Ways and Means Committee.

DOYEN ALLOWED Steineger to have his say on the severance tax Tuesday before the full Senate, and cited that as an example of why he believes he is being unfairly accused of blocking action by the full Senate on the severance tax.

"I went the full mile with those people out there, so I would avoid this criticism," Doyen told reporters after Steineger had his say on a motion that really was not debatable but the Senate president allowed him to speak on, anyway.

"There are bills I'd like to see come out of committee that aren't going to see the light of day," added Doyen, who has become more and more sensitive to criticism leveled at him in the media.

Guatemala army officers stage coup after election

GUATEMALA CITY (AP) — Junior army officers overthrew Gen. Fernando Romeo Lucas Garcia's right-wing government Tuesday and replaced it with a junta headed by a retired general who failed in a bid for the presidency eight years ago.

Named as junta leader was retired Gen. Efrain Rios Montt, who ran unsuccessfully for president in 1974 as the candidate of the center-right Christian Democrats.

Rios Montt told reporters at the presidential palace that President Lucas Garcia had been taken to the international airport for a flight out of the country.

He said he would dissolve Congress and rule by decree along with two other junta members, Gen. Horacio Maldonado Shad and Col. Frandisco Gordillo.

Rebel troops had surrounded the presidential palace with tanks and troops in a swift move that encountered no determined resistance from forces loyal to Lucas Garcia.

IN BROADCASTS over national radio and television, the coup leaders said the March 7 election won by another conservative general, Angel Anibal Guervara, was fraudulent, and they promised to restore "peace and authentic democracy to Guatemala."

Guevara did not receive the required majority in the national balloting, but got more votes than any of the three civilian candidates and Congress elected him president at a March 14 session. He had been scheduled to replace Lucas Garcia on July 1 and begin a four-year term.

Creation of the junta was announced on radio and television by Col. Jaime Rabanales, the army's public relations chief. He said the junta would have five members and did not name Maldonado Shad or Gordillo as members.

There was no immediate explanation for the different reports by Rabanales and Rios Montt.

Open House plans include variety of special activities

A Rubik's Cube Contest, the Michelin Man, Winnie-the-Pooh, and rides in tethered hot-air balloons are all part of the special events planned for Open House this weekend.

"I've got some very creative people on my committee," said Jim Foster, senior in accounting and coordinator of Special Projects for Open House.

The first of the events, a Rubik's Cube Contest, will take place at 1:30 p.m. Friday in the Union Courtyard, Foster said.

"Any and every student can participate," he said. But he added that students must sign up before 5 p.m. today in Anderson 104. There is no entry fee, he said.

The winner, whoever can solve the puzzle the fastest, will receive a plaque, according to Foster.

"Whoever competes will use a cube other than their own," he said, "We're going to have stop watches to time them."

Students will have visitors during Open House such as the Michelin Man, Pizza Hut Pete, Winnie-the-Pooh, and Hush Puppy.

These characters, actually Manhattan Shriners, will be strolling throughout campus, according to Foster. Other Shriners, dressed as clowns, will also be giving away about 2,000 helium balloons, Foster said. The balloons, he said, will have the Open House theme — "Rendezvous with KSU" — printed on them. Spurs, a sophomore service honorary group, will inflate the balloons, according to Foster.

Different types of groups, such as singers, magicians, and dancers, will be performing in front of Cardwell Hall throughout Saturday, he said.

"Two hot air balloons will be flying in from Topeka to give them rides," Foster said. But he added, "Only if the weather permits." The balloons will be located on the East Stadium field Saturday.

The Union will be having a pasta buffet from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. on Saturday. Nick Saint-Erne, a magician and sophomore in veterinary medicine, will be going table-to-table performing tricks, Foster said.

"The buffet will cost $3.50," he said. "That's one time through, all you can eat."

Ultimate Frisbees, a Frisbee club, will be doing demonstrations from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. Saturday on Waters Hall lawn, according to Foster.

"These special events were paid for by University funds," he said.

THE SPACE SHUTTLE encountered minor systems problems Tuesday, but there is nothing to indicate its flight will be shortened. See page 2.

DESPITE RUMORS in various newspapers, Coach Jack Hartman says he plans to remain at K-State. See page 16.

Shuttle crews frustrated by tiles, cameras

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — With the space shuttle moving effortlessly through space, astronauts Jack Lousma and C. Gordon Fullerton exercised Columbia's arm Tuesday and wrestled with a long day's flurry of discomforts and frustrations.

Day two in space: There was tile damage across the bridge of Columbia's nose; mist on the cockpit windows; cabin temperatures too warm, then too cool, then just right; a video camera on the blink; two others out.

"The systems problems you normally expect to find were extremely light," said flight director Harold Draughon. There was no suggestion of anything to shorten the flight, which is to end Monday.

The cameras caused the toughest problems. Fullerton needed the electronic eyes to help him grapple a package with the "end effectuator" — hand — on Columbia's robot arm. An elbow camera was needed to scan Columbia's body for tile damage.

Mission Control said the damaged tiles were not located in a critical area. The tiles protect the ship from the heat of reentry. The most heat forms on the ship's underside.

"We anticipate no thermal problem," said Mission Control's Sally Ride. When it worked, the camera showed at least one missing tile in front of the left cockpit window where Lousma sits. The astronauts said they thought the tiles flew off during launch on Monday.

In the meantime, Lousma and Fullerton got much work done. They began the first processing experiments — testing some production techniques that may spark some manfacturing in space.

On the ground, crews at White Sands Missile Range rehearsed their roles in the landing.

After spending the first night in a sleeping bag on the shuttle's middeck, Fullerton said he got too warm and "stripped down to my underwear for a while." It was cool enough by morning that "we both have our jacket on," and then the cabin became comfortable again.

Lousma kept his earphones on and slept in his commander's seat in the cockpit. He didn't sleep too well. "I kept getting a little noise in my ear every time we'd hit the high point in the orbit," Lousma said. Draughon speculated this might have been radar from a ground source in an area that includes China and Iran.

At the rate of one orbit every 89 minutes 20 seconds, 150 miles above Earth, the Columbia underwent some strenuous thermal tests, remaining in a tail-to-sun attitude so that its cargo bay was exposed to the minus 215 degree Farenheit cold of deep space.

The astronauts unlimbered the ship's robot arm but delayed its first "snare" because a tripped circuit breaker knocked out cameras on the arm's wrist and on its elbow.

The circuit breaker popped while pilot Fullerton was putting the 50-foot arm through its paces. Operating from a remote station, he flexed its metallic muscles, moving it about the payload bay.

Overall, the mission was going nicely. The first thermal test, in which Columbia orbited — 150 miles up, 17,400 miles an hour — with its tail to the sun, created conditions of extreme heat and cold.

Interest rates, prices depress farm economy

WICHITA — Bankers, farmers and agribusinessmen painted a bleak picture of the farm economy Tuesday during the second of nine hearings sponsored nationwide by the National Farmers Union.

"Farmers can not survive with high interest rates and depressed prices," said Jim Eatherly, president of the First National Bank of Tonkawa, Okla.

Eatherly, who heads the 5,500-bank agricultural division of the American Bankers Association, said a recent ABA survey showed the severe financial condition of farm borrowers.

About 9 percent of the banks surveyed said 20 percent or more of the farm customers are in a distressed situation. About half of the banks said they currently were involved in one or more forclosures, Eatherly said. The banks all reported sluggish loan demands.

Panel considers plan to alter constitution

TOPEKA — Citizens could directly alter the state constitution under an innovative proposal considered Tuesday by the Senate Federal and State Committee.

The process, known as an "initiative," allows citizens to put questions to a direct vote of the electorate without requiring approval by the Legislature first.

The proposal by Sen. Leroy Hayden (D-Satana) found philosophical support by the committee, but is given little chance of passage this session.

Sen. Ed Reilly (R-Leavenworth) said the initiative process would return some of the power to the citizens, its proper place, since government is suppose to be "by the people, for the people and indeed the people are paying for it."

There are 28 states with an initiative process, perhaps the best known example being California at its Proposition 13, a measure which reduced property taxes.

Police officers rescue woman during fall

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — A woman who had threatened to jump three stories off a scaffold Tuesday was caught by a police officer after she fell head first toward the ground when a firefighter lost his grip on her leg, authorities said.

The 22-year-old woman, who was not identified by police, was treated at a hospital for a possible broken arm after the fall at the Hyatt Regency hotel. Police said she had walked away earlier from the Western Missouri Mental Health Center near the hotel.

Police were called to the hotel when the woman threatened to jump from a construction scaffold about three stories above the hotel parking lot.

"At this point, she either lost her footing or elected to hang suspended from the scaffolding itself by her hands because she dangled above the pavement for several seconds," said Sgt. Jim Treece.

The woman either "lost her grip or released it" as a firefighter climbed up the scaffolding, Treece said.

Boy faces plastic surgery after dog attack

FERGUSON, Mo. — A 6-year-old hero who saved his little sister from an enraged dog faces up to five years of plastic surgery, doctors said Tuesday.

"I handle close to 50 to 60 bites a year, but I've never seen one this bad," said Dr. William Huffaker, who reattached the boy's ear and closed his wounds with 1,000 stitches during 4½ hours of emergency surgery Sunday evening.

Scott was playing with his 3-year-old sister Carrie and a neighbor, Kyle Naes, 4, when the dog jumped their four-foot fence and attacked.

The dog, named "Hombre," was half wolf and half malamute.

"The dog was trying to get me and my sister," Scott said from his hospital bed Tuesday. "Before the dog attacked me, I told her to go get on the jungle gym."

As he boosted the two younger children to the upper bars, the 100-pound dog knocked Scott down and began slashing at his face, chest, back and arms.

Committee endorses naming of King highway

TOPEKA, Kan. (AP) — A House committee Tuesday endorsed a Senate approved bill to name an 11-mile stretch of Interstate 470 in Topeka the "Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. Memorial Highway."

The measure, which now goes to the House for consideration, was billed as a "tribute to great man... and all Kansans who shared in his dream" and was endorsed by the House Transportation Committee on a simple voice vote.

The bills calls for five signs, at a cost of $50 apiece, to be erected on Interstate 470 where it intersects the Kansas Turnpike, Interstate 70 and U.S. 75, along the southern edge of Topeka.

During a hearing last week, Sen. Billy McCray, D-Wichita, told the panel that "many Kansans believe that naming this section of the highway 'Dr. Martin Luther King memorial Highway' is a fitting testament to a man who gave so much to so many people."

drinking thinking

In combination with other drugs, alcohol can have very serious undesirable results. When used with alcohol, antibiotics may be ineffective and cold and allergy medications may make you too drowsy to stay alert and drive safely. Because alcohol, barbiturates, other sedatives, and tranquilizers all slow down brain functioning, when alcohol is taken with any of these, this "slowing down" of the brain is multiplied. The result can be fatal. In fact, the lethal dose of a barbiturate may be half as much when taken with alcohol as when taken alone.

Before you drink...

- Read the warnings on non-prescription and prescription drug labels.
- Ask your doctor about possible alcohol and drug interactions.
- Check with your pharmacist if you have any questions, especially about non-prescription medications.

Detention adds to uncertainty

Poland's Solidarity, the first trade union in the Soviet bloc countries to be free from Communist party control, has been the subject of many obituaries. The December 13 installation of martial law, which resulted in the banishment of Solidarity, has seemingly left the Polish people weak and despairing.

Yet signs of protest have appeared and warn of the union's potential resurrection. The Polish government and its leader, General Wojciech Jaruzelski, are only contributing to the lingering of Solidarity and its philosphies with the continued detention of its former national chairman, Lech Walesa.

The emotional emphasize on Walesa's absence from his seven-month-old daughter's christening this Sunday, in a country greatly influenced by the Roman Catholic church and ideologies, added to the continuous coverage which keeps Walesa in the eye of the general public. This leader, named "Man of the Year" by Time magazine, will continue to be viewed as a freedom fighter kept captive and a man feared by the military regime. A potential martyr in the making.

If the Polish government has made the improvements and reached the level of control touted in their official news releases, then Walesa, in a monitored but free environment, would present a small threat.

Lafene offers support

Editor,

In reference to the article on anorexia in the Collegian, I would like to add some information.

I am one of four mental health professionals at Lafene Health Center, and we all work with students who are experiencing problems with anorexia or other related eating disorders. We have recently begun using a group therapy approach with women who are suffering with these conditions and are finding that the sharing of problems among the women is very supportive and helpful.

Anyone interested in additional information about the group may call 532-6550.

Film-goers protest

Editor,

We recently went to the Union to see "The Chant of Jimmie Blacksmith," a recent Australian film which has been highly regarded by critics and even been picked as a "gem" of the 1981 season. Unfortunately, the experience we had was more akin to watching a lump of coal than a diamond.

The projectionist was unable during the entire film to get anything to focus, the lens was obviously off-whack somewhere, the picture was dark and dingy; it was impossible to make out in many scenes (in a picture that is actually very bright) and the sound was garbled. To top it off, the screen in the Little Theatre is badly torn, creating interesting and distracting effects at particular moments in the film.

It's no wonder that people at K-State don't go to international films more often. Who could expect them to plunk down $1.50 every time to be so tortured? The problem was not in the quality of the film but in the lack of quality in the equipment at K-State. Why can't something be done? Why is it that other Kansas schools (the University of Kansas and Wichita State) can manage to show a film so that the audience can at least see and hear it, and K-State cannot? Why must we always view a quality film throught faulty lens and underpowered bulb, projected onto a torn screen, accompanied by incomprehensible sound? Sensitive, intelligent movies like this deserve more sensitive and intelligent treatment than the Union gives them.

Let there be a NCAA and there was Part Two — God Gets Even

Recap: 7:30 a.m. on Dec. 19, 1977. English Composition I Final. Hungover. Three topics, choices are (1) religion, (2) sports or (3) cheating. "S—." Suddenly an idea! Result: God will get you if you cheat at sports.

The Creator has devised many forms of punishment to castigate cheaters. God knew he had a good deal when he appointed the referees. But still, his work load with the rest of the universe didn't allow him to administer punishment to everyone the referees caught cheating. So, to help the referees control cheating and to take the burden of punishment off his back, he created the Commissioner.

The Commissioner's job is to hear the charges against the naughty players and pass judgment as he believes God would. One such bishop was appointed for each sport, but still, God's remaining work load was tremendous.

ONE DAY the Commissioner of tag team water polo complained to the Maker about the job being too much for one deity to handle. Once again God had the answer. He said with a smile, "I shall create the National Collegiate Athletic Association (NCAA) to handle the younger scoundrels." He paused for a moment and thought, "What a damn good idea."

And so it was done. The NCAA became the priests who were to spread the good word of sports throughout the world. The NCAA was created to handle the problems involved with cheating in collegiate sports. The association took the confessions of many college coaches who committed recruiting violations or who had played red-shirted players. Naturally, God was pleased with his work.

He had devised two authorities to cut down his work load but still had no punishments to dole out to the cheaters. It was for this reason that God created two of the most feared punishments of athletes today — the suspension and the fine. These inflictions have become the most used and powerful tools of the Commissioners. Suspensions and fines have been given to players for everything from fist-fights to butt-slapping without consent of the other players.

IN EXTREME CASES a more powerful punishment became necessary. In the eyes of God, extensive cheating became a just cause for dismissal from any sport. One famous dismissal involved an Oklahoma man who disguised a Frisbee as a buffalo chip in the National Buffalo Chip Finals. God saw all of these punishments as being beneficial in stopping cheating.

The Divine One controls the conscience of every cheating athlete. God realized that his system of dealing with these charlatans of the sports world was fine and dandy if the players were caught by the referees. But, he thought, what about those who don't get caught? They shouldn't be excused from punishment.

And with this thought, he gave all the athletes of the world something new and wonderful. God gave each athlete a brain of his own. With this brain, God is able to control the mind of the player. God now had the power to make an athlete confess to cheating. For example, sometimes late at night one can see cheating athletes walking the streets in search of absolution at a 24-hour church or a Shop-Quik.

THIS IS ONLY ONE form of mind control. God has other tricks up his sleeve. Once in a great while, when he gets really angry, he will speak to an athlete in person, without an appointment and turn the player into a religious fanatic. This player then wanders about the playing field uttering Biblical quotations instead of game strategies.

Occasionally, God will put a player into a tragic slump which will immediately end as the player confesses his misdeeds to the Commissioner.

Yet, even when put throught all of this torture, there are still a few cheaters who refuse to give in. It is for these souls that God created the piece de resistance of punishments. If the Creator sees fit, and has a two-thirds majority from the Commissioners, he will turn the cheating athlete into an intellect and allow him to use his brain. This will convert him from a cheating athlete to a perfect politician, a fate worse than death itself.

The moral of this story — if you cheat at sports, he'll get you in the end.

(This story is dedicated to the memory of the Kerrigan Writing System).

Air Force awards electrical engineering grant

The U.S. Air Force, via Sandia Laboratories, Albuquerque, N.M., has awarded an eight-month contract for continuing research on the development of intrusion-detection systems being conducted through the Department of Electrical Engineering.

Nasir Ahmed, Michael Lucas and Donald Lenhert, professors of electrical engineering, received $127,000 to continue research on systems that would provide reliable detection of intruders and at the same time decrease the number of false alarms.

The intrusion-detection systems would distinguish between intruders and other noise sources such as windstorms, aircraft, land-based traffic and overhead power lines. Such systems operate using seismic sensors, such as buried cables and geophones, which respond to movements in the earth's surface.

Sandia Laboratories has awarded nearly $500,000 to K-State for the project since 1976, when Ahmed first began research related to intrusion-detection techniques.

Gift establishes Sowers Memorial Scholarship

A gift of $75,778 from the estate of the late Lawrence L. Sowers, longtime Council Grove resident, will permit establishment of the Lawrence L. Sowers Memorial Scholarship Fund.

The scholarship fund will provide financial support of deserving students, according to James Miller, associate director of the K-State Foundation. The amount of the scholarship award and recipients of the award will be determined by the K-State Scholarship Committee.

Sowers was born and reared at Harveyville, and following graduation from high school he pursued a career in military service. He retired in 1962 following 30 years in the armed services and managed a fast food establishment in Strong City before becoming manager of the nursing home in Council Grove, a position he held until he retired in 1980. Sowers died last year.

Contribution aids anti-cancer laboratory

The new Anti-Cancer Drug Laboratory, being developed through the Division of Biology, recently had a $500 contribution made towards furthering development of the facility.

Members of VFW, Post 1786, Auxiliary in Manhattan presented the donation to Terry Johnson, director of the Division of Biology.

"This thoughtful gift represents a continued effort of support by the VFW Auxiliary members," Johnson said.

The new Anti-Cancer Drug Laboratory is being developed by private gifts and pledges. It will be a unique cancer research facility and serve the educational and scientific needs across the entire Midwest. This laboratory is part of new developments being made in the Center for Basic Cancer Research.

Alumnus to receive architecture award

A Distinguished Service Award from the College of Architecture and Design will be awarded to John Schruben, a 1948 graduate in architectural engineering.

Schruben, of Washington, D.C., has been in the forefront of the development of innovative production systems for use by professional architectural and engineering firms. He will be honored by his alma mater when he is presented the Distinguished Service Award, which recognizes unusual contributions to one's profession and unusual achievement. The award will be presented in conjunction with commencement exercises in May.

"In 1969, the American Institute of Architects selected Schruben to head a significant new venture now known as Production Systems for Architects and Engineers (PSAE)," Bernd Foerster, dean of the College of Architecture and Design, said.

As president of PSAE, Schruben is directing development of other systems for design, production, construction and management.

"This activity and numerous journal articles have played a vital role in explaining his work to the thousands of professional firms which have adopted the systems he pioneered," Foerster said. "Schruben's career exemplifies the dedication to development of the profession which the K-State College of Architecture and Design seeks to foster."

The American Institute of Architects has recognized Schruben's achievements by naming him a Fellow, citing particularly his contributions to the science of construction, education, service to the profession and architectural practice.

Engineering students receive awards

Three engineering students won awards for high scores on Department of Civil Engineering exams.

Marc Brack, sophomore in electrical engineering, won a $100 award as highest scorer on the "Statics" final examination. Doran Morgan, junior in mechanical engineering, and Dwight Peters, senior in mechanical engineering, are sharing a $100 award for best scores on the department's "Mechanics of Materials" final exam.

The awards were established as a memorial to Mrs. Pei-Yu Hu. A son, K.K. Hu, is an associate professor of civil engineering.

City, county prepare for severe storm season

By PAM FITZSIMMONS
Collegian Reporter

The season for severe thunderstorms, damaging windstorms, hailstorms and tornadoes is fast approaching, making it imperative to review procedures and precautions necessary when such storms strike.

On March 9, the Riley County Emergency Preparedness Department, in cooperation with other emergency services and law enforcement agencies in Riley County, presented a slide show and film on the detection and alerting procedures for severe weather.

"The purpose of this program is to familiarize people with what to spot when they look for tornadoes and not to be so afraid of the storm season," said Steve Schurr, Warning and Preparedness meteorologist from the Topeka office of the National Weather Service.

TORNADOES ARE violently rotating columns of air that descend in a funnel shape from thunderstorm cloud systems called wall clouds, Schurr explained. Tornadoes can occur at any hour of the day and at any time of the year, he said, but their greatest frequency is during the months of April through June, and in the middle and late afternoon. He said this is because a large contrast exists between warm air from the south and cold air from the north.

Because they are often accompanied by heavy rain, hail, lightning, and the obscuring cloud system of the thunderstorm or squall line, these storms are difficult to identify, according to Schurr.

In addition to difficulties in detecting them, the number of tornadoes has dropped off in recent years, he said. Statistics presented showed there were only 39 tornadoes in Kansas in 1981, ranking below the yearly average of 43 tornadoes during the 1950s, 1960s and 1970s.

"There is much apathy over severe storms as a result of low numbers and intensities since 1974, and the normal reaction that the disaster only happens to others," Schurr said.

Because of this, Schurr said he believes that preparedness must be put into proper perspective.

Preparation for severe storms involves the use of alerting procedures. According to Schurr, a watch is issued when conditions in the atmosphere could produce a tornado. A warning is issued when either a tornado is spotted on the ground or the radar indicates a tornado exists.

"We don't issue a warning at the drop of a hat. We have to have solid information from local spotters and the radar," Schurr said.

Volunteers scan the skies for approaching tornadoes

By PAM FITZSIMMONS
Collegian Reporter

Each spring after receiving word from the National Weather Service that the threat of tornadoes exists, 16 Manhattan men jump into their cars and drive to the highest points around the city instead of retreating to the safety of their basements.

These men make up the local spotter group known as the Manhattan Weather Watch which is a volunteer organization formed in 1960 from amateur ham and citizen band radio operators.

Their chief function is to observe weather conditions from high elevations covering 180 degrees on the west side of town, according to Bill Fogerson, coordinator of Manhattan Weather Watch.

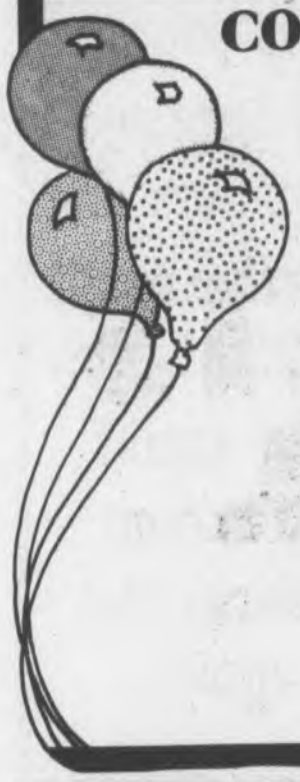
THE SPOTTER GROUP makes the decision to blow the warning sirens when a tornado is sighted, according to Del Petty, director of Riley County Emergency Preparedness.

"All observers must have the ability and knowledge to make the right decision. There can't be any question about warning or not warning the city of an approaching tornado," Fogerson said. "It is just as important to know when not to warn as it is when to warn. If we blew the sirens every time we thought a tornado was going through town it would be like crying wolf, and nobody would listen."

The knowledge and ability to sight tornadoes is gained through written examinations, practical experience and by following

(See WEATHER, p. 14)

MANHATTAN USES spotters from two organizations: CREST (Citizens Radio Emergency Service Team) and REACT (Radio Emergency Action Citizens Team). The local spotter group, known as Manhattan Weather Watch, consists of 15 to 20 members whose sole function is to watch the weather.



In addition to spotters, the community has installed a teletype which provides weather information directly from the National Weather Service, according to Del Petty, director of Riley County Emergency Preparedness. The teletype runs 24 hours a day, seven days a week, and is the community's foremost source of information about weather conditions, he said.

Manhattan has also provided funds to purchase three additional warning sirens which are expected to be delivered and installed by May 1. One siren will be placed on Amherst Avenue near the Redbud Estate Trailer Courts, one in the Cico park area, and one at the corner of Allen and Casement roads for the Northview area. According to Petty, these will provide coverage for 95 percent of Manhattan.

Petty said the $36,000 to pay for the sirens is coming directly from the city of Manhattan without matching state or federal funds.

"These systems make monitoring severe storms far superior to several years ago. We now have total communications with the weather service, law enforcement agencies within a 100-mile radius, and fish and game wardens in the local area," Petty said. "It's a very effective notification system, and it

Weinberger tells allies of strategic arms plans

COLORADO SPRINGS, Colo. (AP) — Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger told Allied defense ministers Tuesday that the United States "is in the final stages" of preparing strategic arms reduction proposals, a senior U.S. official said Tuesday.

However, this official indicated to reporters that the United States would move into a new round of strategic arms control talks only if the Soviets refrained from causing trouble in the world.

"We are looking for a positive atmosphere in which to initiate the talks," said the official, who briefed reporters after the opening round of a two-day meeting of 13 defense ministers from North Atlantic Treaty Organization nations. The strategy session, held behind closed doors, is a semi-annual review of alliance nuclear planning.

THE OFFICIAL, who spoke with the understanding his name would not be used, indicated under questioning that a worsening of the situation in Poland might delay the opening of the strategic arms talks.

Work on negotiating options to be presented to the president and the National Security Council should be completed within a few weeks, the official said.

In an interview, he denied that U.S. allies had pushed the administration toward reopening strategic arms control talks.

However, Canadian Defense Minister Gilles Lamontagne told a reporter that he brought up the question in the opening session and that he was joined by others.

AS EXPECTED, the senior official reported that the NATO ministers in effect rejected Soviet President Leonid Brezhnev's maneuver last week to block U.S. deployment of 572 medium range missiles in Western Europe. Brezhnev announced a unilateral decision to freeze deployment of advanced Soviet SS-20 medium range missiles in the western Soviet Union where they threatened all of NATO.

"There was a general feeling among the ministers that the Brezhnev proposal is not the solution that NATO is looking for," the U.S. official said.

According to this official, Brezhnev's action leaves 300 SS-20s armed with 900 nuclear warheads and nothing in Brezhnev's comments has suggested "that a single one of those warheads would be withdrawn."

It is the Reagan administration's position that the Brezhnev freeze would leave the Soviets with a major nuclear advantage and the NATO Allies with a serious nuclear imbalance against them. The alliance now has no land-based missiles with range to strike targets in the Soviet Union from Western Europe.

He claimed the discussions showed a "high degree of support" for President Reagan's "zero option" of last November under which the United States would refrain from deploying the U.S. Pershing II ballistic missiles and ground-launched cruise missiles in Western Europe if the Soviets dismantled some 650 medium range missiles, including about 300 SS-20s.

Senators say Soviets eager to resume U.S. grain trade

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Soviet Union is eager to resume purchases of U.S. grain and may buy nearly the full 23 million metric tons offered under the current trade agreement, two farm-state senators said Tuesday.

Sens. Bob Dole (R-Kan.) and Roger Jepsen (R-Iowa) also called on the Reagan administration to invite the Soviets to Washington for consultations on the grain agreement and schedule them for April or May.

Dole said he and Jepsen met for two hours Friday with the Soviet ambassador to the United States, Anatoly Dobrynin. "We concluded that for a number of reasons they would like to buy from us," Dole said. "But they want a reliable supplier."

Consultations between the two countries are needed to bring the potential benefits of President Reagan's farm trade policy, stated in a speech on Monday, to fruition, Dole said. That statement included promises to expand exports, not use farm products as a tool of foreign policy and not impose an embargo solely on agricultural commodities.

Although Reagan lifted a Carter administration grain embargo against the Soviets last year, critics have said the threat of a possible new embargo over the Polish crisis has effectively shut down grain trading between the two countries.

The United States lost large portions of its grain export trade because of the 1980 embargo, imposed because of the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan. Other large grain producers picked up the slack, including Argentina and Canada, which have been actively negotiating deals with the Soviets.

Big cheese: American dairymen cite price support system for surplus of unwanted goods in warehouses

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — America's dairymen told agriculture officials Tuesday they would either help pay for their own price support system or accept cuts in the program estimated to cost taxpayers more than $2 billion this year.

Dairy farmers left a two-day symposium called by Agriculture Secretary John Block saying they were convinced something must be done with a price support system that has left government warehouses bulging with millions of pounds of unwanted milk, cheese and butter.

"With no letup in sight, the dairy program becomes increasingly vulnerable to drastic surgery by Congress," said Hollis Hatfield, director of the American Farm Bureau dairy division. "The message is clear — if the industry wants to maintain a program, it must be more responsive to demand."

AS PRODUCTION HAS outstripped consumer demand, price support costs have shot up from $24 million in fiscal 1979 to an estimated $2.2 billion this year, according to U.S. Department of Agriculture figures.

Under the price support program, the Commodities Credit Corp., an arm of the USDA, purchases enough dairy products to keep prices at a level specified by Congress, currently $13.10 per hundredweight.

The government stockpile will include 306 million pounds of butter, 585 million pounds of cheese and 918 million pounds of nonfat dry milk by October, the USDA estimates.

It will cost more nearly $2 billion to buy dairy products and another $390 million in storage, transportation and interest costs, the USDA said. The government recoups some of the money by selling a portion of the stockpile.

THE MAJOR PROPOSALS for cutting costs include adjusting the support level to reduce production or assessing farmers when the stockpile exceeds a certain level.

Other proposals included advertising campaigns and development of new milk products to spur consumption while a Texas farmer suggested formation of local farmers' committees to coordinate herd reduction programs.

The Farm Bureau said the support level for any one year should be based on the amount of purchases made by the CCC in the preceding year. Price supports would be at a maximum of 80 percent to 90 percent of parity when the stockpile was at two billion "milk equivalent" pounds and would decline to 60 percent of parity when holdings exceed 11.6 billion milk-equivalent pounds.

THE USDA ESTIMATES its October holdings of milk, butter and cheese will exceed 12 billion "milk equivalent" pounds.

The National Milk Federation proposal would have farmers pick up a portion of the cost of the support program whenever government stockpiles exceeded five billion "milk equivalent" pounds. A national dairy board, made up of industry representatives appointed by the agriculture secretary, would administer the program and determine farmer assessments.

"When you talk to dairy farmers, they say, 'Get what you can and do what you can to preserve the price support,'" said Irwin Ellkins, president of the 11,000-member Associated Milk Producers. "But there is general acceptance that they should share in the expense of these programs."

HOWEVER, THE DAIRYMAN'S Cooperative Creamery Association, a California group, fell behind the Farm Bureau proposal while calling for an immediate cut of 50 cents in the support level.

"It is our philosophy that since it was enhanced price that created the difficulty for the dairy industry that price should be used again to solve the problem," said James W. Gruebele, vice president of the group.

Noting that the USDA blames overproduction on one million too many cows, J.G. Walker of Sulphur Springs, Texas advocated local farmers' committees to maintain herds in line with consumer demand.

"I am ashamed of what the price support system on my farm has cost our government," said Walker, a dairyman for 25 years. "It is absurd."

Nooner music weaves electrical tune patterns

By LESLIE FROST
Arts and Entertainment Editor

Taut energy bound man to guitar and the music born of the union conquered the Catskeller.

"Dangerous Dave and the Invaders" shocked the staid Catskeller walls with an hour and a half of electric music Tuesday. The set suffered initially from the lack of a lead guitar player. Dave Stark, on the road from Emporia took a wrong turn in Americus and arrived about 12:30 p.m., a shadowy figure from the crowd who stepped on stage, strapped on a guitar and began to play.

Stark's late arrival forced Randy Mader, senior in finance, to open the Nooner with a few songs he had just learned. Although the opening numbers lacked polish, the sound was considerably improved with the arrival of Janet Unrein. Singing Stevie Nicks' "Leather and Lace" with a lazy, effortless purity, Unrein gave the song both depth and sweetness.

She and Mader moved next to "simulated rock'n'roll" — no lead guitar, drums or bass. "Fire and Ice" was the song and Unrein's voice was the instrument that made it work. From a pouty whisper to chest-belted notes, Unrein gave life to the song, nourished with the chords of the guitar.

Mader sang "Can't You Still Be Mine, Till the End Of Time," a number with restless energy in the guitar chords and clipped words.

The energy really flowed, though, when Stark appeared and the two guitars wove a pattern of sound and rhythm. All of the songs were original compositions, according to Mader.

"He's Freaked Out" dialogued into beginning. Stark and Mader became two people at a party, setting the scene for a song with words such as "He's the life of the party everyone could tell/But is he where it's at?"

Evangelist plans to attend Soviet nuclear conference

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Despite reported White House opposition, evangelist Billy Graham announced Tuesday he will visit the Soviet Union in May to attend an international conference on nuclear war and to preach at two Moscow churches.

Graham said he was accepting an invitation from Patriarch Pimen to speak at a Russian Orthodox cathedral, and he also plans to speak at a Baptist church.

Newsweek magazine reported earlier this month that the Reagan administration was pressuring Graham not to make the trip, fearing the Soviets would use him for propaganda purposes.

"I'm sure there has been discussion with our government, especially in that it refers to the country of Russia," said Donald Bailey, a spokesman for Graham.

Asked if anyone at the White House had tried to discourage Graham from going, Bailey said, "I cannot speak to that because I don't have that information."

GRAHAM ISSUED a statement saying, "It is my sincere prayer that this visit will make at least a small contribution to better understanding between the peoples of the Soviet Union, the United States and other countries of the world.

"We trade with each other, we have cultural exchanges and we have continued political negotiations in spite of our differences. I think it is now time that we move into a spiritual dimension as well.

"My purpose in going to the Soviet Union is spiritual, and it is not my intention to become involved in political or ideological issues," he said.

According to the statement released by the Billy Graham Evangelistic Association office here, the evangelist announced he had been invited to attend a worship service May 9 at the cathedral and speak to the congregation during the morning liturgy.

THAT EVENING, Graham said, he will preach at the Moscow Baptist Church, which has 5,500 members.

On May 11, Graham is to address a Soviet-sponsored international conference called "Religious Workers for Saving the Sacred Gift of Life from Nuclear Catastrophe."

The National Council of Churches of Christ in the United States also has said it will be represented at the conference, which opens May 10, according to the Soviet news agency Tass.

Graham said leaders of many major religions around the world would be at the meeting.

"I will be attending the conference as an observer," Graham said. "However, previous commitments will prevent me from staying for the entire conference."

Graham said he would be addressing the conference on the Christian's understanding of peace in a nuclear age.

"I shall have the opportunity to give my Christian witness to leaders of various religious backgrounds from all over the world," Graham said.

Bike becomes film symbol

By SHARON FLEMING
Collegian Movie Reviewer

'Vittorio De Sica's "The Bicycle Thief" has been called the most important film to come from the Neo-Realist movement that arose out of postwar Italy. It is a haunting movie — funny, sad and meaningful.

Review

The acting, especially that of Lamberto Maggiorani, Antonio Ricci, Enzo Staiola and his son Bruno, is convincing and real.

Carlos Montuori's photography, superbly done in black and white, is a study of mellow angles and curves. The contrast between the photography and the strident music echoes what becomes the central theme of the movie — the difference between men as shown by the way they regard a simple object — a bicycle.

The story takes place in postwar Italy. Times are hard. People are living stringently on welfare. Jobs are scarce. Antonio Ricci, after two years of unemployment is offered a job for which he must have a bicycle. His family had pawned their bike in order to obtain money for food, now they pawn their sheets to reclaim the bike.

The force of the movie lies in what it attempts to show rather than say. It is a portrayal of men who cannot understand each other. Class and lifestyle differences are revealed in the simple relationships of various people to a bicycle.

Cabinet vetoes Begin's plans to quit

JERUSALEM (AP) — Prime Minister Menachem Begin was over-ruled by his Cabinet and called off plans to resign Tuesday over his failure to muster a majority against a parliamentary no-confidence motion.

Begin had summoned his ministers to tell them he wanted to quit, but was voted down 12-6, Cabinet Secretary Aryeh Naor announced.

Defection of a right-wing rabbi to the opposition handed Begin's coalition government the 58-58 vote on the no-confidence motion — a result Begin had said would force his resignation.

The vote was brought on by the government's handling of Palestinian unrest in the occupied West Bank and the Gaza Strip. Rioting in the last five days has left two Arabs dead and more than a dozen wounded in clashes with Israeli troops. But the key defection was to protest Israeli withdrawal from the Sinai Peninsula, scheduled to be completed April 25.

EDUCATION MINISTER Zevulun Hammer said before the meeting, "I don't see why we (the government) have to resign."

The law does not oblige a prime minister to quit if a no-confidence vote is even. But Begin had made clear he did not want to govern if he couldn't win a vote of confidence.

Only four of the 120 Knesset (Parliament) deputies were absent from the dramatic vote, which was precipitated by controversy over Begin's policy toward West Bank Arabs.

Immediately after Speaker Menachem Savidor announced the result, Begin stood up and announced: "I have to consult with my colleagues in the government."

The 68-year-old Begin, speaking from his seat rather than the podium because of a hip injury, looked subdued but smiled occasionally in the hubbub that broke out when the vote was announced.

BEGIN LOST HIS majority because of Rabbi Haim Druckman, a member of one of the coalition parties, rebelled over Begin's insistence on going through with Israel's withdrawal from Sinai next month.

Until the last moment it was not known how the bearded right-winger would vote. But when Savidor asked who supported the no-confidence motion, he raised his hand along with the Labor Party, the communists, the tiny Shinui (Change) party, the right-wing Tehiya faction and the right-ofcenter TELEM party.

Druckman belongs to the National Religious Party, which is a member of BEGIN'S COALITION. But Druckman quit the coalition a few weeks ago.

ISRAEL TELEVISION said the most likely option open to Begin was to dissolve Parliament and call a general election.

Begin was elected in 1977 and won a second term in voting last June.

If Begin goes through with his intention to resign, he will remain in office for some months as caretaker prime minister — a situation that would benefit him by freeing the government from pressure from right-wingers to stop the Sinai withdrawal.

The no-confidence motion by the Labor Party was prompted by the government's handling of the latest West Bank disturbances.

Labor's motion also scored the government's handling of various foreign and domestic issues.

The Likud is confident of enlarging its narrow majority in any early election — an assessment born out by most polls.

The military reported four Palestinian youths injured Tuesday during the dispersal of a demonstration in the occupied Gaza Strip. A spokesman said they were not hurt by gunfire, but did not know what caused their injuries. Four soldiers were injured by stones hurled in the demonstration, the military said.

The latest West Bank unrest stems from Israeli efforts to stamp out PLO influence there and build up a moderate leadership among the passive rural Palestinian populace. The PLO wants an independent state in the territory.

Guatemala

DOWNTOWN GUATEMALA CITY was cordoned off by troops and no bloodshed was reported, but there were reports of shooting near the military garrison in Quetzaltenango 120 miles west of the capital.

A power failure blacked out the capital, but the reason for it was not known.

There were no reports of actions by left-wing guerrillas trying to take advantage of the confusion and division in the armed forces. They have been waging a bloody campaign against the government, and the government has been accused of violating human rights in its effort to crush the insurrection.

INITIAL REPORTS HAD indicated the coup leaders were supporters of Alejandro Maldonado Aguirre, a Christian Democrat and the most centrist candidate among the four conservatives who ran for the presidency earlier this month.

But one of their statements broadcast to the nation was read by Leonel Sisniega Otero, the vice presidential candidate of the National Liberation Movement, which was considered the most conservative party entered in the election, which was boycotted by leftists.

In Washington, Secretary of State Alexander Haig was asked about the coup and said, "We are following it very closely. It's too early to make any substantive comment, and I'll reserve on that until the situation is clarified."

THE STATEMENT READ by Sisniega said the uprising was prompted by "corruption following a fraudulent election."

It said junior officers seized power because Guatemala is "in the midst of hunger and misery, subjugated through the use of terror by a corrupt minority."

"As of now, we tell the people and the rest of the world our decision to instrument immediately a government representative of all sectors, and one of absolute respect to international treaties signed by our country and the full respect of human rights for all Guatemalans," the statement added.

Sisniega told The Associated Press later by telephone the coup was "strictly military, staged by all armed forces including the air force."

Cannon were brought up and aimed at the presidential palace. The national radio station then urged civilian employes still inside to come out one at a time with their hands up.

Reagan upset by critics attacking 1983 budget

NEW YORK (AP) — President Reagan, conceding that he is bothered by questions about his compassion, said Tuesday he is trying to save, not destroy, "what is best in our system of humane, free government."

At the same time, the president said his request for $221 billion in defense spending for 1983, an 18 percent buildup, "represents an historically reasonable share of our resources and is far less than the potential disaster a weakened America could face at the hands of a ruthless, powerful foe."

Reagan's remarks were prepared for delivery to the National Conference of Christians and Jews, which bestowed its Charles Evans Hughes Gold Medal upon the president.

That award, for "courageous leadership in government, civic and humanitarian affairs," caused some controversy within the interreligious, interracial group even before it was given at the black-tie dinner. Reagan is the first incumbent president to receive the award.

Some members of the organization believed the honor would give the appearance of aligning the group with Reagan's economic and social policies. "Some of us are not behind him in some of the cutback programs," said one official, who asked to remain anonymous.

In his speech, Reagan as much as answered his critics, who have maintained the deep cuts in social programs he has requested will harm people who depend on those programs.

"Today, I'm accused by some of trying to destroy government's commitment to compassion and to the needy," he said.

"Like FDR, may I say I'm not trying to destroy what is best in our system of humane, free government — I'm doing everything I can to save it."

However, Reagan stressed that "there is more to brotherhood than government-administered charity. In recent years too many of us have tended to forget that government can't properly substitute for the helping hand of neighbor to neighbor.

"And in trying to do so, government has to a great extent brought on the economic distress that mires us down in recession," Reagan asserted.

As for his defense budget, Reagan said he was "keenly aware of the costs" and would be seeking "true savings and efficiencies. But we must refute the misguided belief that our defense program can be arbitrarily reduced and still guarantee our national security."

He said the United States could not allow the Soviet Union's "dangerous momentum to continue if we want to survive."

The president also took the opportunity to defend himself against critics who say his policies hurt blacks and other minorities.

"Hatred, envy and bigotry are as old as the human race itself, as too many tragic passages in the history of the world bear witness," he said.

Tax plan to aid inner cities

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan unveiled a package of tax breaks and eased government regulations Tuesday to lure new businesses and jobs to blighted inner city areas "left out of America's economic mainstream."

Notably missing from the proposed legislation was an idea strongly favored by business to waive the $3.35 an hour federal minimum wage for young people employed in depressed areas.

The administration had considered including a sub-minimum wage but backed down in the face of opposition from labor groups and Reps. Jack Kemp (R-N.Y.) and Robert Garcia (D-N.Y.) who agreed to let Reagan substitute his proposal for legislation they first sponsored in 1980.

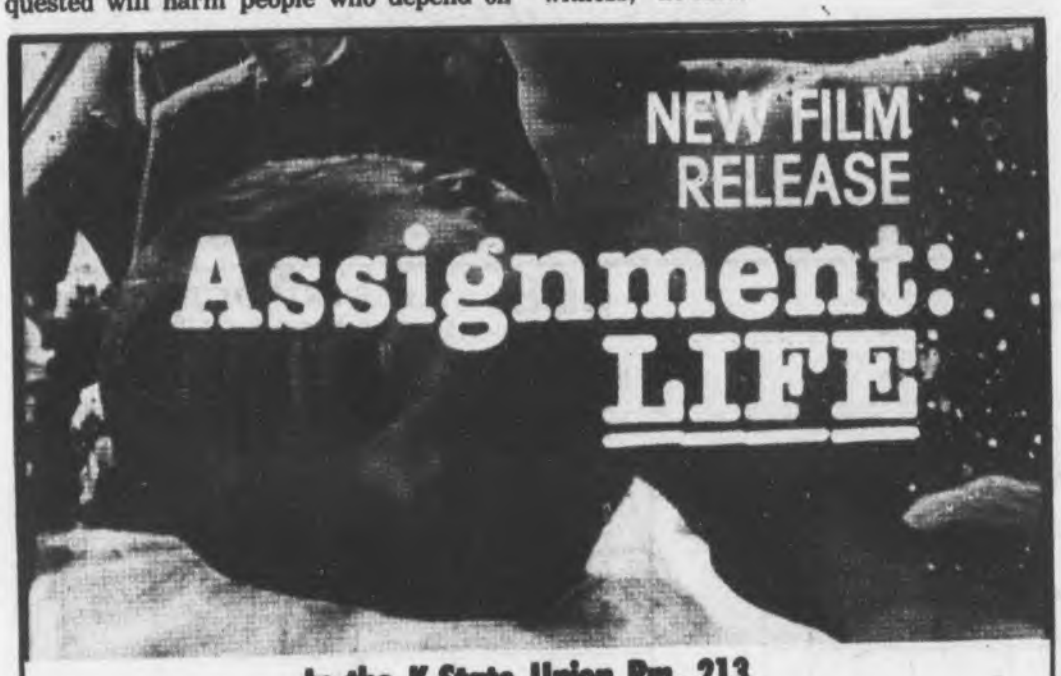
Under the program, the Department of Housing and Urban Development would be authorized to designate 25 areas a year as "enterprise zones," making employers eligible for a battery of tax and regulation concessions from federal, state and local governments.

"Clearly, decades of spending programs have done little more than subsidize the status quo and make wards of the government out of citizens who would rather have a job than a handout," Reagan said at a ceremony in the Rose Garden as he signed the proposed legislation.

"It's time for us to find out if two of the most dynamic and constructive forces known to man — free enterprise and the profit motive — can be brought to play where government bureaucracy and social programs have failed."

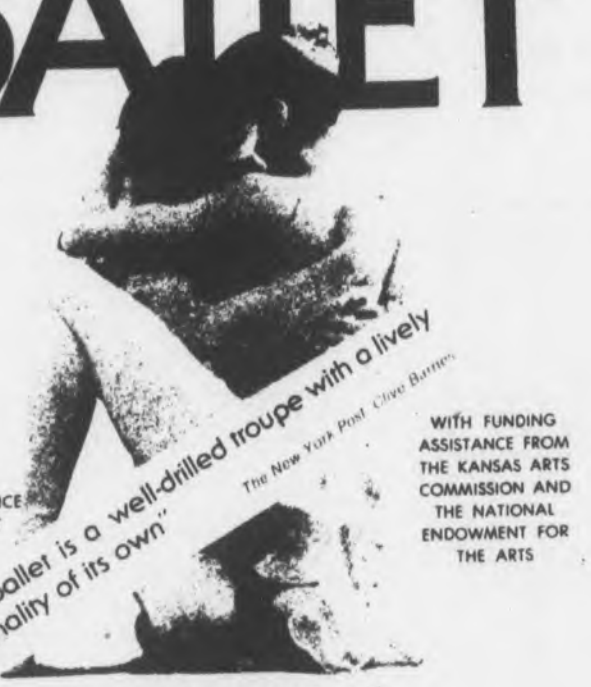
Housing and Urban Development Secretary Samuel Pierce said that "hundreds, probably thousands" of areas across the country are depressed to the extent that they could be considered for the program.

He predicted the program would serve as an inducement mostly for small businesses, rather than industrial giants, to move into blighted areas.



Pierce said the success of the program depends on the extent to which state and local communities are willing to roll back regulations governing business.

HUD will designate enterprise zones from among applications submitted by state and local agencies, and each nomination will be judged competitively on concessions offered by the local area.



A White House fact sheet said the local areas property taxes and sales taxes and waivers in zoning, licensing, price controls, permit requirements and building codes.

For its part, the federal government would offer a series of tax concessions that the administration estimated would cost the Treasury $12.4 million in lost revenue from each enterprise zone.

Senate approves 'lights-on' bill for cycle safety

TOPEKA (AP) — A bill requiring newer motorcycles and mopeds to be operated at all times in the state with their lights on and another giving police powers to arson investigators won tentative approval Tuesday in the Kansas Senate.

The two proposals were among 27 measures given firstround approval and forwarded for a final roll call vote on Wednesday.

Another two bills, which were debated on Monday, were passed and sent to the House for consideration. One of them provides nearly $23 million over the next four fiscal years for building projects at Pittsburg State University, the Kansas School for the Deaf at Olathe, the University of Kansas, and the KU Medical Center. It passed 40-0.

The second funding measure, passed 38-2, provides about $1.8 million in state money to supplement the operations of about a dozen state offices in the current fiscal year, which ends June 30.

The "lights on" bill was touted as a way to increase visibility of cycles and help reduce traffic accidents. It would apply only to cyclesmade since 1978, exempting all older makes because they have inadequate electrical systems to handle both day and night headlight operation.

If the bill is enacted, Kansas would join 20 other states which have similar "lights on" laws for motorcycles.

The arson investigator bill passed the House last year, and applies to state investigators and any local ones designated by the state fire marshal.

If enacted, the investigators will be able to make arrests, carry weapons and conduct searches and seizures. Currently they have no such powers, and often are required to have a law enforcement officer accompany them on the job. The bill would eliminate that inconvience, said Sen. Edward Reilly, (R-Leavenworth), whose committee recommended the proposal.

Both the cycle and arson bills were amended by Senate committees, requiring them to return to the House for reconsideration before they could be sent to Gov. John Carlin for his signature.

Among the bills tentatively approved were ones:

—Allowing salt water to be spread on Kansas roads for construction and maintenance purposes. The measure, already approved by the House, will go to the governor if passed on a final vote. Salt water could be dumped on road beds only in areas approved by the Department of Health and Environment.

The practice has long used in some sections of the state to settle dust on county roads, but the bill was needed both to authorize brine disposal on roads and to reestablish a law invalidated by a Pratt County District Court last year.

—Broading the Higher Education Loan Program of Kansas to allow parents of students — instead of just students — to obtain loans.

—Reorganizing and clarifying state laws detailing the duties and responsiblities of county appraisers and county clerks. It makes no changes in their powers.

—Establishing a procedure for the State Board of Education to adopt rules and regulations. The board would have to give a 15-day notice in the Kansas Register of its proposed action and conduct a public hearing. The bill stems from an attorney general's opinion that the Board of Education is exempt from existing procedure on regulation adoption by state agencies.

Committee restores budget for education

TOPEKA (AP) — Despite complaints it was setting a dangerous precedent, a House committee Tuesday restored $400 million cut by the Senate from the Department of Education budget and authorized construction funds for Washburn University and Pratt Community College.

The budget, which authorizes $578.3 million for the 1983 fiscal year, includes a $1 million appropriation to fund construction on an Allied Health Center at Washburn University in Topeka.

The appropriation was a last minute amendment by the House Ways and Means committee after lawmakers approved a $250,000 grant to the Pratt Community College to partially fund construction of a vocational-technical training building on campus.

"This amendment is just as rational what we just did for the Pratt junior college," said Rep. William Bunten (R-Topeka), in explaining his Washburn appropriation request. "We have never funded construction at any of the nine junior colleges in the state and we are making serious policy change by doing so now. It is setting a dangerous precedent."

Bunten said Washburn University officials have been trying for years to raise enough money to build the health center. He said it is just as legitimate an expense as the vo-tech building.

Committee members criticized the appropriations, including Rep. Mike Hayden (R-Atwood), chairman of the panel, who vowed both amendments would be struck from the budget.

"Most of the budget is in pretty good shape, although I don't support those two amendments," Hayden said after the meeting. "They'll get shook out of there."

The budget, as approved by the Senate, gutted Gov. John Carlin's recommendation of $617.3 million, by removing all money that depended on the passage alternative funding sources.

The upper chamber pared the request by $436.9 million, mostly cutting funds that would have been generated by Carlin's proposed 2.5 percent severance tax on oil and gas production.

House tentatively approves bills revising intangibles tax

TOPEKA (AP) — The Kansas House gave strong tentative approval today to bills repealing the statewide intangibles tax but allowing local units of government who want it to replace it with a local-option excise tax to avoid higher property taxes.

The preliminary vote to repeal the tax, which is a tax collected and spent locally on peoples' and businesses' earnings from savings and investments dividends, was 97-23.

The companion bill, which would allow cities and counties to reimpose the tax this year but give the people a chance to overturn those decisions at elections in 1983, was advanced on an unrecorded voice vote after being amended.

The two measures will be up for final House votes Wednesday. They are expected to pass handily, sending them to the Senate, where similar legislation has stalled in the Assessment and Taxation Committee.

An attempt by Rep. Keith Farrar (R-Hugoton) during House debate to reimpose the intangibles tax statewide but increase the exemptions failed, 44-77.

However, an amendment was accepted on the companion bill to exempt the first $5,000 of interest and dividend income from taxation for those 60 and older and the handicapped if they have incomes of $15,000 or less. Presently, only the first $3,000 of interest income is exempt if those who qualify have incomes of $12,500 or less.

The bills are being pushed because of a state Supreme Court ruling two weeks ago upholding constitutionality of the intangibles tax, and declaring it must be reinstated statewide or abolished altogether.

Many cities and counties had abolished the tax locally under a 1976 law, and representatives from those areas say their constituents feel very strongly against reinstating the tax. However, lawmakers from areas which have retained the tax say they want to give their city and county governing bodies the authority to reimpose it because it is viewed as a viable alternative to increased property taxation.

Under the second bill, those city commissions, or councils, and boards of county commissioners which want to reimpose the tax as a local excise tax could do so by ordinance or resolution by June 15 this year without their action being subject to a protest vote of the people affected.

That is because the House concluded there would not be time enough to hold such elections this year, and some local units of government are dependent upon the intangibles revenue to fund the fiscal year 1983 budgets they must adopt in August.

stringent rules set up by Manhattan Weather Watch, according to Fogerson.

All members of Manhattan Weather Watch must pass a written examination to determine how much they know about general weather conditions. Then they ride with a trained observer for a full tornado season, acting as an assistant observer, Fogerson explained. They also must participate in 60 percent of all weather emergencies, he added.

At the end of the first year, they take another written examination which consists of basic weather knowledge, procedures to follow for alerting and the code words used when relaying messages on the radio, Fogerson said. If they pass the final examination they are put on a full observer status, he said.

NOT ONLY DOES the group provide spotters, but three or four men work with the person on duty from the Riley County Police Department in the Manhattan Emergency Operations Center (EOC). The EOC is located in the basement of the police department and has the facilities to communicate with the National Weather Service, local radio stations and the cable channel, Fogerson said.

"It is a major cooperative effort between this group and the Riley County police," Petty said. The group helps to answer phones, listens to the radio reports from the spotters, and sounds the sirens, if necessary, providing a good emergency notification system that works, he added.

Fogerson agreed with Petty and said the system does work and it works quickly.

"Last Friday morning when we were notified that there had been a tornado watch issued for this area, we went out for the first time this season. There was a seven-minute lapse of time between the time our group was notified and men were on duty," he said.

The effectiveness of the system is contingent on today's refined technology, according to Fogerson. Back in the early 1960s when Manhattan Weather Watch was formed, limited weather information was televised and the National Weather Service did not have such sophisticated radar equipment, he said.

"In spite of all this we can goof, but we do the best job we can," he said. "However, anyone that lives in this part of the country must be aware of the tornado season and what to do if an emergency situation arises."

Residents name local pub, Ronald Reagan

President's roots traced to Irish countryside

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The main street in this tidy Tippery town, which may be the widest in all Ireland, is poised, painted and all prettied up for the president of the United States to come parading past the Ronald Reagan pub in celebration of his Irish roots.

Like the pope showing up in Ireland a few years back on the strength of an invitation to tea from a monsignor in County Mayo, the townfolk are sure the visit will happen before long. Having a pub named after him is the closest a non-Catholic can get to beatification in this part of the world.

The pub, which now flies both the Irish and American flags, has become Ballyporeen's main and some say only tourist attraction. It changed its name from O'Farrell's Lounge to the Ronald Reagan and added an upstairs gift shop selling presidential T-shirts as well as the traditional cable-knit wool sweaters a few weeks after Ragnall O'Riagain, the Gaelic spelling of the name, was elected Uactarian, which means president.

Reagan's great-grandfather, Michael Regan, was baptized in the gray granite parish church here on September 3, 1829. He moved to London about the time of the Great Potato Famine, where he put the first "A" back in the family name, and in 1858 emigrated to Illinois as a farmer.

SITUATED IN A lovely green valley between the Galty and Knockmealdown Mountains, Ballyporeen looks as if it had been made to order by the Irish Tourist Board for a presidential visit.

The wide main street, just waiting to be panned by TV color cameras against a background of fleecy sheep, purple glens and emerald fields, has six pubs to accommodate the world press. The friendly, always quotable natives in their Donegal tweeds and cloth caps might have drifted over from the set of a John Ford film. The low slate roofs of the now pastel-painted houses, sending up a tangy furl of turf smoke from their chimneys, seem to have been designed for easy surveilance by the Secret Service. With, of course, plenty of room in the middle for the big parade.

NO ONE IN TOWN seems to have any doubt that Ronald Reagan will turn up one of these days in a scream of sirens and skirl of bagpipes. Didn't John Kennedy, another third-generation Irishman who got the Big Job out in America, make the scene at New Ross, only 80 miles away? Didn't Gerald Ford and Richard Nixon discover some Hibernian branches in the family tree when the office got tough in the Oval Office?

"The minute a Yankee president's popularity starts to skid in the polls, he feels this urge to commune with his Irish ancestors," says one of the regulars at the Ronald Reagan Lounge. "I look for your man Reagan to be here any week now. And he'll bring Pat O'Brien with him, to make sure the telly crews don't miss a frame."

BY THE WILDEST of Hiberian coincidences that not even Hollywood could invent, both Ronald Reagan and Pat O'Brien have their roots in Ballyporeen. Think of it: the Gipper and his crusty old coach Knute Rockne sprung from the same green sod long before football or the movie camera was invented.

If anything, the O'Brien's have a tighter hold on the town than the Reagans or Regans, no matter which way you spell it. Four shops have the name O'Brien over the door, and there is an O'Brien headstone in the old parish graveyard at Doolis, a few miles out of the town. But none with the name of Reagan or Regan. Nor has any house, barn or shed been traced to the family.

Teams of researchers from Debretts Ancestry Research and the Hiberian Research Co. Ltd. had to pore over the baptismal registers of 27 Tipperary parishes to trace the president back to Michael Reagan, son of Thomas Regan, a poor, landless farm laborer also buried in an unknown grave on the wind-swept hill called Doolis.

IT TOOK SEVEN genealogists 34 hours of intensive squinting down long illegible columns to end the search at last in the scratchy Latin scrawled by Father Martin Redmond in the fading ledger book of Assumption parish, attesting that on September 3, 1829, "I baptized Michael, son of Thomas Regan and Margaret Murphy of Doolis. Godparents: William Regan and Catherine Walsh."

At that, the scholars were lucky in the time frame in which they had to do their work. The present-day church had opened only the year before, and Michael Regan must have been among the first baptized at its font.

works."

When a tornado warning is sounded, these steps should be followed:

— Get indoors and stay there during the storm. Recent studies have shown that most fatalities during a storm were to individuals who were outdoors.

— Some buildings on campus have designated shelter areas. If the building you are in has a shelter, go to that area; otherwise, interior hallways on the lowest floor away from windows are the safest.

— Stay away from doors and outside walls. Protect your head.

— If there is no shelter nearby, lie flat in the nearest ditch, ravine, or culvert and protect your head, if possible. Serious injuries to persons in interior areas of brick or stone buildings are rare.

The all-clear signal for the main campus is a series of short blasts from the University whistle for one minute.

'Little Apple' is still home for Hartman

Recent articles by the Associated Press and various newspapers in Kansas and out of state imply that K-State's Head Basketball Coach Jack Hartman will not be returning to K-State.

However, Hartman said Tuesday that his "plans now are to be here next year."

"I have a good coaching job here. I like it here and my plans are to remain here," he said.

And as long as Hartman wants to stay at K-State he is welcome, Dick Towers, athletic-director, said.

"Coach Hartman's contract at Kansas State University is for as long as he wants to be here," he said.

But according to the various reports, Hartman is the top choice to fill the head coaching position at the University of Arizona. He is among the top three names being considered by Stanford University and is also being considered for the position of head coach at Texas University.

However, these are just rumors, Hartman said.

"Rumors and speculations always crop up at this time of the year regarding coaching changes," he said.

Hartman said he receives various calls asking him who he thinks the young coaches to watch are and once in awhile he will be asked what his plans are and if he is interested in the position.

When this happens, Hartman said that he is flattered but that his plans now are to stay at K-State.

Navratilova bids for money lead

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Martina Navratilova goes into the $300,000 Avon Tennis Championships at Madison Square Garden Wednesday as the heavy favorite with the women's career earnings record within reach.

The powerful left-hander needs to win $64,649 to surpass the $3,691,352 earned by Chris Evert Lloyd. Sunday's winner of this select eight-player field will receive $100,000.

Fourth-seeded Wendy Turnbull and No. 8 Kathy Jordan will begin the double-elimination singles format at 10 a.m., EST, Wednesday. Other firstday matches will send second-seeded Mima Jausovec of Yugoslavia against No. 5 Slyvia Hanika of West Germany; Navratilova, the tournament's top seed, against No. 6 Bettina Bunge, and No. 3 Barbara Potter against No. 7 Anne Smith.

On Thursday, the winners play each other with those with 2-0 records advancing directly into Saturday's semifinals. Those with 1-1 records after Thursday's matches will battle on Friday for the other two semifinal berths.

Both the semifinals and Sunday's finals will be televised nationally by PBS.

Georgetown giant concerns Crum

By The Associated Press

How do you handle a 7-foot freshman who can intimidate an entire team with his defense, and whose slam dunks constitute cruel and unusual punishment to a basketball rim?

"Very gently," says Louisville Coach Denny Crum, whose Cardinals must find a way around sensational center Pat Ewing when they meet Georgetown in the semifinals of the NCAA tournament.

"I don't know how to handle the guy," Crum admitted, putting himself in company with almost every other coach who has had to deal with Georgetown this season.

In his most recent performance, Ewing terrorized Oregon State with two resounding slam dunks early, and the sixth-ranked Hoyas went on to a 69-45 whipping of the No. 4 Beavers in the Western Regional finals.

Ewing could be the single biggest factor in the Final Four at the New Orleans Superdome, where top-ranked North Carolina will meet unranked Houston prior to the Louisville-Georgetown game Saturday. The winners will play for the championship next Monday night.

Louisville, 20th ranked with a 23-9 mark, has four starters off its 1980 NCAA championship team, but nobody big enough to handle Ewing one-on-one.

"We'll just have to get a lot of help and try to double-team him where we can," says Crum. "Hopefully keep the ball out of his hands as much as possible."

Ganging up on Ewing might just make the youngster angry — he's been involved in several scrapes this season. But Georgetown Coach John Thompson says his new star is learning to control himself.

Georgetown, 29-6, which also boasts All-American guard Eric Floyd, must contend with a Cardinal team that is deep in talent. When they beat Alabama-Birmingham 75-68 in the Mideast final, they were led by sophomore reserve center Charles Jones' 19 points.

Favorite in the tournament will be North Carolina, now 30-2, which will be trying to win the national title after failing to do so in six previous trips to the Final Four under Dean Smith. Last year, the Tar Heels made it to the championship game only to lose to Indiana 63-50.

K-State splits twin-bill with Hornets

By MACK McCLURE
Collegian Reporter

Although they were whipped 12-4 in the opener, the K-State baseball team retaliated in the second half of the Tuesday afternoon doubleheader with a 9-3 triumph over Emporia State here.

After the Hornets scored a single run in the first inning of the nightcap, the 'Cats cashed in three in the second inning when designated hitter Jay Kvasnicka whacked a bases-loaded triple over the head of E-State center fielder Shawn Smith.

The Hornets drew within one run, 3-2, scoring once in the third. K-State answered with three more tallies in the bottom of the inning. Highlighting the scoring was Don Grause's 420-foot blast over the centerfield fence with two men aboard.

Emporia State managed but one run on two hits in the final four innings, as Mickey Fleeman was in command on the mound. He allowed only four hits for the game, striking out three. Fleeman, the top hurler on the Wildcat staff, is 4-0 on the year.

In the first game, K-State held a 4-3 advantage after three innings, but didn't score again the rest of the way.

The bottom half inning one found the host school collecting two runs. First baseman Joe Goedert doubled home Kvasnicka from second base and Glynn Perry from first. Kvasnicka drew a base on balls and moved to second when Perry reached on a fielder's choice. E-State scored one run in the top of that inning.

Scott pick unloaded a solo shot to lead off K-State's second inning, making the score 3-1. A pair of doubles led the Hornets to two runs in the top of the third. K-State regained the lead at 4-3 when catcher Gary Colbert singled in Perry, who had doubled earlier. Colbert hit the ball hard all day, connecting on four of seven trips to the plate in the doubleheader.

The Hornets knotted the score at 4-all when the left fielder Jeff Kerns led off the top of the fourth with a home run that curled fair around the left field foul pole.

The roof caved in on the 'Cats and pitcher Louie Trujillo in the fifth when E-State's right fielder Brad Hill and designated hitter Cliff Thompson cracked out back-to-back homers on two pitches, putting the Hornets up 6-4. Emporia State put a lid on the game in the sixth, parading 10 batters to the plate, producing six runs.

Next action for the 'Cats is a doubleheader at home against Concordia College, Minn. The games will begin at 1:30 p.m.

British left wing seeks U.S. Air Force pullout

LAKENHEATH, England (AP) — Like giant eagles, camouflaged American fighter planes soar in great arcs above the barley fields, medieval churches and hamlets of East Anglia.

They come from Lakenheath Air Base, home of 90 F-111 jets of the U.S. 48th Tactical Fighter Wing and focal point for increasing debate in Britain over the nuclear arms race and America's role in the defense of Europe.

A move is afoot in Congress to bring the troops home and those on the extreme left of British politics agree.

Lakenheath, 65 miles northeast of London, is a microcosm of America with its baseball diamonds, 24-lane bowling alley and commissry stocking hard-to-find Lay's potato chips. There is no hint here of withdrawal.

"WE'RE HERE to train for war," said Wing Commander Col. Edward "Elephant" Bracken, 44, a blunt, cigarsmoking combat veteran.

"We're here because the British asked us to be here," he said in an interview. "If the British asked us to go tomorrow, we would."

Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's Conservative government is unlikely to do that. It has accepted NATO plans to deploy 160 U.S. cruise missiles on British soil by the end of 1983, recently announced it will buy four U.S. Trident nuclear submarines and wants the 23,000 U.S. servicemen and women in this country to stay.

The far left wing of the opposition Labor Party, however, seeks an immediate pullout of American forces, although official Labor policy stops short of calling for total withdrawal and instead stresses support for unilateral nuclear disarmament.

THERE HAVE been anti-nuclear demonstrattions at Lakenheath, the largest of seven main and three standby U.S. air bases in Britain. Protests reached a high pitch two years ago when the cruise missile plan was announced.

Referendums on banning cruise missiles were held in Brandon, six miles from the base, and Thetford, 13 miles away, but the measures failed in both towns. Only 10 percent of the electorate turned out.

Mary Page, a 37-year-old schoolteacher and socialist who was Thetford's mayor at the time, led the anti-cruise forces. In a window of her home, she now displays a mock "Gone with the Wind" poster with President Reagan in the role of Rhett Butler and Thatcher as Scarlet O'Hara.

The United States has maintained a military presence in Britain since World War II.

A TOTAL of 49,000 Air Force personnel, U.S. civilians and dependents are stationed here, and the British government estimates that U.S. bases pumped nearly $1 billion into the economy last year.

A "Welcome to Britain" guide for new personnel explains that "England is about the size of Alabama." In British English, it notes, bird means girl and a biscuit is a cookie.

The Air Force keeps a low profile. All bases are designated as Royal Air Force installations — property of the British government — although there are no RAF uniforms or equipment in sight.

With its 12,000 military personnel and families, Lakenheath is a 1,924-acre slice of America complete with a hospital, schools and 9-hole golf course.

LEFT-HAND DRIVE cars and station wagons — "Yank tanks" they're called here — jockey for space in the parking lot of the base commissary. Vending machines take nickels, dimes and quarters.

An ROTC drill team practices at the junior high school and youngsters play tennis and baseball nearby. A sign at the football stadium announces a turkey shoot, picnic and Girl Scout Week.

There is even a miniature Statue of Liberty, a gift from the people of Chaumont, France, where the tactical wing was based before transfer here in 1960 when President Charles de Gaulle ordered U.S. troops out of France.

The U.S. Air Force has no role in the air defense of Britain but is here to support the 15-nation North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

a state newspaper which identified him instead of House Speaker Wendell Lady as the object of criticism by House conservatives.

"They take it out on me, even when I'm not involved. I wasn't even mentioned in the story," Doyen said.

THE SENATE MOVED against the severance tax in two unrecorded voice votes Tuesday.

First, it rejected Steineger's attempt to salvage the Senate's severance tax bill by bringing it directly from the Assessment and Taxation Committee to the Senate floor for immediate debate and a vote.

Then, it approved a motion by Sen. Jim Allen (R-Ottawa), a severance opponent, to move that bill to the Ways and Means Committee.

Steineger declined to force roll call votes on the two motions, saying simply, "This is not the time to put them (senators) on the spot."

HOUSE MAJORITY LEADER Robert Frey (R-Liberal) led the opponents of the severance tax in testifying before Ways and Means.

He argued the additional revenue the severance tax would produce is not needed.

"People in this state don't want more spending, they want less," Frey said. "...This tax is being advocated to provide funds that simply are not needed for the safe operation of this state."

Pete McGill, former House speaker who lobbies for the Legislative Policy Group, a coalition of 40 Kansas counties, and three independent refiners in the state, reiterated his contention that a severance tax would devastate the industry.

"If the price of crude continues to decline, it is almost unthinkable that we would be sitting here today considering placing another tax on this industry," McGill said.

DICK SMITH of Wichita, president of Kansas Independent Oil and Gas Association, pointed to declining prices and a drop in exploration.

"Since both price and drilling are declining, a severance tax won't finance the tremendous revenue projections which are being made," Smith said.

"Not only will this tax fail to raise the revenue which is anticipated, but the industry will be damaged and, in turn, the economy of this state will be damaged."

Also testifying that inclusion of their industry would just about ruin it were southeast Kansas coal mine workers Lowell Forbes and Clyde Hoffman and coal company spokesmen Clyde Hoffman and Ron Pommier.

Severance tax receives Senate ax

TOPEKA (AP) — To no one's surprise, the Senate Ways and Means Committee voted Wednesday to kill the only two severance tax bills alive in the Senate, but supporters of enacting a mineral production tax vowed to continue the fight.

Severance tax proponents, regrouping for what they said would be a certain effort to revive the issue in the final two weeks of this session, indicated it was likely the severance provisions would be amended into a Senate-passed bill already on the House debate calendar, or a new bill might be run in the House.

"I think there's a chance," one of those two options would be utilized, said Speaker Wendell Lady, a strong severance tax supporter.

Some severance proponents already had the bill picked out on which an attempt could be made to amend in the provisions of the House severance tax bill killed by the Senate Ways and Means Committee.

It is a bill introduced by Sen. Leroy Hayden (D-Satanta), ironically one of the strongest severance tax opponents, which is designed to force the major oil companies to drill into deep formations in the Hugoton gas field of southwest Kansas to explore for new gas.

That bill could be ruled a proper vehicle for the severance provisions, supporters said.

However, Senate opponents of the tax said they hoped the issue had been laid to rest. Some noted there is legislation badly wanted by Lady to repeal the intangibles tax which may never see the light of day in the Senate if he persists in pushing the severance tax.

The House on Wednesday sent the Senate bills to repeal the intangibles tax, which is very unpopular in Lady's home Johnson County, and a companion measure to permit cities and counties which want it to keep it as a local-option excise tax.

"If the speaker wants those bills passed badly enough, he may have to forget the severance tax," said one Republican senator, who asked that he not be identified.

But Lady said he would not be intimated. He said support for repealing the intangibles tax will be just as strong in the Senate as it was in the House, where the bill passed 98-23.

A bill approved 70-54 by the House on March 3 to impose a 3½ percent tax on oil and gas and a 2½ percent tax on natural gas liquids, and which had been endorsed, 6-5, by the Senate

Army seizes power in Bangladesh

CALCUTTA, India (AP) — Bangladesh's army chief seized power Wednesday in an apparently bloodless coup after pressuring the civilian government for months to oust corrupt officials, Radio Bangladesh reported.

Lt. Gen. Hussain Mohammad Ershad clamped martial law on the impoverished country of 90 million people and proclaimed himself head of the government, the official radio in the capital city of Dacca said in broadcasts monitored in this Indian port city.

Ershad, in an afternoon address to the nation, said deposed President Abdus Sattar had failed to cleanse his administration of corruption when the army forced him to restructure his Cabinet last month and as a result, Bangladesh was "facing a crisis on every front — economic, political, social and law and order."

"This government has completely failed," the 52-year-old career officer said. "The people expect the army to come to their aid."

Sattar, 75 and in fragile health, spoke on the radio prior to Ershad and conceded that "the situation in Bangladesh has reached the state where in the interest of the Bangladesh people, military rule has become necessary."

Sattar's present status was not clear. The United News of India quoted unidentified sources as saying he was under house arrest in the capital.

Communication links with the country, located at the top of the Bay of Bengal and bordered by India and Burma, were severed early in the morning and remained out hours later.

UNI said Indian border patrols were placed on "full alert" along the 1,500-mile-long northeastern border to monitor the situation in Bangladesh. Indian Prime Minister Indira Gandhi, in London for an Indian festival, expressed fears about possible outside interference in Bangladesh, but did not say by whom.

Radio Bangladesh said Dacca remained

Permit plan draws mixed reaction

By CATHY DAVIDSON
Collegian Reporter

The parking permit plan, restricting parking in the residential area east of campus, has drawn mixed reactions from students and residents during the two months following its inception.

The regulation prohibits persons from parking cars in the designated area from 2 to 9 a.m., unless they have a permit.

The area includes streets east of Manhattan Avenue to North 9th including the lots facing North 9th and the Haid Court area, north to Claflin and south to Bluemont Avenue.

According to Don Carrel, parking permit plan chairman, the city passed an ordinance last July prohibiting persons from parking on the streets from midnight to 9 a.m. "Manhattan residents couldn't even park on the streets in front of their homes," he said.

Concerned residents decided to take the matter into their own hands and a parking permit plan commmittee was formed to work out a compromise.

"The permit system was a compromise with residents that live in that area and students in the dorms. The committee was concerned with the effects on the students in the dorms," Carrel said. "The committee learned from a study that other universities refused to admit there was a parking problem. When the cities took steps (to take care of the problem) the universities started more parking, adding additional space for dorms."

THE PLAN is popular with Manhattan residents but not with students who received $15 fines when the ordinance went into effect.

"Landlords should make an attempt to provide off-street parking when possible," said Kenneth Friedel, senior in general business administration, who lives on Vattier. "The University should provide adequate parking that is at a practical location for students."

Cindy Wilson, junior in journalism and mass communications, received a $15 fine when the plan went into effect, but was able to obtain a parking permit through her landlord.

"It's great," said Jeff Driver, junior in business, who lives on Pomeroy Street. "It's easier to find a parking place. We (Driver and his roomates) used to have to drive through our yard if we wanted to leave because there were so many cars from the dorms. We were all able to obtain permits through our landlord."

CARRELL SAID most complaints have come from students who live on campus and park their cars east of campus.

"It's a hassle to have to go across town to get my car," said Monica George, freshman in fashion marketing and Putnam Hall resident. "I had to find somewhere else to park my car."

Lisa Williams, freshman in general and Ford Hall resident, agreed. She said she was forced to park her car on the other side of campus during the week, and in the faculty/staff parking lot on the weekends.

"A lot of people have called to tell me how happy they are with the plan," Carrel said. "The streets closest to campus that used to be bumper to bumper are now empty."

Airsick astronauts have backed-up toilet

Columbia sets new record despite problems

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Space shuttle Columbia was breaking its own mileage record Wednesday, skimming the globe with two airsick astronauts and a stopped-up toilet. But tests went well and a flight chief said, "I'm confident we'll be able to fly the full duration."

During their third day in space, astronauts Jack R. Lousma and C. Gordon Fullerton were told, "The experimenters are all very excited about the excellent data they are getting."

Fullerton responded that the thanks are due to the scientists "for putting out a good machine."

Wednesday also was a big one for Todd Nelson, a Minnesota high school senior whose experiment was chosen from hundreds of student entries. The astronauts were to haul out a plastic box with honeybees, caterpillar moths and flies, to see how they behaved in weightless space.

COLUMBIA HAD NOT gone past the 54½-hour mark before — by design on flight one; because of a fuel cell breakdown on flight two.

Flying a nose-to-sun thermal test, 150 miles high, Columbia would pass that milestone in its 37th orbit, late Wednesday afternoon.

The ship had traveled more than 3½ million miles, and it showed.

The toilet wouldn't flush and there was an indication of a nitrogen leak in the cabin pressure system. A vital camera on the wrist of the robot arm still would not work; the cabin got too chilly again overnight; there was condensation on the back window; the experiments' tape recorder conked out; and an environmental package would not work on the orbiter's power.

FOR ALL THESE troubles NASA was trying to find solutions.

The combination of the astronauts' delicate health and the long, tough work day Tuesday caused Mission Control to tinker with the schedule and substitute a less busy series of tasks.

The astronauts slept better despite hearing static while over China and Iran. But their motion sickness had not disappeared.

"They're still not feeling as well as we'd like," said flight director Tom Holloway. Lousma and Fullerton both were taking pills containing scopolamine and Dexedrine.

Flight surgeon Dr. Samuel Poole said the astronauts were "about to turn the corner."

The commander of the White Sands Missile Range where Columbia is to land Monday had good news for gawkers — he said the range would be opened to 15,000 people for the occasion.

There was no more discussion Wednesday about the 37 heat-deflecting tiles missing from the spacecraft's nose and tail. Mission Control said the lost tile would pose no problem for re-entry because they are on the upper surfaces which encounter the least heat.

The scientific work was going better than expected.

One of the tests involved firing a fast-pulsed electron gun mounted in Columbia's cargo bay. The idea was to study the impact of electrical changes generated by the beam. Among the other experiments was one measuring ultra-violet radiation from the sun.

Law agencies, House, favor bullet banning

TOPEKA — Law enforcement agencies are in full agreement: ban teflon-coated bullets.

It is a point made repeatedly this legislative session and Wednesday to the Senate Judiciary Committee.

A bill, already overwhelmingly approved by the House, would prohibit the manufacture, sale, purchase or possession of teflon-coated bullets and now waits Senate action.

"There is no need in the police or civilian arsenal for this kind of bullet," said Lt. Lee Sipes, of the Topeka police department.

The much-publicized bullet, originally developed for law enforcement uses, has tremendous penetrating power.

Most frightening to law officers is that the bullet will easily pierce so-called bullet-proof vests worn by most law officers.

Sipes said the bullet had no legitimate purpose in law enforcement, but would be ideal for snipers.

There are efforts at the federal level to ban the bullet.

Committee action on the bill is expected later this week.

Man opens fire on bus passengers, kills one

DALLAS — A man screamed "hit, hit, hit, hit" then opened fire with a shotgun on a city bus Wednesday, killing one man and wounding three others, police and witnesses said.

The man boarded the bus in a residential area south of downtown, then began yelling and firing, the witnesses said. He had carried the weapon in a golf bag.

Police took a man into custody near a freeway about four blocks away some five minutes after the shootings, said police spokesman Ed Spencer. He said the four men who were shot, including three passengers, were taken to hospitals.

The man who died was identified only as a 37-year-old Dallas man who was shot in the left side, said a Parkland Hospital spokesman who asked that his name not be used.

Two of the wounded were reported to be seriously injured, the hospital spokesman said. A 25-year-old man was shot in the chest and a 20-year-old was hit in the middle of the back and side, he said.

Bus driver Herbert Thompson, a 16-year veteran of the Dallas Transit System who was shot in the leg, fled the bus after the shootings and called authorities at a nearby Dallas Transit System facility, officials said.

Blue Cross may trim, change some benefits

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — The management of Blue Cross and Blue Shield of Kansas City plans to ask its boards of directors for permission to trim psychiatric care benefits for its customers, company officials said Wednesday.

The directors also will be asked to consider changes not related to psychiatric care benefits. Those changes may involve encouraging more outpatient surgery and keeping a tighter rein on hospital stays that are not medically necessary, Blue Cross officials said.

The boards will meet in April to consider the changes, said Tom Bowser, vice president of medical and hospital programs. The changes would affect about half of the non-profit company's 500,000 subscribers in western Missouri and eastern Kansas.

If the proposals are approved, the number of days of coverage for mental health-related hospitalization would be limited to 30 days a year. Current Blue Cross policies often offer as many as 120 to 365 days of such coverage. Also limited for many subscribers would be the number of outpatient visits that could be made for psychotherapy.

Inmates release four hostages unharmed

RALEIGH, N.C. — Three knife-wielding inmates today released four of eight hostages held more than a day in a tiny office at North Carolina's maximum-security prison, a correction spokesman said. All four were unharmed.

Two of the hostages were identified as inmates of the Central Prison, but their presence was not known until they were freed. Officials of Central Prison at first said there were only six hostages, all of them prison employees.

Department of Correction spokesman Stuart Shadbolt said the hostages were released when prison officials took sandwiches, water and cigarettes to the hostage-takers about noon.

"We suspected they were being held hostage, which in fact they were," Shadbolt said. "We could not confirm that because no one had seen McQueen or Mills. They were not part of the hostage-taking team."

Shadbolt identified the freed inmates as Bobby Lee Mills and Roger McQueen. The prison employees released were Charles Cameron of Apex and William Beckwith of Raleigh, both data compilers at the prison's diagnostic center.

Shadbolt said the freed hostages, all unharmed, would be interviewed before they could rejoin their families or return to their cells.

Future events may dictate tax

The severance tax issue has come to a procedural halt in the Kansas Ways and Means Committee. While proponents of the issue talk of efforts to revive the tax proposal on the oil, gas and natural gas liquids industries, they should reconsider current and future events.

The present oil glut is giving the "rich" industry of oil its first economic woes in years. While manufacturers and consumers reap benefits from declining gas prices, the oil industry is facing cutbacks on production and exploration.

The revenue facing taxation is currently needed in the industry to continue exploration and increase conservation efforts with capital improvements.

But the severance tax proponents should keep their lobbyists prepared. If the Reagan proposals calling for present federal programs to be transferred to the authority of the states i fully implemented, the state treasury will be seeking additional funds. At the same time, legislators will hesitate increasing individual taxes, such as property taxes or sales taxes, directly affecting individual constituents.

The potential for future increases from lower "windfall profits" should aid the oil industry's current losses and place them in a economical stronger position. The state's newly adopted federal programs will need revenue. The support necessary to approve a severance tax, while clearly missing in this legislative session, may appear.

Kansas should currently remain in its position as one of the few states without a severance tax. But the future may present opportunities when the issue will become less political and more of a necessity.

Just call me milkshake brain

Jumbled thoughts. Total nonsense. It's like someone took everything that's on my mind, mixed it up in a blender and poured it back into my head.

I honestly don't know how anybody — especially seniors — can concentrate these days .

First there's the weather. When it's nice, I have to be inside; when it's cold and wet, I usually have time to go outside. That's how it was during Spring Break and I tell you, compounded by the fact that I stayed in Manhattan, that's damn distracting (and distressing).

Then there are classes. Though they are not supposed to be a distraction — far from it — they are all floating through my mind and getting mixed up with a million other things.

Let's see, I have to call the Holidome, talk to Dave, find a Canadian flag — When was that assignment due? — bake a cake, write a speech, buy balloons — What signs were we supposed to learn for today?

I find it difficult to sleep at night because I haven't quite figured out how to turn my mind off.

ACTUALLY, TUESDAY night I decided to keep a notebook and pen by the bed so that I could jot down one thought, wipe it from my mind and then proceed to the next thought that might retard my efforts to fall asleep.

I thought it was working, but when I woke up Wednesday, I had some incomprehensible scrawlings that I couldn't totally make out. However, I do think I must have had some pretty weird dreams that night.

Convention is another mind clutterer. You see, 100 people are going to descend on Manhattan this weekend for the sole purpose of being educated and entertained, and I'm in charge. I never realized the minute details of a convention that are forgotten until the last week.

Can you imagine how hard it is to find a ull-size Canadian flag in the Little Apple? It's about as easy as finding a Hanukkah card at one of the stores in town. At least in the Big Apple I could call the United Nations for the flag (and maybe for the Hanukkah card).

WORST OF ALL is the job hunting dilemma. For most seniors there are job interviews, resume writing (and subsequent printing or copying) and the ever-popular mailbox vigil.

In the past couple of weeks, I have typed about 20 please-hire-me letters and licked as many stamps and envelopes. They just aren't making stamp or envelope glue as tasty as they used to!

Having sent these letters and resumes out, every day I wait impatiently for the mail. So far (out of 30 inquiries) I've received two rejections and one application. For a 10 percent response I guess that's not too bad but in cases like this, silence is not golden.

Next week I'm sending out more and more letters and taking to the phone.

NOBODY SHOULD have to concentrate on classes and job hunting at the same time. Perhaps job hunting should be a class so letter writing and resume copying could be classified as homework. It's impossible to have a conversation of any length without someone inquiring as to the success (or lack thereof) of my job hunt.

Also in conversation, a more frequently asked question is whether I am looking forward to graduation. I don't mind being asked. It's nice to know that people are interested. It's just damn upsetting knowing that I've fallen into the rut of saying "I'd look forward to it a lot more if I had a job."

Two months before graduation and no job. I guess that's really nothing unusual, but as I'm sure many people are finding out, the aggravation of uncertainty is frustrating. I've encountered a lot of students who are trying to deal with the possibility of having to pick up and move at the drop of a telephone receiver. Not to mention a professor friend with the same problem.

What it boils down to is I want a job, I want some peace and quiet and I want to be able to sleep at night. I'm even starting to ask myself ridiculous questions as I walk across campus. Next thing I know, I'll probably be sitting at the computer terminal and talking to myself.

All in all, I have become a firm believer that senior slump is not what I had hoped for. It's not the luxury of skipping classes and assignments because nothing really matters any more. Senior slump is simply the medical classification the doctor gives you when you are admitted to the hospital, in a slumped position, too tired to move.

Bug control ill-timed

Editor,

Two days following Spring Break, Fairchild was sprayed for bugs. Admittedly, the building is overrun with bugs (especially in the remote computing laboratory) and periodic spraying is an effective means of controlling these inhabitants. Unfortunately, there are other forms of life in Fairchild which are also affected by insecticides.

The effects range from olfactory discomfort to outright nausea, headaches and breathing difficulty. For me it means missing class, for others, discomfort and disinterest in the subject at hand.

Lafene Student Health Center also experiences problems with this odoriferous menace to health. To my knowledge, several requests have been made to the sprayers to spray after hours which have been ignored. Imagine the delight of the walk-in flu patient upon discovering that the pest-control engineer is there to greet him.

Given that spraying is necessary to control the bugs, why is it done during peak usage hours of the buildings? Why not spray the week before (during Spring Break) when no one is around or on Friday nights? This would allow the fumes to dissipate over the weekend.

Maybe those in charge can answer these questions, while those affected by sprayings can add to the weight of this complaint.

Hustle preferred over 'break'

"What are you planning for spring break?" the student asked. "Working," I answered. "Working? What is there to do with no students around?". A simple question you think? Not so.

Needless to say the University exists to educate students, but it's a typical bureaucracy and must function year round.

I'd like to answer this student's question and although I can't answer for every department, I'm sure it is basically the same for all the department secretaries.

If they are as lucky as I, they have only the following persons to coordinate work for: one department head, 15 faculty members and four graduate students. Granted, not all of them assail me with work at one time and some even do most of their own work, but you can figure the odds.

Let me describe the week of spring break, four days without 300 students and most of the faculty disappearing into some woodwork.

IT WAS A TIME to catch up on correspondence for the instructors, attend meetings, teach classes and say "yes" to various committees.

The phone has no off button and at times I threaten to pull out the cord. Fifty-two calls in and twelve calls out. Bills! My basket runneth over. Alas it was time to see if we have a budget left to work with for the rest of the fiscal year. A few class assignments and tests to prepare, do the student payroll, handle mail, sort the newspapers and file them in the library so that journalism students can later scatter them everywhere. These are the little things that my student helpers usually do and I realize how much they are worth.

NOT ALL THINGS were routine. I thought something was ready to explode when the phone had not been replaced on the cradle. When it began it's loud beeping I was heavy in thought. I jumped back, sending my chair rolling and began looking around (for what I'm not really sure).

This type of thing is not in my job description, folks. If it was it would read thus: Numerous white hairs added to already matured coiffure through shock of telephone beeping signals causing thoughts of possible explosion.

To top this, two rather nice looking gentlemen (heck, they were darn good looking) came in. When I asked if I could help them, they flashed a badge. (I knew I should have gone for coffee early.) Well, I rested easier when they explained that a former student had applied for a security job and they were just looking for reference. (Appease my heart!)

JUST A NORMAL week in my department. I have learned that anything and everything can happen. It is not an ordinarily quiet, sedate, organized, well-oiled machine. It is super hectic, very crazy, somewhat disorganized and a real challenge. Maybe that's what I love about it. No one is completely sane, students or faculty, and I fit right in. From the department head (who needs hourly reminders) to the typical absent-minded professor, to all those who keep me busy and challenged, to the students who in some way or another can't find references or need me to intervene with the faculty. I'm glad spring break is over.

One week to catch up in is great but I'm glad to get back into the hustle and bustle.

If only I could unplug that telephone.

Bill Rogenmoser

Action is crucial for students

The question I'm asked most often is, "What have you done for me and for K-State?"

My typical politician-type answer is "Well, a month isn't a very long time to get things done."

Yet, I do feel that I've accomplished some things as Student Body President. There is a need to improve the Student Governing Association's Judicial System and I've been working with others towards bringing about some positive changes. Getting to know the student senators is also important and I look forward to working with this group. I also think I've made progress in establishing good communication lines with the "other" guys: administrators, legislators, alumni, and especially, the faculty.

LATELY I've been receiving a lot of advice and I appreciate it. However, I'd like to turn the tables and make an appeal to the students.

It's at this point in time that you can make an impact on what is going on in Washington, D.C. We must convince our congressmen that we are a large group of informed, responsible voters. Our most critical concern may be the proposed financial aid cutbacks. Our method of making our voices heard should be through letters, as legislators cannot ignore what is presented to them in black and white.

President Reagan has proposed drastic cuts in federal aid to students for the 1983-84 school year. What is not clear to most students is that in the fall of 1983, such programs as the State Student Incentive Grants, Pell Grants, National Direct Student Loans and Supplemental Education Opportunity Grants will stop receiving federal money and could possibly cease to exist.

UNDER REAGAN'S proposals, graduate and professional students would no longer be eligible for Guaranteed Student Loans. An alternate program would be offered, but it would be much more expensive to students. This would affect over one-third of the 18,000 graduate students in Kansas.

My greatest concern is the quality of higher education in Kansas and at K-State. Besides the seven major state institutions, there are a multitude of private colleges and community colleges in Kansas.

Despite this diversity, I feel that the quality of our Kansas universities is being eroded.

IN MY OPINION, this reflects an attitude that the value of higher education is decreasing, while in reality, the contributions of college graduates to society is increasing.

It's a paradox that needs to be addressed and I will do just that. We must remain committed to the academic excellence of our colleges and realize that higher education is an investment that pays dividends to our state and to our nation.

Senator says left turn bill could save fuel

TOPEKA (AP) — Urban commuters will save time and gasoline if motorists are allowed to make left turns on red lights at intersections of one-way streets, a House committee was told Wednesday.

Sen. Ron Hein, (R-Topeka), testified before the House Transportation Committee in favor of a Senate-passed bill to allow the left turns after stopping at red lights.

"The system is designed to facilitat traffic flow," Hein said. "And it would save gas because traffic would be moving smoother."

A spokesman for the Topeka Police Department disputed Hein's contention, and said there was a safety problem also involved.

"This law is unnecessary," said Dean Forrester, police spokesman. "Here in Topeka, the third largest city in the state, we only have six intersections this law would apply to."

Forrester said a provision that allows cities to decide whether to enact the law would cause serious problems for people driving across the state.

"Another reason we are opposed is because of the inconsistency in the law," Forrester said. "If it's not mandatory, someone from Wichita might come to Topeka and get dinged for a $25 ticket because the law there might be different than what we have here."

Forrester laughed at the argument that the bill would save gas. If anything, he said, it will waste gas because motorists will accelerate and stop more often as they wait to turn left.

"I would say this bill would most definitely increase the number of traffic accidents," he concluded.

The committee took no action.

A Senate-approved measure to set the state speed limits at 65 mph on all interstate highways — if the federal 55 mph limit is lifted — also was debated.

Sen. Joe Norvell, (D-Hays), told the panel his bill would set the limits at 65 mph on limited access highways and 60 mph on all other highways.

"I consider this creative legislation," Norvell said. "This would put Kansas one step ahead of the rest of the country if the feds decide to go back to allowing states to decide their own speed limits."

Without the bill, Norvell said the speed limit decision would be left to the governor and the secretary of the Department of Transportation, if the federal government lifted the speed restriction when the Legislature was not in session.

"Either that or the limits would revert to the old 70 mph limits, and I feel that would be unacceptable," Norvell said.

A spokesman for the Highway Patrol said the agency opposed the speed limit change because of safety concerns.

Senate to pick committees

Student Senate will cast a final vote tonight for members of its six standing committees. Four students-at-large and seven senators will be selected to serve on each committee, said Geri Greene, senate chairman and junior in journalism and mass communications.

The standing committees are academic affairs, communications, student affairs, senate operations, state and community affairs, and personnel selections. Senate will also hear first reading of a bill providing funds for the 11 agricultural judging teams.

Dave Anderson, junior in agricultural economics, said the judging teams are requesting $4,342.08 from senate because the teams represent the University, not just the agriculture department. Anderson said students from all majors participate on the judging teams.

Larry Erpelding, assistant director of agricultural resident instruction, will speak in an open meeting period. This is part of a plan by senate to encourage those who deal with student senate to come before the body to voice concerns.

Italian leader to speak about European mood

Giancarla Codrignani, a member of the Italian parliament, and one of 10 European peace movement leaders, will speak at 2:30 p.m. today in Denison 124. The lecture will be sponsored by the University For Man's Lou Douglas Lecture Series and the Other Manhattan Project.

The Other Manhattan Project is a local organization with the goal of educating Manhattan residents about nuclear armament.

Codrignani's presentation will be entitled "Organizing Against Nuclear War: The European Experience."

An attorney and Independent party member from Bologna, Italy, Codrignani heads Italy's House Foreign Relations Committee. Her involvement in the European peace movement includes leadership on the International Secretariat of Pax Christi, a Roman Catholic peace organization; and membership in the Parliamentary Women For Peace.

Aside from her leadership in the peace movement, Codrignani is an outspoken advocate of human rights.

Walter said people unable to attend the first lecture may attend another lecture at 7 p.m. at College Avenue United Methodist Church, 1609 College Avenue.

Pell Grant reductions hit harder in '82-'83:

Reagan's budget proposals cut student aid

By PAM FITZSIMMONS
Collegian Reporter

The Reagan administration's proposed 1983 budget will severely limit the availability of federal grants and loans for next year's college students, according to Robert Evans, director of Student Financial Aid.

One of the programs affected by the proposed budget is campus-based aid, which includes National Direct Student Loans (NDSL), the Supplemental Student Educational Opportunity Grants (SEOG) and work-study. The University now receives a total allocation of about $2 million in federal funds, Evans said.

"The decision of who receives aid and for what amount is made locally," he explained. "We only receive so much money, therefore, only so much can be given away."

According to Reagan's proposal, a 20-to-25 percent cut in funds can be expected for campus-based aid, if the proposed budget is approved.

The second program affected is the Guaranteed Student Loan (GSL) program. K-State currently has loans totalling in excess of $19 million, Evans said. The GSL program is operated entirely by a private lender with the government paying the interest on the loan while the student is in school.

Before Oct. 1, 1981, the GSL was automatically approved for qualifying undergraduate students, allowing them to borrow as much as $2,500 a year. Independent undergraduate students (those without parental support) could borrow $3,000 a year and graduate students $5,000 a year, according to Evans.

SINCE OCTOBER 1, students have been able to receive the same amounts as before with the exception of independent students who now receive the same as all other undergraduate students. Also, GSL is no longer automatically approved, he said.

"The GSL is now based entirely on financial need with the family income limit set at $30,000," Evans said.

In addition to these changes, a 5 percent origination fee was instituted in October. The fee is taken off the top of the amount requested by the student. This is to assist the government in offsetting the first year's interest, according to Evans.

The proposed changes for the GSL provide that no graduate or professional students be allowed to receive a GSL and students' origination fee would be increased to 10 percent, Evans said.

The final program affected by the proposed budget is the Pell Grant, formerly called Basic Educational Opportunity Grant. According to Evans, these grants provide aid to students from families with incomes up to $26,000. The federal grants can range as high as $1,800 a year depending on family income.

Reagan plan's to limit family income levels to between $17,000 and $18,000 would reduce the number of students receiving Pell Grants by 40 percent, Evans said.

"Currently, more than 4,200 students received grants this school year. However, if the Pell Grant is reduced, no more than 1,600 or so students will receive some form of grant," he said.

THE PROPOSED budget cuts hamper the financial aid opeation because no guidelines for next year's aid programs can be set without an approved budget. Therefore, Evans said he and his staff have been forced to prepare for last-minute changes when the 1983 budget is finally approved.

Evans said one possible change for next year is the requirement by the Department of Education to validate all financial forms. Students will be required to bring in their parents' and/or their own completed tax returns to be checked against the Student Aid Report. This is compared to the random sampling of 400 students now required by the government to check for cases of fraud and abuse.

"Because we know students might have to be audited, the staff has been briefed on what to expect when and if this change happens," Evans said.

He also said that even if the budget is not approved he plans to mail out award letters to students around May 1. By using the current year's figure of $30 million, Evans said he can make conservative estimates of the amount students should receive for NDSL, work-study and Pell Grants. This will enable students to make other arrangements if they find they aren't eligible for funds under these programs.

Determination the key to Jankovich's success

By GAIL GAREY
Asst. Sports Editor

No matter how many times a small child learning to ride a bicycle may fall down, he will always climb back on and try again.

The determination shown by this the child is similar to that of K-State's Tim Jankovich.

During his first year at K-State, Jankovich had worked himself into the lineup as a sophomore and was averaging almost 10 points a game. He was off to possibly his best game ever at Nebraska.

Jankovich had 10 points in the first half and was going for two more when his knee locked.

"At that time I was playing really well," and when that happened it was frustrating, he said, because the team had a chance at the Big Eight title and he wasn't able to help out.

However, he didn't give up. He worked to strengthen his knee and removed the soreness by runnning and exercising.

Three weeks later he regained his starting position.

JANKOVICH FOUND himself in a similar situation earlier this year but for a different reason. He started the first seven games of the season but because he wasn't producing like he should Head Coach Jack Hartman sat him on the bench.

Jankovich described what he felt then as "a different type of frustration" than what he felt during his sophomore year.

"Your feeling is worse because you know you can control it."I was 't mad at anyone — except myself," he said. "Coach Hartman did the right thing.

"I told him I was going to work it out," he said. "It was good just to know he wasn't going to give up on me. I was trying too hard and putting too much pressure on myself."

Jankovich had always practiced a lot on his own — not only during his slump but throughout his entire career.

"I felt I had to," he said. "To compete at this level. Had I not put in all that practice I naturally couldn't have done it because I wasn't that big."

THE 6-FOOT senior doesn't look at his size as a weakness.

"Everyone has certain things you have to compensate for," he said. "It is not a real disadvantage f you work with it."

He stated that one of his weaknesses was his rebounding ability. However, he said he compensated for that by doing a better job of blocking opponents out.

He also worked to strengthen other areas, such as shooting, ball handling and passing.

"Shooting is one of my biggest strengths and I have made it one," he said. "I am trying to make every shot."

This explains his success at the line. This season Jankovich was 92 percent from the free-tnrow line hitting 55 of 60 free throws attempted.

Despite his success both at the line and 50 percent accuracy from the field, Jankovich is never really satisfied with the way he plays.

"I've always felt I can play better. I don't like to be mediocre at anything," he said.

ONE THING WHICH affects how a player

ENGINEERS MEETING THE CHALLENGE OF CHANGE

Jankovich

plays is his state of mind and how he goes into the game, Jankovich said.

"At this level, it is 80 percent mental at least," he said. "We believe every time we are going on the court that we are going to win.

"It has to be a total belief in yourself," he said. "This has to be genuine."

With this comes a feeling of "satisfaction when your team is playing together real efficiently and winning games," he said. "You get a lot of satisfaction for yourself and the team.

"The best team works together."

Jankovich didn't start his college basketball career at K-State. After high school, he chose Washington State over Iowa State, New Mexico State and K-State.

"I felt like going away — totally unknown where I must build my own reputation," he said. "I didn't want to feel like it was all right here laid out for me."

HE ATTENDED Washington State for one semester before returning to K-State — his home.

"I realized I had made a mistake," he said. "I wasn't real proud. I felt guilty because I had made a commitment to them and I felt guilty to people here because I should have just stayed here."

Though Jankovich was born in Gary, Ind., his family moved to Manhattan when he was 8 years old. He began attending K-State games in the 1960s when the Wildcats were coached by Tex Winter.

Jankovich said that he has always approached basketball first and would like to continue by playing professional basketball.

"I have confidence in myself but I'm realistic," he said. "I am thinking in terms of law school."

Turning to another branch of athletics, Jankovich now competes on the University tennis team.

As the young child, who, becoming discontented with riding his small bike, turns to a larger one, Jankovich, having exhausted his eligibility on the basketball team, does not plan to sit idle while he waits to hear from law schools.

Bradley grabs NIT title; runs past Purdue 67-58

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Juniors Barney Mines and Willie Scott scored 17 points apiece to give Bradley the championship of the 45th annual National Invitation Tournament with a 67-58 victory over Purdue Wednesday night.

The title was the fourth in the NIT for Bradley, tying the Braves with St. John's, N.Y., for the most championships in the tournament's history.

Bradley was regular season champion of the Missouri Valley Conference, but had been passed up for an at-large berth in the 48-team NCAA tournament after losing in the conference's postseason tournament.

Mines and Scott, who averaged less than eight points a game as a playmaker, led a balanced scoring attack. Anderson, the third leading scorer in MVC history behind Oscar Robertson and Larry Bird, scored 16 and David Thirdkill hit for 15 for the Braves, who finished with a 26-10 record.

Russell Cross, the 6-foot-10 sophomore center for Purdue, 18-14, led the Boilermakers with 16. The opposing centers, Donald Reese and Kerry Cook, fouled out of the game.

Anderson, who scored 25 points in Bradley's semifinal victory over Oklahoma, was named NIT's most valuable player.

Purdue never led after having an 8-6 edge in the first half. Twice, however, the Boilermakers had an opportunity to take the lead in the second half with Bradley ahead 43-42. But Purdue missed both of its shots.

Then, Thirdkill hitt a three-point play with 9:39 left to start an 11-2 run by the Braves that gave them a 54-44 edge with 6:31 to go. The closest Purdue could get after that was four points, at 57-53, and at 62-58.

Bradley won its fourth title in its 14th NIT appearance since 1938. The Braves' other title years were 1957, 1960, and 1964.

Purdue was making its fifth appearance, having won a title in 1974.

Softball team wins two

The women's softball squad took a pair of one-run decisions from Pittsburg State University Wednesday, running its record to 5-2.

The Wildcats took the first game 1-0 behind Diane Punzo's three-hit pitching. Kari Jones accounted for K-State's only run with a second-inning home run.

In the second half of the doubleheader, Pittsburg led 1-0 with one out in the bottom of the seventh inning. That's when things turned around.

Cindy Wasinger reached first on an error by the Pittsburg second baseman. Pat Howard then singled to center field. Wasinger took second base and tried for a steal off third. Pittsburg's third baseman bobbled the throw, and the error allowed Wasinger to slide in safe. In the confusion, Howard stole second.

Pittsburg State elected to intentionally walk Janel Anderson, but the catcher stepped out of the catcher's box. The umpire ruled an illegal pitch and awarded the K-State baserunners one base each. Wasinger scored and Howard advanced to third.

Pittsburg eventually managed to walk Anderson. Next up for the 'Cats was Kelly Scoles, who struck out, bringing Jones to the plate with a chance to pick up her second game-winning RBI of the day.

Jones drove a single to right field, scoring Howard and saving the game for K-State.

Wildcat Head Coach Ralph Currie said the the second victory was "almost a miracle."

"We hadn't really done anything with the bats all day, and I guess you just take what you can get," Currie said. "The umpire helped us out (with the illegal pitch call), but as it turned out Kari's (Jones) hit to the outfield would have scored two runs to win it for us anyway."

Four of K-State's five victories this season have been in the come-from-behind style. Currie said the 'Cats simply haven't been scoring many runs.

"We're getting awfully good pitching and we've been playing awfully good defense," he said. "Until the hitting comes through, that'll just have to do.

The softball team will travel to Lawrence Friday for a weekend tournament. Next home action is Tuesday April 13, against Washburn University.

Republican-ruled senate votes to back Reagan veto

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Republican-ruled Senate voted Wednesday to sustain President Reagan's veto of a bill giving him emergency oil-control powers he said he didn't want.

The vote was 58 to 36 to override, far less than the two-thirds margin required to enact a law over a presidential veto.

The veto was the first of the three Reagan has cast since taking office to be challenged in either chamber.

Coming after what Senate sources said was a heavy, last-minute lobbying blitz by the White House, the Senate vote alone sustained the veto — eliminating the need for action on the veto in the Democratic-led House.

The bill would have given the president powers he insisted he didn't want: authority to allocate crude oil supplies and impose price controls during severe shortages.

Congress gave the president this authority in the mid-1970s, but it lapsed last September 30 — with the administration making no moves to seek its reenactment.

Reagan, claiming that Americans have been hurt by past efforts to allocate fuel supplies, vetoed the bill last Saturday, even though Republican Senate leaders had warned him an override was likely.

Sen. James McClure, (R-Idaho), told the Senate not to vote to sustain the veto out of "blind loyalty" to Reagan. He said the legislation is needed for the federal government to cope with a major oil disruption, like another oil embargo, whether Reagan wants the authority or not.

The dispute may have been largely symbolic, since the legislation did not require the president to use the authority he doesn't want — authority that would expire at the end of his term anyway.

"We must recognize that an interuption of a significant portion of foreign energy supplies...will involve real costs," Reagan said in his veto message. 'No magic federal plan can simply make them go away."

Sen. Charles Percy, (R-Ill.), told colleagues that an overide vote would "send the wrong signal to consumers at the wrong time...We're giving him controls he does not want."

Senate Majority Leader Howard Baker, (R-Tenn.), who voted to sustain Reagan's veto, was one of eight GOP senators who went to the White House last week to urge the president against vetoing the bill, citing heavy bipartisan support for it.

Psychology: Students earn credit for education received helping faculty in labs with field research

By DARCY LINDSTROM
Collegian Reporter

Experience is the best teacher, as the saying goes, but that doesn't necessarily apply to the Department of Psychology. In psychology; the meaning is modified slightly — experimentation may be the best teacher.

In the psychology department, undergraduates may earn academic credit for assisting faculty members in laboratory or field research, according to Jerome Frieman, associate professor of psychology.

The student can receive two to four hours of class credit, depending on the amount of work done. In order to receive credit students must enroll in either the "Topics" or "Problems" course. The amount of credit is agreed upon in advance.

"The credit is not for the work the students do, but for what they learn while doing it," Frieman said.

"The type of work you do depends a lot on the adviser you have and on what you'd like to do," Richard Harris, associate professor of psychology, said.

"Students do everything from collecting data to computer analysis. Sometimes, after working on a project with their professor, they are allowed to design something on their own," he said.

CARMEN DOMEYKO, junior in psychology, is one such student.

Domeyko, who is working with Frieman, has designed an experiment that will be conducted this semester, and according to him, "the experience you gain working on these experiments is really more beneficial than sitting in a classroom."

The majority of students who participate in this program are psychology majors, but there are exceptions.

Steve Snook, senior in journalism and mass communications, said he became interested in research while enrolled in Psychology of Mass Communications.

"Dr. Harris and I had a lot in common and we share some of the same interests," he said. "Toward the end of the semester we began discussing the possibility of me assisting him with research."

DURING THE FALL, Harris and Snook conducted experiments dealing with the use of metaphor in radio advertising.

"It's been real good experience for me. I have learned a lot about research methods, computers, statistical analysis and how to work with people," Snook said. "The results were very good and will also help me in my profession. A degree is important in getting a job, but an employer is also going to ask the question 'What have you done?'

"After doing this research, when an employer asks me that question I now have something concrete to show him," he said.

According to Frieman, one of the major advantages for the student is the close working relationship he develops with the instructor. Such a relationship aids an instructor in writing recommendations for students seeking employment.

"It's hard to write a letter of recommendation when all you have is a class grade. It's much easier when you know a person well," Frieman said.

OTHER BENEFITS, according to Frieman, include the personal interaction between students and faculty members as well as graduate students.

Harris said he believes another benefit to the student is the first-hand experience in research design.

"Research design is sometimes difficult to grasp when you read it in a book. Actually doing it makes it much easier to understand," Harris said.

Frieman and Harris both said they believe the program is beneficial to the undergraduate majoring in psychology, especially if he plans on conducting his own research.

"I wouldn't advise every (psychology) student to do this, but I would strongly advise undergraduates who plan on attending graduate school to participate in the program," Harris concluded.

Knot just a professor... Robin Higham, professor of history, shows off his "designer" collection of ties. Higham has designed ties for military officers for six years, completing about a dozen designs.

Professor fastens knots around officials' necks

By KIM REHM
Collegian Reporter

Robin Higham is tied up in his work. A professor of history, Higham spends his spare time tying knots around the necks of high-ranking U.S. military officers.

One of those officials was former Rear Adm. Eugene Carroll Jr., who recently visited K-State to speak in the Lou Douglas speaker series.

Carroll is just one of many U.S. military officials who have been presented with one of Higham's designer neckties.

It all began at a meeting in Atlanta in 1976 when Higham decided that as a member of the' Air Force Historical Foundation (AFHF), the group needed some type of gift to present to hosting officials during visits to foreign countries.

Higham got the idea of a tie from a sample tie he received in the mail.

THE IDEA SEEMED appropriate because of the ease of packing, the light weight and the relatively low cost, he said.

Higham began designing while attending Harvard University. He did a basic design sketch of his college logo on silver coffee spoons. According to Higham the spoons sold well.

> 'I figure I should get my name on the ties. All the other designers do.'

"I've always done some sort of drawing and designing," he said.

The first tie Higham designed was for the International Military Institute Commission. He received 10 of the 100 ties ordered while at the London airport.

"I took them to Iran and gave them away," Higham said. The other 90 were mailed to the United States, he added.

"I road-tested one of the 10 ties in 100-degree Iranian weather," Higham said. "I wore it for 14 days straight and it never gave me any trouble. It flattened out every time. All I had to do was brush it down wth my hand. The wrinkles came right out."

All of Higham ties are made of terylene, a crush-proof, crease-resistant fiber that makes for easy traveling.

HIGHAM HAS designed several ties for the AFHF.

"We sell them and figure they're good publicity," he said. "We sell them with an invitation to join the AFHF."

According to Higham most people go to a tie company and ask the company to design a tie.

"I'd rather do it myself. I think it's more fun, more challenging," Higham said. "Designing is relaxing and something I enjoy doing. It gives me something to think about.

"The designing business for me is one where somebody writes and asks if I'll do a design for them wnd they'll send something that they want on it (the tie(wnd give me some instruction," he said.

He explained that he carrries the design around in his head, and is fairly sure of what he's doing when he sits down to work.

"Generally you keep it simple," Higham said. "You keep the design at a diagonal so when they weave the material it will come out at an angle."

Yet the design has to be relatively simple and repetitive, Higham said. "If you keep all those things in mind, after a while you can just sit down and do it."

HIGHAM FACES several problems when designing ties.

"We've found that multiple colors don't work very well," Higham said. "Gold is difficult to work with because it doesn't photograph well. When we want to make ads (for the ties) the gold must be photographed with a costly special filter."

Also, the finished tie is more of a yellow color instead of the intended gold color, he said.

"Width is a problem in designing ties," Higham said. "We've ranged from four and a half inches down to three inches. The thinner ones keep coming back in style but some of our people are large and they like larger ties. The newer ties are three and a half inches."

Higham has been designing ties for six years and has created about a dozen designs.

Higham also designs book covers.

"Until you see them (the book covers) finished, it's hard to tell what you need to do to make them better," Higham said.

Visibility has to be the number one objective, he said. The "one rule for a bookcover is that you have to put it on the mantlepiece on the other side of the room and it has to be readable."

"With a tie, you have somewhat the same thing," Higham said. "Someone standing three to four feet away should be able to see what it is and not have to come up and say, 'What is that?' They'll look at the tie and ask what the AFHF means. That's what we want them to say."

EACH TIE costs $12.50, which Higham said helps cover magazine expenses.

"We publish the two journals, so I figure it

Brothers plan new life for Abilene mansion

By LAUREEN MOORE
Collegian Reporter

Tourist attraction? Hardly. However, sometimes the Seelye sisters in Abilene have trouble convincing people that their mansion is not on display. To Helen and Marion Seelye the mansion is home.

The sisters have lived in their home since their father, A.B. "Doc" Seelye, had the house built in 1905.

The mansion, a historic Abilene landmark, was damaged by fire on Jan. 17. Most of the damage was in the northeast and east portions of the southern style, 22-room mansion.

Located on Buckeye, one of Abilene's busiest streets, the mansion was billed as the finest dwelling between Topeka and Denver upon completion. It is equipped with a complete telephone system, steam heat, electricity and running water, all installed when the house was first built. The original construction cost about $40,000.

The sisters have had many offers, sometimes from strangers, to buy the mansion. At one time it was almost sold to Colonel Sanders of Kentucky Fried Chicken fame, but because of zoning problems the deal fell through.

The sisters decided to sell their home to Terry and Jerry Tietjen, brothers from Sabetha, after the Jan. 17 fire.

HELEN WAS in the kitchen making Sunday dinner when she discovered the fire.

"I heard a big thump, and looked around, but didn't see anything. The next time I turned around I saw flames coming from the elevator shaft," she said.

The fire was believed to have started in the elevator shaft, J.D. Longbein, an Abilene fireman said.

"The elevator had not been used for quite some time, except for storage," Helen said. "We had some old newspapers and magazines, some old shoes and a big jar of popcorn in there."

Marion, who was upstairs when the fire started, received second degree burns to the upper part of her body and smoke inhalation.

The mansion, which hasn't been painted outside for many years, shows the ravages of time and a battering of the the elements. Part of the interior has not been redecorated since the mansion was built.

THE NEW OWNERS have voiced plans to change that.

"We plan to completely restore the mansion inside and out, including the fire-damaged areas," Terry said. "We have the original blueprints to the house and plan to follow them as closely as possible when rebuilding.

"We want to restore it back to the way it was in 1905," he said. "We want the wallpaper and paint to be of the 1905 period. We have pictures of the interior that were taken shortly after the house was built and we are going to use them as a guide."

Some of the older photographs show plaster of paris ornaments that hung from the ceiling, Terry said. As the original ornaments stayed up only 10 years, the brothers hope to have some made and put back on the ceiling.

Several changes will be made, including the exclusion of the elevator.

"We won't be putting in a new elevator, the cost is prohibitive," Terry said. "Instead we are planning to add one or two more modernized bathrooms."

Once the work is completed on the mansion the sisters will move back to their home. This is part of the agreement with the new owners. Currently, the sisters are staying in the home of an old family friend.

THE HOUSE IS elaborate. Once inside, one can view the large reception hall — a brass chandelier and a fireplace faced with smoothe mosaic tiles that create a design pattern of fern branches stand out.

The music room is one of the five rooms that branch off the hall. A roman arch entryway leads into the room.

"When the house was built the music room was called the parlor," Helen said. "It's color scheme was white and gold, furnished with gold furniture. We got so tired of the gold furniture, we finally sold it."

Musical instruments in the room include a large mahogany grand piano and an antique victrola.

"We were so glad that they got the piano out without any damage from the fire," Helen said. "We really were lucky to get almost everything out, it could have been a lot worse."

A LARGE mahogany grandfather clock sitting on the stairway landing was also saved from the fire. Firemen rushing up the stairs heard the clock strike the hour and carried it outside.

Within the living room two unique pieces of furniture are found. One, a wooden chair, dating back to 1855, was passed down to the sisters by their grandparents. A daybed where their aunts and uncles were born, also has a special place in the room.

In the dining room, dark oak paneling lines the walls. An impressive display of exquisite glass, silver and china place settings are found in the room.

A one-lane bowling alley is located in the basement. The alley is made of wood and is built up on legs like a table. The balls, also of wood, are slightly smaller than bowling balls used currently.

The ballroom was first used following completion of the house. More than 300 guests attended the open house on Christmas of 1906.

was a way to get a little more money, because one of the problems in publishing is constantly rising costs," Higham said.

"The 'Command Pilot' tie is the most popular," Higham said, adding that about 1,200 ties of the style has been sold.

'I've felt we've always needed something more dignified than a purple wildcat.'

"They're selling rapidly enough now that we're buying them in batches of 500 at a time," Higham said. "We do fairly well in terms of demand.

"General USAF ties sell like 'hot cakes' and they're popular because anyone who has been in the Air Force can wear it," he added.

According to Higham the ties are manufactured in England.

"One reason that we have them made in England is that we can't find an American manufacturer who will let us order 100 ties at a reasonable price," Higham said. "The reason we've gone to only one American manufacturer is that we decided one tie sells well enough that we can order 500."

HIGHAM HAS ALSO been involved with designing for the University.

"I did the logo for the College of Arts and Sciences," that is being used on the college's Open House material, Higham said. "I felt we ought to have something that is distinct."

According to Higham K-State's wildcat logo could be updated.

"I've felt we've always needed something more dignified than a purple wildcat," Higham said. "The wildcat is associated with sports but the University offers more than just an athletic program."

Higham suggested creating a logo which would incorporate Anderson Hall with the Kansas sunflower.

Higham charges no fees for designing ties.

"I don't take anything for these. I just take a tie for my own collecton when a new one comes in. That's all I want out of it."

There is a new label being printed on the ties that has Higham's name and address on it.

"I figure I should get my name on the ties," he said. "All the other designers do."

K-State greeks sweep conference awards

The K-State Greek system swept the top honors at the annual Mid-America Interfraternity and Panhellenic Council Association (MIFCA/MAPCA) conference March 18-21 in Dallas.

The Panhellenic Council won the Sutherland Award presented to the strongest council. The Intrafraternity Council (IFC) claimed the Jellison Award also given to the strongest council.

K-State's greek councils competed against 75 other schools from 16 states.

Barb Robel, Greek Affairs director, said the judges liked the councils' participation in a variety of services and activities.

Students sold insurance to housemothers and cooks, donated manpower and money to the Sunset Children's Zoo and conducted chapter officer workshops — all part of what contributed to winning the awards. Rush statistics also played an important role in the competition.

"The cooperation among the fraternities instead of the competition between them," was partially responsible for the victory, said Jerry Karlin, senior in accounting and MIFCA executive vice president.

Similar cooperation helped MAPCA win the Sutherland Award, according to Susie Hines, senior in accounting and Panhellenic president.

"It basically reflects back to our greek system. We have 12 strong sororities that are willing to do more than work for their own house," she said.

Hines added that strong greek publications and public relations also contributed to the victories.

In addition, K-State dominated the election of 1982-83 MIFCA/MAPCA officers.

Elected as president of MAPCA was Hines. Jenny Garrett, junior in pre-design professions, was elected vice president and Sherry Schmitt, junior in journalism and mass communications, was elected Central Region vice president. Kelly Presta, junior in political science, was elected Central Region vice president of MIFCA. Robel will remain executive director of MAPCA.

calm under a dusk-to-dawn curfew and with troops in control of all key points. Government offices were closed.

Ershad, who suspended the constitution and dissolved Parliament, said elections would be held soon to pick a new president. He said a council would be formed to advise him and indicated the new chief of state would be someone who would take direction from the military.

Predominantly Moslem Bangladesh has had a stormy history since it won independence from Pakistan in late 1971. A series of natural disasters battered its agricultural economy and massive influsions of foreign aid were needed to feed the exploding population.

The great poverty of Bangladesh, which has a per capita income of about $100, has fueled a series of military coups.

Severance

Assessment and Taxation Committee was killed by the Ways and Means Committee on a vote of 7-3 Wednesday.

Another bill, introduced on behalf of Democratic Gov. John Carlin by Senate Democrats, was killed on a vote of 7-4.

Voting to kill the Senate bill were the six solid severance tax opponents — Ross Doyen (R-Concordia), Paul Hess (R-Wichita), Bob Talkington (R-Iola), Ron Hein (R-Topeka), Frank Gaines (D-Augusta), and Joe Warren (D-Maple City), plus Sen. Joe Harder (R-Moundridge), who had been somewhat undecided.

Opposing Gaines' motion to kill that bill were Sens. Jack Steineger (D-Kansas City), Billy McCray (D-Wichita), Gus Bogina (R-Lenexa), and Merrill Werts (R-Junction City).

The six hardcore opponents also voted to kill the House-passed bill, along with Steineger. The Democratic leader voted for that motion hoping to be able to move for reconsideration, but his effort was in vain because the adverse report on the bill was turned in to the Senate before the committee met again late in the day.

Harder didn't vote on the House bill, saying he wanted to make a point to severance tax opponents who bombarded him with telephone calls — some of them nasty and threatening — earlier this week.

"I wanted them to know that they did not intimidate me, and if they ever try this again they should know such tactics can backfire and be counter-productive," Harder said.

"I'm very disappointed, of course," said Lady, who with Carlin has pushed strongly for two legislative sessions for enactment of a severance tax.

"I think it's tragic they wouldn't let an issue of this magnitude be heard by the entire Senate. In my opinion, it's contrary to the democratic process."

Added Lady, "I'm certainly not going to concede at this point that the ball game is over. We'll just look at the options available before we decide what to do."

Among those options, he said, are amending the Senate bill sponsored by Hayden, running one of three severance tax bills still alive in the House Assessment and Taxation Committee, or running a new bill copied after the one the House passed three weeks ago.

The severance tax bills the House tax committee still has include one House Democrats introduced for Carlin, one by Rep. Kerry Patrick (R-Leawood) and one by Rep. Bill Fuller (R-Miltonvale).

House Minority Leader Fred Weaver said he was undaunted by the Senate committee's action.

"If anything, I guess I'm more optimistic than I was," the Baxter Springs Democrat said. "I think we can pass a severance tax. I think we're gaining momentum in the Senate. I think we're rapidly approaching the magic number (of 21 votes needed to pass a bill in the Senate) and given the right set of circumstances, we'll pass one."

Asked what he would use now as a vehicle, Weaver replied, "If we have to, I suppose we can send them two bills a day. There may be some blood letting before it's over, but it's not over at this point, by any means. I don't think the House is going to cave in on a whole bunch of issues."

Speaking for Carlin, Press Secretary Bill Hoch said the governor would continue to explore possibilities.

"Nevertheless, it is distressing to see the Ways and Means Committee continuing to protect the oil and gas industry, to the disadvantage of a majority of Kansans."

Hess, whose committee almost certainly would receive any more bills sent the Senate, acknowledged that "cats have nine lives and basketball games frequently aren't decided until the last second," but added:

"I think this might wind up to be the day we all look back on as the day the severance tax died. I'm certain other attempts may be made to run another bill, but I'm wondering if all those people in the House are going to want to go on the record on this issue again, knowing it can't get through the Senate."

Italian leader urges fear of nuclear arms

An active peace movement spawning several large demonstrations in Europe has turned global attention to the question of nuclear arms.

Giancarlo Codrignani, one of the leaders of the peace movement in Italy, spoke Thursday on the movement at a lecture sponsored by University for Man's Lou Douglas Lecture Series and The Other Manhattan Project, a local anti-nuclear group.

The only real question of our age is one of peace/war, Codrignani said, but it will be a long process to change history and change has to be done mentally — in the people, the government and diplomacy between countries.

The European level of consciousness on nuclear arms has risen to the point of change, she said. In Italy, participants in the movement are working to denuclearize the Italy region by following region and religious leaders who have actively sought peace.

There are also movements active in West Germany, Great Britain and Belgium, Codrignani said.

Reagan rehires three controllers; officials say more hiring possible

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Reagan administration said Thursday it rehired three air traffic controllers to the flight system, but insisted it was not reversing a general policy barring reinstatements.

White House spokesman David Gergen said he assumed any controllers rehired were found to have been victims of harassment in the strike. "I am not aware of any change in policy, certainly," he said.

The Federal Aviation Administration acknowledged that it rehired Joan Plummer, an air traffic controller from San Antonio, Texas, who was among 11,500 striking controllers President Reagan fired in August for ignoring his order to return to work within 48 hours. It also confirmed that two others have been rehired. Spokesman Fred Farrar also said the FAA is reviewing 1,000 such "hardship cases" and that "some of" these fired controllers might be reinstated.

Linda Gosden, spokeswoman for Transportation Secretary Drew Lewis, declared, "There has been absolutely no change in President Reagan's or Secretary Lewis' position on rehiring the striking controllers."

She said "we have said we will always look at those cases where the people may have been harrassed or intimidated" into joining the Aug. 3 strike by the Professional Air Traffic Controllers Organization.

FARRAR EMPHASIZED that Plummer would not be returning to her flight tower job at the Fort Worth Air Route Traffic Control Center. He said she would work at the Houston Air Route Traffic Center, one of several such facilities that direct airplanes in flight corridors between airports, but not at the airports themselves.

Farrar said the other two reinstated controllers worked in the Great Lakes region and in the Atlanta area. He did not identify the others.

Transportation Department officials, declining to be quoted by name, said they expected no more than "a couple hundred" reinstatements among the 1,000 controllers whose hardship cases are being reviewed.

These officials said they could talk only off the record because of litigation pending before the Merit Systems Protection Board.

JEFF MILLER, a spokesman for Lewis, said "in a small number of cases," the government might choose to reinstate fired controllers rather than risk losing appeals filed with the merit review panel.

In a gesture to the AFL-CIO, Reagan agreed last December to waive a three-year debarment period so that the 11,500 air traffic controllers could apply for other civil service jobs.

At the time, both Reagan and Lewis emphasized that they opposed reinstating controllers to airport tower jobs. They said that would be unfair to controllers who remained on the job during the strike.

Reagan, Lewis and FAA Administrator J. Lynn Helms said at the time of the strike that the controllers had forsaken their jobs by violating a no-strike oath. They said the government was determined to rebuild the air control system around the some 3,500 controllers who remained on the job, military personnel and new recruits.

Gary Eads, president of the decertified PATCO, said he viewed the rehirings with caution "because of the circumstances involved."

Contractor fraud leads to bid rigging investigations

By HEIDI BRIGHT
Collegian Reporter

The Justice Department is cracking down on highway construction bid rigging in the Midwest.

Richard Braun, anti-trust attorney, discussed how contractors rig bids and methods investigators use to uncover these violations Thursday in Forum Hall during the Kansas Transportation Engineering Conference.

The best method of detecting rigged bids is to examine contractors' cost estimates and how the money is allocated, Braun said. Another sign is the number of bidders involved.

"In virtually every case we have tried there have been six or fewer bidders," he said.

Some contractors bid occasionally and their bids are "substantially under the cost estimate," he said. Other times contractors aware of rigging will set their bids close to rigged bids to avoid looking bad.

BRAUN SUGGESTED watching regular bidders to see how they bid when outside bidders are absent. Contractors located distantly should submit higher estimates.

Some contractors have two or more proposals which they use in the event a non-local contractor submits a bid, Braun said.

Investigators have found that 12 to 15 hours before a contract is awarded contractors gather to compare bids. He cited a case where contractors gathered in a parking lot and discussed bids hours before the award is given. These hours prior to the bidding deadline are opportune for catching contractors in the act of rigging bids, he said.

Contractors themselves are not the only ones guilty of bidding violations, Braun said. In other states, officials awarding contracts have been known to release the number of contractors submitting bids.

Other times officials awarding contracts have been "somewhat naive" about bid fraud. This is because they work closely with the contractors and have developed trusting relationships, he said. Some people aware of rigged bids do not report violations, fearing that nothing will turn up in the investigation. It is "important to take rumors seriously and report them," Braun said.

Investigators have trouble gathering information on rigging. Many contractors refuse to answer questions, saying they have not heard of any violations in the last five or six years. Braun added that they tend to talk more when facing a grand jury.

The long range impact of these investigations is a healthier industry, he said. In current cases of bid rigging the dishonest operators have an umbrella of economically efficient contractors protecting them. As the dishonest contractors are removed, the more efficient ones will receive the contracts.

Astronauts test space shuttle's robot arm

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — Astronaut C. Gordon Fullerton nudged the shuttle closer to its future as a space freighter Thursday, waving Columbia's robot arm and demonstrating it has the muscle to lift a payload and eventually place it in an orbit of its own.

"If there were any surprises, they were all pleasant," the pilot said. "I'm really impressed with that piece of machinery."

Said Mission Control: "We were impressed, too."

Columbia, sailing smoothly, neared half-way point of its seven-day voyage. Fullerton and commander Jack Lousma apparently had overcome their motion sickness and got some needed rest.

The grab-and-lift was the first test of the Canadarm's capacity to do the job it was built for: depositing and retrieving satellites in space and wave scientific instruments into place outside the orbiter. The arm is assigned its first for-hire duties on Flight 7, scheduled for April 1983, when it will release a German scientific satellite.

Rebels fight near El Salvador election building

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador — Leftist guerrillas launched hit-and-run attacks near El Salvador's election headquarters and outside the capital Thursday in a new drive to wreck the Constitutent Assembly voting.

The guerrillas fought to within a few hundred yards of the Central Elections Council building in a six-hour attack that began about midnight and ended with the rebels withdrawing under government fire.

Shooting also erupted for a second day on a mountain overlooking the principal air base outside the capital, and the government confirmed a rebel radio broadcast that guerrillas had captured the town of Yoloaquin and three surrounding villages in Morazan province, 100 miles east of San Salvador.

The National Guard said the guerrillas also had occupied a radio station in Santa Ana, the country's second biggest city, and broadcast warnings to the people not to vote in the elections Sunday.

House tentatively approves remapping bill

TOPEKA — The Kansas House Thursday gave tentative approval, 70-46, to a congressional reapportionment bill which Democratic Gov. John Carlin vetoed a month ago and has promised to veto again.

If the House approves the plan on final vote today, it returns to the Senate for concurrence in the House amendments. It is virtually certain to go to a conference committee for further work.

Originally, as passed by the Senate, the bill would have sent Carlin a totally new reapportionment plan, one which splits three counties — Wyandotte, Sumner and McPherson but has very low population deviations.

However, the House Apportionment Committee amended it to make it identical to the one Carlin vetoed.

Block's firing of SCS director draws criticism

WASHINGTON — Agriculture Secretary John Block was accused Thursday of making a political and arbitrary decision in firing the professional director of the Soil Conservation Service and turning the job over to a personal friend.

"You decided to have a fulltime farmer in this job because he's your buddy," Sen. Thomas Eagleton (D-Mo.) told Block.

Sen. James Sasser (D-Tenn.) joined Eagleton in criticizing Block's announcement Wednesday that he was firing Norman Berg, a 39-year career professional who has headed the SCS since 1979, and naming Missouri farmer Peter Myers to take his place.

Sasser called it an "arbitrary, political decision" that ignores the interests of farmers. Soil conservation, he said, is a serious national problem that requires the professsional competence of career technicians.

Block, denying such charges, said the appointment was made in compliance with President Reagan's pledge to put fulltime farmers in top USDA management positions. Block himself has a grain and livestock farm in Illinois.

Rolling Stones negotiate for Japan tour

TOKYO — Bill Wyman, the bass guitarist of the Rolling Stones, said Thursday that the British rock band is negotiating to make its first tour of Japan.

The Stones have been unwelcome in Japan for years because some members have drug convictions.

Wyman said it "looks like there might be a chance" for a tour in the fall, "because we're nice boys, really."

He told a luncheon audience at the Foreign Correspondents Club of Japan that the Japanese were "very impressed" by security and other arrangements during the Stones' recent four-month tour of the United States, where they played to 2.5 million fans in 51 shows.

Wyman is vacationing here with his wife and 20-year-old son.

Weekend events open to all

This weekend marks the annual University Open House, an opportunity for K-State to strut its stuff for prospective students.

But equally as important is the chance for all students to tour the campus and see some of the things they often miss or overlook during the hectic days of school.

Many students, in search of a degree, have little time to stop and examine the many interesting aspects of campus life at K-State.

How many Home Economics students have been to Weber Arena? How many Vet students have been in the Collegian newsroom in Kedzie Hall? What about the planetarium shows in Cardwell Hall?

The Open House provides everyone the chance to see what else is going on at the University, and is an opportunity to see the varied educational prospects available at K-State.

This weekend get out and enjoy the University. Stop in at Ackert Hall and enjoy the biology and wildlife exhibits. Go over to East Stadium and watch a performance of Lunchbag Theatre. Visit King Hall and be amazed at the chemistry magic show.

It's free, it's entertaining and it's educational. It will probably be a lot of fun, too.

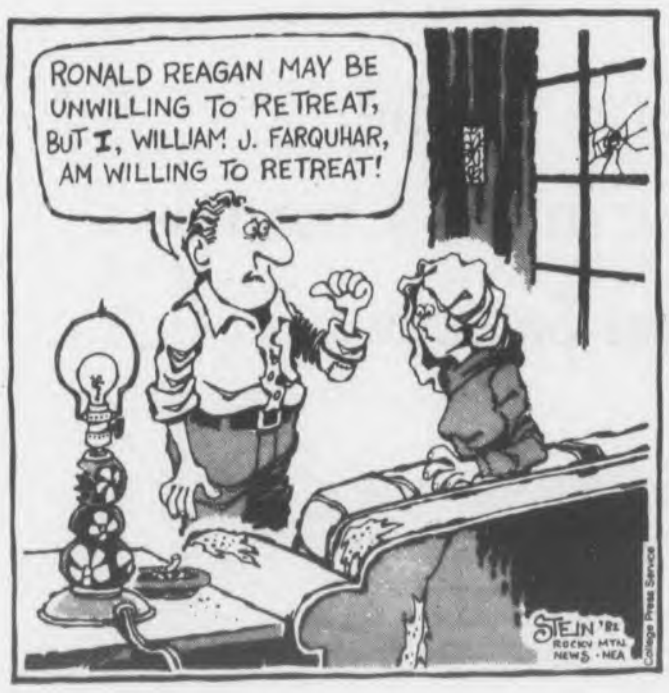
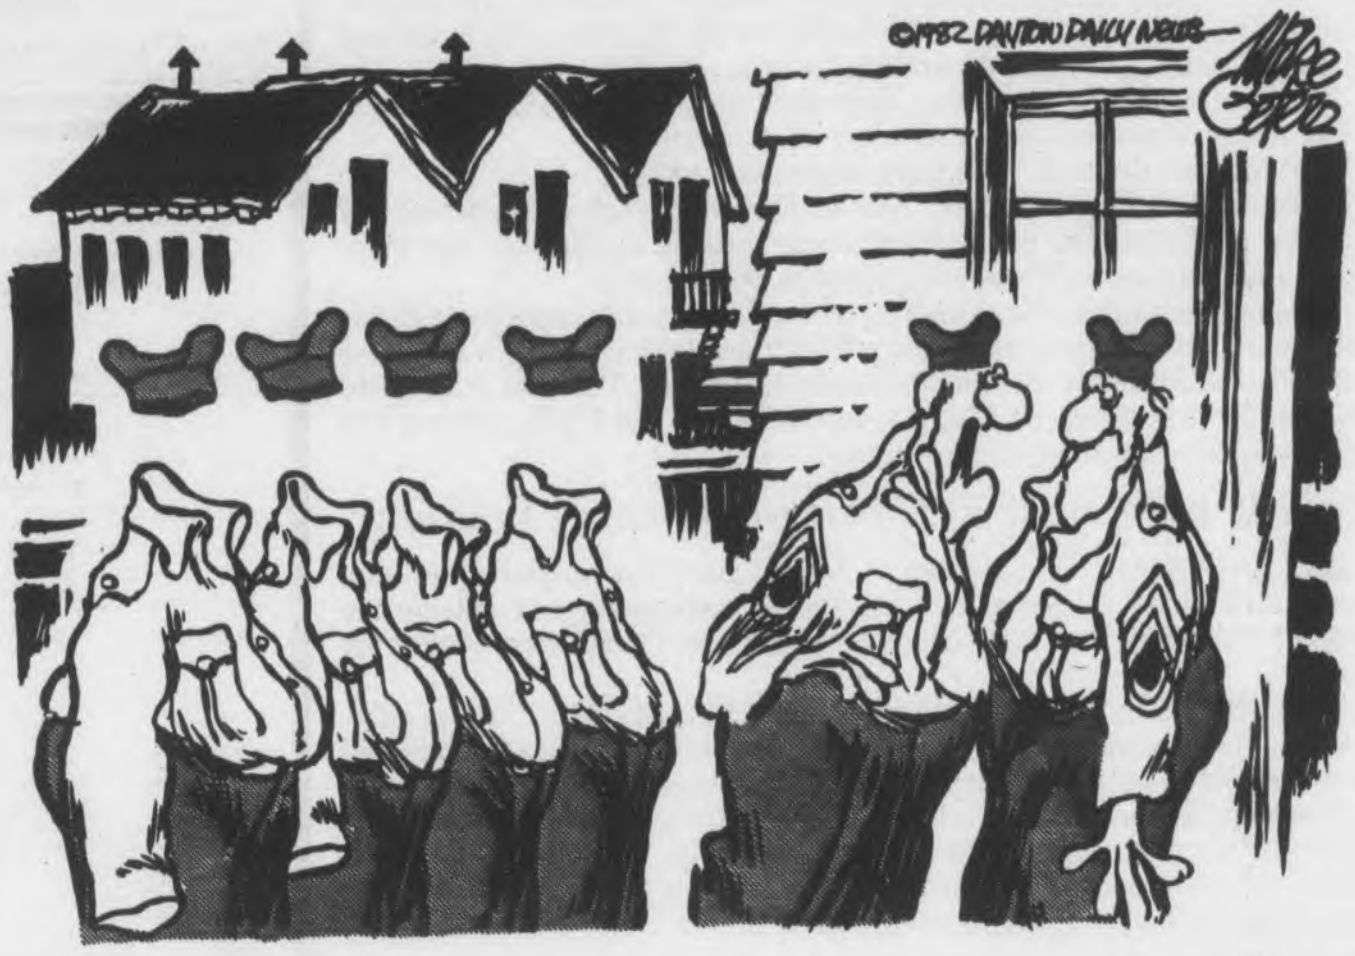
Traffic issues are impractical



A current Senate-passed bill suggesting that motorists be allowed to turn left after stopping at red lights on one-way streets is an example of wasted tax money and time by the Kansas legislation.



Supporters of the bill, as reported by the Associated Press, present gas conservation and smoother traffic flow as reasons for its installation. If passed the bill would create confusing inconsistencies between many towns and cities because it would not be mandatory.

One-way streets, unless located in smaller communities, are limited in number. Even fewer have traffic lights located on them. In Manhattan, for example, few one-way streets have stop signs at intersections, let alone traffic lights.

Conservation efforts should be applauded but they must also be practical and applicable. This legislative position only presents an opportunity for increased traffic accidents.

The closing of a museum

The house stood as it always had, a sturdy two-story structure in the traditional farm house style, though it had undergone a few modern improvements. A hundred years ago they did not build houses with cement porch slabs, fabricated siding and indoor bathrooms.

The urge to go inside and lounge in front of the TV was an automatic reaction. After all, twenty years of habit is hard to break. The TV was still there, and so was most of the furniture. But the newly created nooks and crannies, big enough for mice and other vermin to crawl in through, made me leery of staying inside for very long.

You could see into my parents' bedroom downstairs by looking down along the wall of my sister's room upstairs. It was surprising to see the light green of their carpet and walls when it didn't belong there — it was out of place, an intrusion on the blue surroundings of her room.

You could see the sky by carefully looking through the gap between the kitchen walls and its roof. It was hard to imagine having baked chocolate chip cookies there, something we must have done countless times before. In fact, the entire house seemed alien — the warmth was gone. It was an empty shell, not my home. Home was packed away in boxes stored in the barn.

A RETURN HOME is usually a relief — a return to familiar habits, timeless objects and relaxed lifestyles. You can forget about tests, grades and problems at work at least for the time you are surrounded by home. The real world, in effect, simply disappears. You immerse yourself in a totally different, but familiar world. You talk about Aunt Harriet, how the wheat's doing this year or which friend is currently in the process of getting divorced — anything but how your classes are going, how the job hunt is going or how things are going at work. Those worries are simply left in your other, collegiate, world (your alter ego, so to speak).

Home is where the proverbial heart lies. It is where we store all those parts of ourselves (mental, physical and otherwise) that we may want to keep, but may not want to keep with us. (I'll always treasure the trophy I got in the eighth grade for winning second place in the county spelling bee, but to tell the truth, I didn't particularly want to cart it to Manhattan. Ditto for the stuffed pink poodle, junior high promotion certificate, and high school 'memory' book.)

THE EXPLOSION OF our furnace had made enough gaps in the house to make it uninhabitable (besides the fact that it was very cold). My brother and sister moved into our camper, and my parents borrowed my grandmother's camper to live in temporarily. Camping out in your front yard is similar to snow in the wintertime — it's fun, for about a day.

But the crowded quarters weren't necessarily the worst part of the experience. I could no longer spend the time catching up on the soaps, sewing or cooking (only the barest of supplies had been moved to the camper). The usual routine of a visit home had been destroyed.

Home is supposed to be waiting, remaining the same for each visit. It lends a certain continuity to our lives. It is something you can count on when everything else is failing you.

But when the living-museum has been destroyed, it is very irritating to have to re-adjust old habits. As you drive down the black-top road you know by heart, your memorized driving pattern is thrown off by a newly discovered pothole. Likewise, your living pattern at home is destroyed by the absence of a certain book in a certain bookshelf in a certain spot in a certain room. Parents sometimes just don't realize they shouldn't grow or change your home without you there to supervise. It just isn't fair.

Photographers screen local Playboy hopefuls

There were no pictorial props to set a scene — no hot lights, fans or make-up artists.

After completing an application and posing for a Polaroid camera identification shot, the K-State Playboy hopefuls were finished.

From the applications and pictures, approximately 12 women will be selected for a second appearance, and six will be chosen to pose in Playboy's September photo feature, "Girls of the Big Eight," Kent VanMeter, assistant project photographer, said.

Playboy has been doing such a publication for six years, however, this is the first time it has ever concentrated on the Big Eight, David Chan, project photographer, said.

The college conference project is Hugh Hefner's "pride and joy," Chan added.

Although Chan's general impression of Midwest women is they're "a little on the hefty side," he admits Playboy is here at the wrong time of year.

"This is a part of the country where it gets very cold," Chan said.

THE WOMEN don't have the opportunity to get the outdoor exercise and sun as they do in areas with warmer climates, he said.

What inspires women to face these critics is as varied as the women themselves.

"People come not because of me, but because it's Playboy," Chan said. "It's a magic word — open sesame."

The opportunity could "open the door" for the girls to be in a national magazine, he said.

"I always teased my boyfriend that I could be one of those pictures on his wall and I thought this is my chance," Sharon Samuelson, freshman in landscape architecture, said.

After "really looking at the pretty girls (in the magazine) and seeing what they look like without the air brush," Joy Moss, sophomore in journalism and mass communications, decided she was just as good-looking as the girls featured in the magazine.

"It's kind of an ego trip," Moss said. "I don't expect to make it, but I thought it would be fun to do."

Jennifer Longley, sophomore in general, said she was simply curious.

"If you never try, you never know if you'd be good enough to make it," she said.

AS FOR THE categories, nude, semi-nude or clothed, many seemed determined to pose only clothed.

"Three-hundred dollars is not worth it (posing nude)," Moss said. "They'd have to pay me enough money to support me for a few thousand years."

The category doesn't matter to Miriam Montalvo, junior in animal science and industry.

"I don't buy the magazine, but I enjoy looking at the beautiful women. The body is beautiful," she said. "I'll pose in whatever category they think I'm fit for."

The photo feature not only provides Big Eight women with a great opportunity, but it is also good for the community, according to Chan.

"It stimulates the mind whether it is positive or negative response," Chan said.

According to VanMeter, Playboy is looking for "collegiate-looking" women for the photo feature because the Playboy's centerfold material concentrates more on the "particular beauty" of the women.

"You find a different hair style and different style of dress on college campuses than you do in single's bars," VanMeter said.

SOME BIG EIGHT women may be as beautiful as those in Playboy's centerfolds, but th magazine is "capable of creating the illusion they want to," he said.

Chan and VanMeter hesitate to estimate the number of applicants they will review. There are often many applicants who call for an appointment, but some back out, VanMeter said.

Photography for the six selected women will begin Monday, VanMeter said.

Cowboys, cowgirls to ride, race, rope while competing for $14,000 purse

Brahma bull riders and cowgirl barrel racers will be competing in K-State's national intercollegiate rodeo this weekend.

Approximately 250 college students from Kansas and Oklahoma have entered the rodeo and will be competing for prizes totaling more than $14,000.

K-State's men's and women's rodeo teams are included in this competition.

The rodeo will be held in Weber Arena today and Saturday at 8 p.m., and Sunday at 2 p.m.

The club produces a National Intercollegiate Rodeo Association (NIRA) rodeo for several reasons. "To stay in good standing with the association the college or university must put on a rodeo every two years to be able to a have a collegiate rodeo team," Scott Van Pelt, rodeo club president, said.

Another purpose of the rodeo is to promote the sport on the college level, according to Van Pelt.

Highlights of the rodeo include: bareback riding, calf roping, team steer-roping, saddle bronc riding, steer wrestling and bull riding. Women's teams will be competing in barrel racing, breakaway roping, goat tying and team roping.

Each rodeo performance will also feature rodeo clowns Jeff Rutland and Randy Henton. Both are K-State alumni and former rodeo club members. The clowns entertain the crowd and ensure the bull riders' safety.

On Friday night the new K-State rodeo queen will be crowned. Competition for this contest was held earlier in the week and contestants were judged on horsemanship, appearance and personality.

Featured in Sunday's performance are K-State's own calf dressers. The contest is open to all fraternities. Each calf dressing team consists of four members and the team dressing its calf in a pair of long underwear the quickest will win.

The Sunday performance will be recorded and televised at a later date by KTWU channel 11 television.

"This is the first time in the history of the club that it has been televised," Van Pelt said.

The television coverage will enable more people to become aware that college rodeo is a major collegiate sport, Van Pelt said.

K-State's rodeo is the biggest in the region. The rodeo attracts sell-out crowds, Cindy Powell, senior in interior architecture and captain of the women's team, said.

Tickets for the rodeo are available in the Union and from various Manhattan merchants.

Women go outdoors to El Paso, Texas meet

After a disappointing seventh place finish in the Big Eight Indoor Championships, the women's track squad will kick off its 1982 outdoor season this weekend in a dual meet against host University of Texas, El Paso (UTEP).

This is expected to be the toughest meet for the 'Cats this season as they will be competing against one of the better women's track squads in the country.

UTEP placed seventh in the national indoor meet two weeks ago. According to Wildcat Coach Barry Anderson, UTEP has been in the top 10 of the indoor and outdoor championships for the past two years.

"They are primarily a team with five or six ood athletes," Anderson said. "They are a good, solid team. Usually, they're better at national meets than at dual meets.

"But, we know that they're going to be tough against us this weekend," he said.

Anderson pointed out hurdler Kim Turner as UTEP's top performer. Turner, who placed third in the 60-yard hurdles in the indoor championships, is one of the nation's top hurdlers.

Pacing the way for the Wildcats will be long jumper Kelly Wenlock and high jumper Beets Kolarik. Wenlock, who recently jumped 20 feet in the Big Eight indoor championships, will also be competing in the 100 meter and 400 meter races. Kolarik, who has a personal best in the high jump of 5-10, is hoping to improve that mark by jumping a record 6 feet.

"I think she can make it (6 feet)," Anderson said. "But, she (Kolarik) is going to have a lot of competition this weekend. If she wants to make it, she will have to do well in the meet."

Anderson also pointed out shot putter Janice Stuckey ad javelin thrower Peggy Hopkins. Hopkins, who owns the school record in the 60-yard high hurdles with a time of 8.08, will be looking for a better season this year as she will be competing in the javelin event. Last season, she placed sixth in the javelin at the Big Eight Indoor Championships with a throw of 135 feet.

Stuckey, K-State's leading shot putter, is also expecting to better her performance of the previous season. In last year's Big Eight meet, she placed second with a throw of 46-2.

Judging teams ask Senate to defray travel expenses

A bill requesting $4,342 to help fund the agriculture judging teams went through first readings at the Student Senate meeting Thursday.

If the bill passes at next week's meeting, the money will go to the Agriculture College Council, then will be allocated to the 11 judging teams to cover 49.4 percent of the team members' food and lodging costs when traveling to competitions.

Sponsors of the bill are Dave Anderson, junior in agricultural economics, Bill Able, associate professor of animal science and coach of the livestock judging teams, Mike Dikeman, professor of animal science and coach of the meats judging teams, Larry Erpelding, assistant director of resident instruction in agriculture and Dee James, president of Agriculture Student Council and junior in animal science and industry.

The sponsors said this year funds were received from departmental budgets, agribusiness firms, fund raising projects and private donations, as well as from the Ag. College Council.

This money paid team travel expenses to and from competitions and coaches' salaries. Students paid approximately $16,823 out of their own pockets for food, lodging, entry fees and other expenses.

Ag. College Council can fund 50.6 percent of the judging teams' requests for next year's food and lodging. The money requested from senate would cover the rest.

"The College of Ag. turned in $556 (in extra money) last year (at the end of the school year)," said Esther Hagen, finance committee chairman and senior in home economics.

She said part of the money came from one or two of the teams which did not go to competitions they had planned to attend. They didn't realize the money could have been given to other teams, so they gave it back to senate.

The teams feel they deserve the money from senate because they are open to all students at K-State, not just students in the College of Agriculture, James said. He also said the teams represent the University in competition in the same way as the sports teams.

In other senate business, four resolutions were moved and passed special orders calling for commendations to be sent to the K-State men's basketball coach, Jack Hartman, the men's basketball team, the women's basketball team and coach Lynn Hickey and the K-State cheerleaders, pep band and Willie the Wildcat.

Dregs' sound never hits level name suggests

By KENT HERMES
Collegian Reviewer

The dictionary defines dregs (n. pl.) 1. the sediment of a liquid. 2. any waste or worthless residue.

Guitar Player Magazine defines Dregs as "jazz-rock-classical-country-bluegrass."

The Dregs, formerly Dixie Dregs, grew out of the Florida State University music program. Guitarist Steve Morse, bassist Andy West and the others felt restrained by the confines of the mainstream and fusion they heard around them. They decided to create a brand of fusion that brought together various musical styles that would appeal to many tastes. The result was the embryo of a unique musical buffet. A Dregs album would serve a wide variety. Acoustic classical duets, Southern-fried jazz, bluegrass, blinding, grinding passages leaping from classical to jazz weaved with their intense form of rock phrasing.

Review

Morse, the band's omposer-arranger and producer, is probably the most well-rounded guitarist in the business. His genius and the group's individual excellence is obvious from point one. The flawless articulaton of each solo is a treat, but when all are playing Morse's endless runs in unison — perfection.

All of the five previous Dregs albums are completely instrumental efforts. That is why you don't hear them on most of the nation's radio statons. The ho-hum response to their last "Unsung Heroes" was the last straw.

"Industry Standard" is the first Dregs LP to work with vocals. Call it selling out, conforming, creation expansion or a necessity to get some attenton.

Ex-Doobie Patrick Simmons appears on one very tasteful bluesy tune, sounding better than he has in years. Santana's Alex Ligertwood does an excellent job df matching the group's intensity. The Dregs penned this one. It explains why now is th time to sing their message.

The rest of the album is devoted to what they do best. The instrumental pieces are in the Morse tradition with some fresh insights that continue the Dreg's evolution.

Loyal followers might find the newest takes less chances in some ways. Maybe that's what it takes to make the industry standard.

Five acts reach finals

It wasn't a stage in Hollywood or Broadway, but the Catskeller in the Union Thursday night. What happened was a "Laugh Off" sponsored by the Union Program Council's (UPC) Coffeehouse Committee.

The show was made possible by students who performed 10-minute routines before an audience of approximately 100 people. A total of 12 routines were performed by single or duo performers.

The contest employed five judges who based their decisions on four criteria: originality, stage presence, delivery and audience response.

Rob Slusher, junior in architectural engineering and Coffeehouse Committee chairman, said the idea for the laugh off was actually born in November.

"We were in Kansas City watching a group of college musicians and comedians and decided we needed to do something with comedy this year. We wanted to get away from the talent show and try a new idea," Slusher said.

Acts ranged from a spoof on Tarzan to the Rubik's Cube. One did an imitation of Mr. Rogers. Of the 12 acts, five were chosen for the finals to be held April Fools evening.

Stage names of the comedy groups who will be proceeding to the finals were Sham and Robin, Rick and Tom, Traci Holt, Tom Pagan and Kelly Clark. Three of the participants were disqualified for exceeding the time limit.

The finalists will vie for the first-place prize of $100. A second-place finish will net someone $50 and third place will earn $30.

One of the finalists, Traci Holt, senior in psychology, said that performing on stage is a thrill.

"It's scary, but I love to hear people laugh," she said.

Student response will say whether or not video stays

By JULIE MAH
Collegian Reporter

What would happen if celebrities like Eric Idle, Gilda Radner and Mick Jagger were to appear in the K-State Union? Instant pandemonium?

They have appeared and the attention was orderly.

Crowds gathered in the first floor alcove of the Union all week to see the stars on video programs being shown on a "trial basis" by the Unio Program Council (UPC), according to Diane De Forest, president of UPC.

The programs shown this week included "The Rutles — All You Need Is Cash" and "NFL Football Follies."

The popularity of the programs will be determined by evaluation forms, DeForest said.

"It's popular on the national scale," she said. "But we want to determine whether we want to go into it now."

ACCORDING TO Mike Hatch, the Union Program Director, the arrival of videotapes at K-State has been long forthcoming.

"The Midwest is a little behind in terms of video," he said. "It is my understanding that not any of the schools in the Big Eight have video programming. We're with the beginning of it all."

The programs aren't provided for in the present budget, DeForest said.

"It's from money that we scraped together," she said. "It would be a service-type program. We wouldn't be making any money on it."

A SEPARATE COMMITTEE might be formed solely devoted to video programs, DeForest said.

"Maybe we'll make it a project of UPC leadership," she said. "Every committee would have a hand in it. Or eventually, I imagine, we would have to form a committee."

The programs are going to be shown for three more weeks before being moved to the Browsing Library in the Union.

"We want to have some feedback on where to show them," DeForest said. "That's why we're moving it around."

Other programs to be presented include "Harry Chapin In Concert," "Robin Williams — Off the Wall," "Second City TV — Baretta's Bird" and "Warner Brothers Concerts."

The programs run continuously Monday through Friday, 9 a.m. to 4 p.m.

THE VIDEOTAPES WERE acquired through two distributors, Hatch said.

"One is the Video Tape News Network (VTN) in NEW York," he said. "The other is Films Incorporated in Chicago."

Whether video programming will remain at K-State is uncertain.

"So far, there has been a pretty good response. But interest might drop off because the newness of it will wear off," he said. "It's a pretty expensive kind of programming."

According to Hatch, the total equipment rental will be $400. The first two weeks of videotapes were $200, he said.

The other two weeks of videotapes were free, he said.

Comments from students indicate a positive response.

"It's funny. I like it," Larry Budenosky, junior in construction science, said.

"I really enjoy it," Dan Willits, senior in electronic engineering technology, said. "It's a nice break from classes. It's pretty unique, not something you can find on TV."

Myriad of acts set to perform for Open House

K-State is flinging wide its doors for Open House this weekend. More than 20,000 people are expected to attend Open House, which is scheduled to begin Friday night. Along with the tours, exhibits and speeches for high school students and parents, there will be many entertainment festivities.

Some of the entertainment highlights of the weekend have been picked out for the discerning K-State student and visitor. They are scattered all over campus, from the Physics Quintet in Cardwell to the Lunchbag Theater in the Purple Masque Theatre in West Stadium. Performed mostly by K-State students, most of them are free.

JEFF—THANKS for always being there when I need you and also for putting up with me. I want you to know I'll always be here if you need me. You're a great friend and you'll always be someone "special" to me! Love, Darc (125)

K.G.—WHAT happens when your no. 1 Nimrod meets with his best buddy Dingleberry and they start rapping about his favorite Goofball? Well, 1st they remember playing crazy eight, until it was late, without even a kiss goodnight for his date. Then there was Crazy Climber at Kites with nachos and a pitcher or two always in sight. Who could forget about cuddling under the stars at Tuttle, with the Muskrats trying to break up the huddle. Off to the zoo and even the powder _____ too, for the study breaks were great, be them early or late. One Kamie must be drank, for poor Scott who must be thanked, or is it possibly that Kathy should just be spanked? But what they remember most, is to stand up and give a toast, to the fun that has just begun, and of course to Kathy. Happy 21. Love, B.K. (125)

Faculty's predictions show bright future for agriculture

By TIM MORSE
Collegian Reporter

Good fortunes await students after some difficulties in the economy, land and agricultural industries are overcome.

"Ag — A Look Ahead" was the topic of an Ag Faculty Panel address Thursday when faculty from each College of Agriculture department addressed a session held in Throckmorton Hall in conjunction with Ag Week activities.

Mary Albrecht, assistant professor of horticulture, led the discussion emphasizing the continued need for extension and research, marketing and consumer education.

Albrecht spoke of a time when horticulture was a more fortunate area not as hindered by economic slumps.

"Back during the Depression of the 1930s, horticulture was one that actually saw growth," she said. People spent more time improving their area because of the lack of money and the need for aesthetic appreciation and food, Albrecht said.

ALBRECHT SAID the horticulture industry is turning out a very high quality product and that the future holds improvements.

She spoke of passive solar energy to accommodate lighting and heating greenhouses and agricultural waste as an alternative use for energy. Albrecht said plants are being improved. More heat, disease and drought tolerance developments will push the industry toward more efficiency, she said.

David Ames, professor of animal science, spoke of animal agriculture and reminded the students of the importance of grain science and agronomy to the industry.

"Livestock is the biggest industry in this state. Second is the packing industry. We have to rely on a lot of people to have the feed available, the resources and the labor, and the know-how to make the industries number one and land, two," Ames said. "We are a big industry, but we do have some problems to face in the future," he added.

"We have the problem in our industry of profitability right now... but with that we also have some very positive aspects of the animal industry," Ames said. The meat industry supplies three-fourths of the human protein intake, he added.

The present and future use of technology, a business-like attitude toward agriculture and efficiency are necessary for the future of agriculture, Ames said.

FEED, MILLING AND BAKING students have an advantage when going into the job market, Dale Eustace, professor of grain science, said.

"It's a funny thing. When you eat a hamburger or a hot dog you always eat the bread around the outside," Eustace said, stressing the importance of the grain sciences.

Gerry Posler, professor of agonomy, emphasized land conservation.

"First of all we need to do a better job conserving our soil," he said. Loss of prime farm land because of erosion, and urban sprawl are to be sadly looked upon, Posler said. Increased conservation practices will save energy and the land, he said.

The present economic situation is rough, Brian Schurle, assistant professor of economics, said.

"We're headed for some real rough times," Schurle said.

The sluggish demand on foreign and domestic trade, low income, high interest rates, unemployment and inflation are to be blamed for our current troubles, he said.

are more concerned with the danger in their countries, according to Codrignani, and they fear if a nuclear war happens Europe will be the battleground.

Although the anti-nuke movement in the United States is later, Codrignani said she hopes it will be better than the European movement. Because of its slow start in the United States "maybe the conscience will be stronger and deeper if a gradual approach is taken.

"The world is in a crucial moment — we can produce something terrible and we are also able to produce a change for the better," Codrignani said. "The American people are listening to themselves and to their conciousness. That is very important because listening to the European movement would be a copy. Their contribution should be original and give an answer to us (the Europeans)," she said.

Codrignani gave some advice on starting a movement based on her experience in Italy. Informing people about what nuclear war really means and the real danger involved is important, she explained.

The thought of nuclear war should instill fear, but we "must not quit with fear — react and do something," Condrignani said.

A feeling of helplessness against the flow of government action is a problem with this generation, but people should rely on democracy and the voice of the people, she said.

Dave Hursh, instructor in education and organizer of The Other Manhattan Project, said he believes Americans are on the verge of a major movement.

"There is a lot of interest in what we're doing," he said.

THE QUEST FOR IDENTITY

K-STATE RISES ABOVE 'SCHIZOPHRENIA'

After a century-long quest, K-State intertwines 'mechanical' and 'classical' education.

Story by Leah Ann Cook
Photos by Scott Williams

It began more than 120 years ago as a small preparatory school in a raw frontier setting. Time brought with it change, growing pains and even moments of "schizophrenia."

Through the school's historical evolution as a major land-grant institution, Kansas State University experienced what some have labeled a "quest for identity". . .a century-long search for a character as a "real" university.

In this search, K-State has "risen above its schizophrenia," according to James C. Carey, former K-State history professor, in his book entitled Kansas State University, The Quest for Identity. K-State has been on the road to achieving and broadening its desired image — but it's taken time.

The University's unique heritage extends as far back as 1855 when a small group of settlers had a dream of establishing a college in the township of Manhattan. Bluemont Central College — a three-story building — was founded in 1857 when Congress approved a 100-acre donation of public land to the school.

In 1862, the Morrill Act, signed by President Abraham incoln, provided for the donation of public lands to states and territories to establish agricultural colleges. Bluemont College, with only 52 students, became the land-grant institution for Kansas in 1863 and eventually bore the name of Kansas State Agricultural College.

According to Carey, bitter debates took place among leaders of the college over the struggle "to achieve a balance between vocational and technical training on the one hand, and education that was more general, liberal and theoretical in nature on the other. . .various factions in the state fought to shape the college in the image they preferred."

Kansas State became recognized as "the center for some of the most distinguished agricultural research in the nation," Carey said. "Yet this emphasis resulted in what some called a 'trade school syndrome.'"

Duane Acker, who has been the president of K-State since 1975, said he believes Carey's book captures a characteristic of the University that was manifested in the 1960s and early 1970s. . .a characteristic of high frustration.

"It was difficult for people on the faculty to think of themselves as, 'We are Kansas State and this is the way we're going to function because we believe it's right,'" Acker said. "There was a tendency instead to say, 'How are they (other universities) doing it? How do they think we are doing? Why can't we do it like they do it?' There was a preoccupation with either other universities in this geographic region or other types of universities on the part of some disciplines."

K-State is probably more highly respected by those outside of Kansas and by those in other universities than it might be by even Kansans themselves, according to Acker.

"We feel a little self-conscious. We assume that the ivy league schools or the more highly financed universities might have something that we don't have," Acker said.

"I hope that during the '80s, Kansas State will somehow, as an institution, rise up to the posture where it will proclaim itself to be, 'We are Kansas State; we are unique; this is our mission; we are comfortable and happy with it; this is what we want to be.'"

Owen Koeppe

What exactly is K-State's "mission?" As a land-grant university, K-State's purpose or mission is three-fold, according to Acker and University Provost Owen Koeppe. The University is responsible for advancing in basic and applied research, providing general instruction at both the undergraduate and graduate level, and conducting cooperative extension education programs.

"A land-grant institution has a far greater mission in this area (extension) than other institutions," Koeppe said. "All three of these missions are the responsibility of all the colleges."

K-State is generally perceived by the public as an outstanding land-grant university, carrying out its specific mission, according to John Carlin, Kansas governor and 1962 K-State graduate.

"It's a university that's well-run and well-respected — that centers on its land-grant responsibility," Carlin said. "It's agriculture that makes K-State unique and known literally around the world. But that's not downgrading the other aspects of the university. It's an outstanding institution. It's a university in the total sense. I think it's seen as a balanced university."

This image as a "balanced" university has become a reality just in the past decade. K-State has come, over the years, to recognize the importance of classical and liberal education — in addition to those traditional branches of learning related to agriculture and the mechanical and industrial arts — and has moved away from the strict notions of just being a "trade school," according to Carey's book. K-State has "widened its perception of education, set a broader goal and developed the character of a real university," Carey said.

When Acker became president of the University, he believed K-State was closer to a feeling of identity than in the early 1960s.

"And I believe that in 1982 we are closer yet," Acker said. He sees the character of K-State as being solid and stable, with a feeling of having its "feet on the ground and head in the clouds."

Koeppe said he doesn't sense among students or faculty an institution that has no feeling of "what it is or where it's going. I think we know we are not just a professional school of agriculture. . ." he said. "We have developed respectable programs — some strong ones — in areas of arts, humanities and social sciences. I think we know we can't be outstanding in everything, but we have the breadth that I think is necessary and appropriate for a 'real' university. We still have a ways to go in some of these fields. . .and being realistic, we're not going to excell in all of them, but I believe we must strive to improve and at least maintain respectable programs in these areas."

One of K-State's roles, according to Acker, is to be the bridge between mechanical and classical education — to be the kind of institution "that respects both and utilizes the good things of both to develop young people."

OPEN HOUSE FEVER

State-wide round-up bursts with pride; unites college to college, K-State to Kansas.

Story by Margot Jones

Any engineer will tell you — it all began with St. Patrick. The green-clad patron saint of engineers did more than drive the snakes out of Ireland. Indeed, his influence extends beyond the shores of the Atlantic to Manhattan in the form of what we know as "Rendezvous with KSU."

As the story goes, the roots of the All-University Open House may go back to March 16, 1903. It was the kind of day you dream about, when the sun saps the energy of even the most serious. Because it was so close to St. Patrick's Day, University of Missouri engineering students took advantage of the day to honor their patron saint. To make it "official", they devised a proclamation.

The proclamation: "It is the sacred duty of each and every engineer to observe in a manner most fitting, the glorious memory of our most beloved disciple, and to refrain from all school duties..." The day dedicated to the memory of St. Patrick has become a major event for 25,000 visitors and 2,500 K-Staters and Manhattanites involved in Open House. The little guy can rest easy in his grave, confident that his name evokes more than a pinch.

Open House has grown up with K-State. It's no longer only an event for the College of Engineering; four years ago it was expanded to include the entire university.

It began as a "Field Day" in 1919 and, within a year, the first engineering exhibit was displayed during Farm and Home Week. The agricultural engineering float reflected the signs of the times. Called "Old Dobbin's Dream," it depicted visions of an old horse watching the change to power machinery.

Engineering Open House was formalized in 1929. St. Pat's Prom, with a St. Pat and St. Patricia chosen as royalty, was a feature that year. Since then, the open house tradition has continued — only World War II could stop it and then, only for two years.

According to Pat Bosco, assistant vice president for student affairs, college exhibitions and open houses were handled individually before their coordination into a single event.

Five years ago, the University Public Relations Council sought to integrate each departmental show and give air to those departments that didn't have an exhibition.

Planning and preparation begin with and revolve around the 50-member All-University Open House Council, representing students, faculty and administration. The group is rounded off with members from the Manhattan Chamber of Commerce, the K-State Union and the Alumni Association.

"Here we have the total involvement and the community chipping in...that makes it unique," Bosco said.

Publicity is handled through K-State's Office of Information. Three representatives from each college, a total of 24 students, were sent to radio and television stations throughout Kansas to promote "Rendezvous."

"Faculty and students spend many hours working on the project to show the citizens of Kansas why they are so proud of the educational opportunities available at this University," Bosco said.

K-State President Duane Acker said, "It's an opportunity for prospective students to see the University, but it's also an opportunity for parents and friends and family of our current students to see the University. And I think, thirdly, it's an opportunity for the current students and faculty to say, 'Hey, this is what we're doing and we're proud of it.' I think that's an important purpose."

The student coordinators from each college give a lot of reasons for "Open House fever."

"For some students, it's a matter of pride," said Lisa Hoffmaster, senior in industrial engineering and student coordinator for the College of Engineering.

And one thing they'll all tell you is summed up in the words of Susan Blush, senior in fashion marketing and student coordinator for the College of Home Economics.

"It's our chance to show off," she said. "Just opening the front door that morning...seeing all the people come in...I just get real excited," Blush said.

"It's just like a performance," said Marcy Hoover, sophomore in general and student coordinator for the College of Arts and Sciences. "It's definitely going to be the climax of all the work..."

"Watching people's reactions" motivates enthusiasm for Jenny Hinde, junior in vet med and the college's student coordinator.

"They're really amazed at the booths. It's really neat when you see in their eyes, 'Wow, that's really something,'" she said.

Bosco said many Open House visitors hear about the event through word-of-mouth from K-State students. According to an evaluation survey based on a random sampling of people who attended the 1981 Open House, 80 out of 191 respondents said they heard about it through K-Staters.

"They're the ones who say, 'Hey, come on up to Open House,' Bosco said. Of all the respondents, the survey pointed out that 51 percent came with family members.

"That indicates to us we're getting a carload of people coming to campus...maybe even Grandma's coming," Bosco said.

However, there's more to Open House than free balloons and doughnuts.

"It's a good way for the students to see things they don't normally see," Hoffmaster, engineering coordinator, said. Through Open House, she added, freshmen and sophomores can see beyond their basic core classes and juniors and seniors can apply what they're learning.

High school seniors and current students will each get something different from the whole production. Hinde, from vet med, pointed out that while prospective students are trying to get an idea about what classes to take, pre-vet students are "looking at what it's going to be like once they get into (vet) school."

"We feel like we're keeping our goal of keeping students on campus," Bosco said.

Many open house celebrations have passed since the 1903 proclamation. It's not that simple anymore.

"When you get to see how the whole college works together, how the whole university pulls together," it makes it all worth the effort for Wanda Akin, senior in elementary education and student coordinator for the College of Education.

"It's a big project, but it's well worth it," said Tim Ohlde, sophomore in agricultural education and student coordinator for the College of Agriculture.

"And we have so much fun with it," Blush, from home ec, said.

According to Ross, community relations director, "The only problem we haven't solved is the weather."

STUDENTS SEEK IDENTITY

End benefits in quest for independence makes the struggle worth the growing pains.

Story by Suzanne Crumrine

It came into its own in the early seventies with the dawning of the "me" decade — the search for identity became an individual priority. By the end of the decade, it had bloomed into an unintentional orgy of narcissism. While some of the self-adulation seems to have died out of the search for independent identity today, the quest has certainly not come to a close with the advent of the eighties.

The search for an independent self can be a particularly important mission for the college student. This is largely due to the fact that the collegiate crowd, for the most part, is that peculiar group living in limbo somewhere between the security of financial and emotional support from parents and the looming of a future that demands responsibility as much as it offers independence. David Bowie summed the situation up well in a song called "Young Americans": "Gee my life's a funny thing. Am I still too young?"

According to Margaret Grayden, a clinical social worker at Lafene's Mental Health Clinic, the struggle to achieve independence and self-direction — "autonomy" as she termed it — is the "biggest developmental college task."

"It involves a kind of painful process of separation from family," Grayden said.

For the traditional student, the process begins as he waves a final goodbye to the back bumper of the retreating family vehicle and makes a rather bewildered path into his new living quarters to decide which half of a shared room offers the greatest amenities.

The difficulties associated with sharing a room — whether with a friend or an unknown — vary from person to person, Grayden said, "depending on what one is used to." The sources of strife, though, are unlimited. They can range from minor disagreements of musical taste — you like Barry Manilow, she idolizes the B-52's — to major battles arising from the surprise discovery that the same sot of a girl who spilled beer on your Comp I paper is now passed out on the upper bunk with your roommate. More than a few chagrined students have discovered that the old saw passed on by generations of older siblings is true — "good friends don't make good roommates."

> "You don't have to walk into the University and plug yourself into engineering and stay on that track."

Grayden named five stages the student encounters in a normal developmental process ending in autonomy.

The first stage, she said, is simply that of adjusting to life away from home. For many freshmen, this means learning to assemble a sweeper hose, attempting to stretch a mere $100 of spending money over the remaining three months of the semester and judging when it's time to clean the fishbowl (when your goldfish starts to write four-letter obscenities in the algae).

The second stage, according to Grayden, is for the student to take upon himself the responsibility for his own academic achievement. At this point, it becomes especially important to define a strong set of priorities — possibly the most effective deterrent to becoming part of a bar-stool society. The idea of "meeting your friends" to grab a stein to empty and smuggle home can be immensely more attractive than studying for a 7:30 quiz in oral communications.

On top of this is the problem of poor health that typically accompanies the unbalanced schedules and erratic habits of the college community.

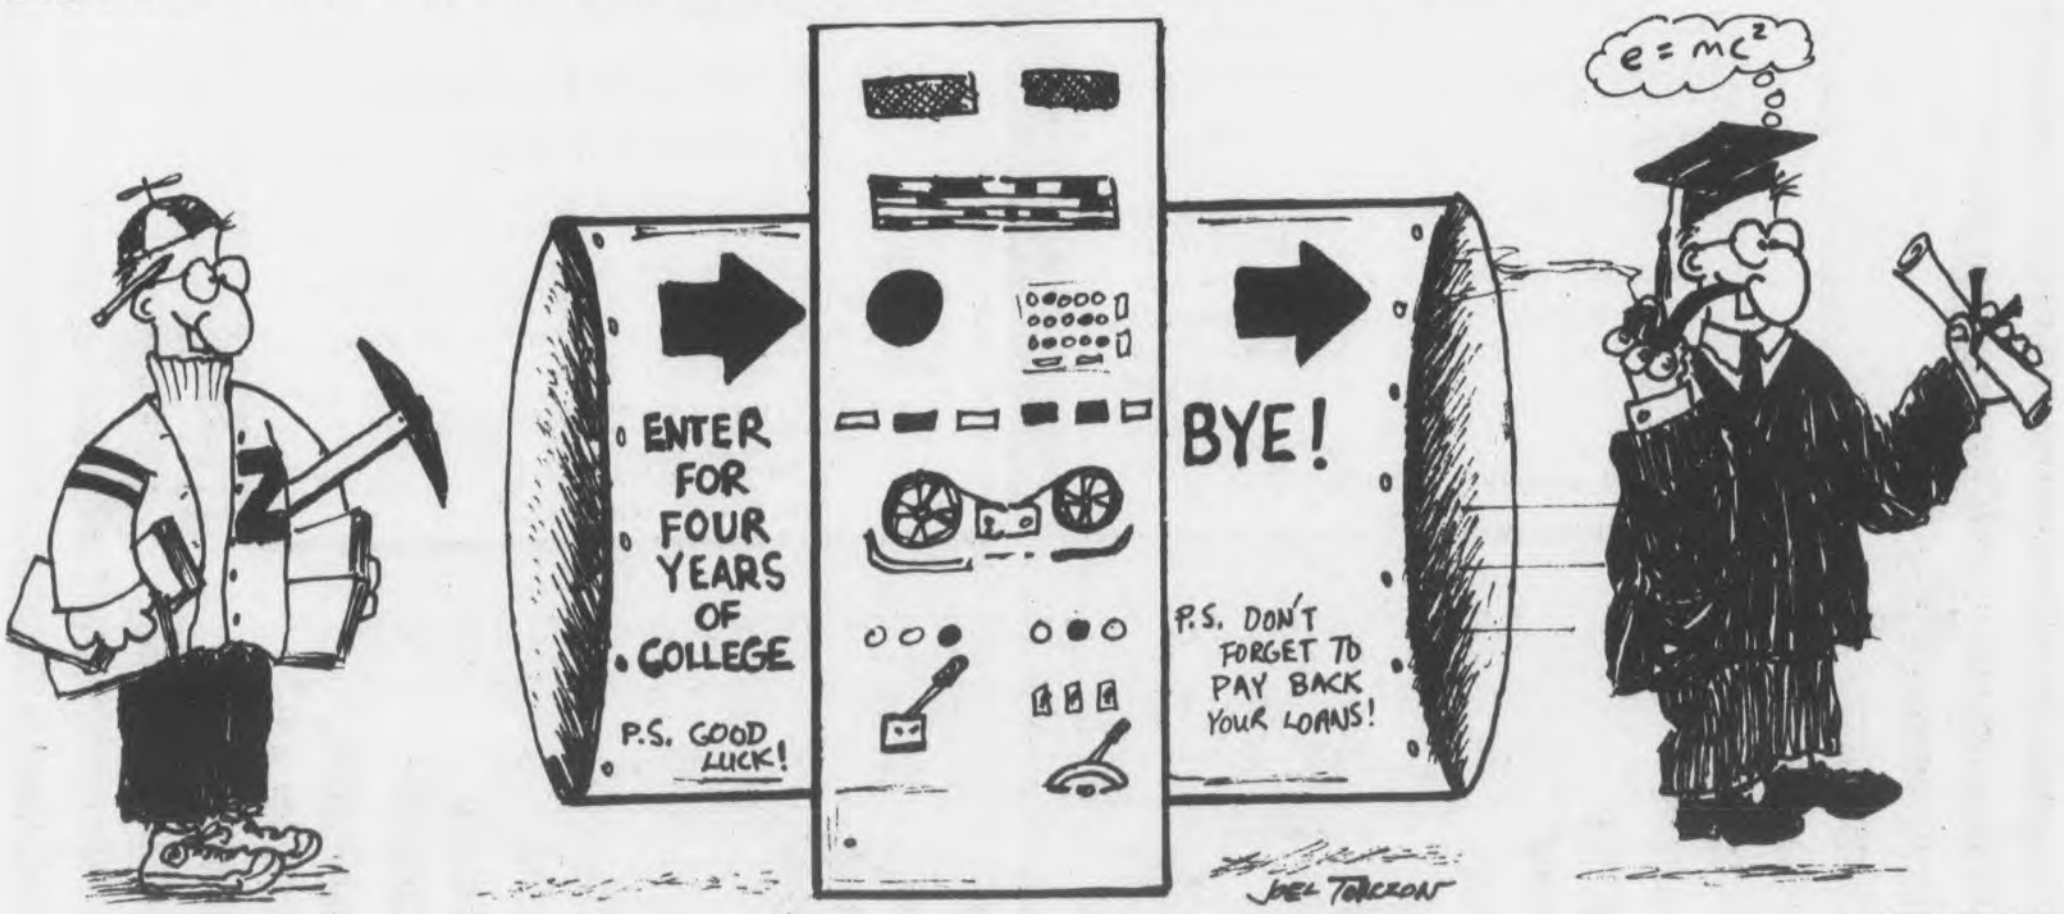
"Another big one we're aware of here is people not being responsible for their own health," Grayden said.

Considering the often fast-paced lives of many students, it's not hard to understand that last-minute cramming for tests isn't all that's feverish. Rounds of late partying, early classes, occasional all-night projects and daily contact with numbers of germ-bearing peers can all contribute to a continual chipping at a student's resistance. What's more, there isn't anyone else around with the time to remind you to eat your veggies and button up your overcoat.

Grayden added that another important and often overlooked aspect of health is the student's mental well being. Coping with the pressures of simply existing in a college atmosphere can be a special burden for students, who have not only their own goals and expectations to live up to, but feel they must fulfill the expectations of others, too.

Lacking the know-how or simply failing to come to terms with an abundance of demands can have a variety of sad effects on a student, including anxiety, depression, sleeplessness, loss of appetite, eating disorders such as anorexia, or on the other hand, "just plain gorging," said Grayden.

According to Grayden, many students — especially underclassmen — are hesitant to seek professional help in dealing with personal problems.



"A lot of students feel they have to be crazy to seek help," she said, adding that "in the struggle to be growing up, you don't want to go see an adult about your problems."

Grayden said the next stage for many students was finding a satisfactory curriculum.

"You don't have to walk into the University and plug yourself into engineering and stay on that track," she said.

For some students this can mean a trial-and-error, elimination process that can cause extra years of mental anguish to parents anxiously watching a steadily declining bank balance. It also means that students don't really have to spend the rest of their working years in a business suit they'd gladly trade for a lab coat.

Finally, there is stage five: "The ultimate decision is that you can make decisions and establish values that are relevant and meaningful," Grayden said. She added that at this stage it was important to realize that although the values you choose may not reflect those of your parents, you do possess the powers required to reconcile those differences. And having come this far, who would doubt that?

K-STATE INGENUITY

Innovative minds are meeting the challenges of the future and seeking solutions to world-wide questions.

Story by Kim Wolfe

Dept. of Engineering

The respiratory gases of this calf are tested using lung dysfunction detection equipment by Anthony Kiorpes of the College of Veterinary Medicine and Richard R. Gallagher of the department of electrical engineering.

Kansas: the breadbasket of America. Abundant with food and fuel resources.

People are another of the state's valuable assets. Concerned, questioning and creative, they see the problems facing the world and do their part to share the richness and improve the future.

K-State has its own share of people dedicated to learning. This dedication extends through all areas of science and technology, helping people in an infinite variety of ways. Many efforts are one-of-a-kind projects that other researchers around the world watch with interest.

The Anti-Cancer Drug Laboratory at K-State is one of these projects. Terry C. Johnson, director of the Division of Biology and an active supporter of the lab, said that there is nothing like it in the Midwest.

Chemical agents used in treating cancer, under the collective title of chemotherapy, are extremely toxic to normal as well as cancerous cells, Johnson said. The side effects caused by the use of such chemicals are often harsh, debilitating to patients already weakened by cancer.

The goal of the lab is to develop less toxic forms of chemotherapy without losing effectiveness, according to Johnson. Another part of the lab research is to determine exactly why and how these chemicals combat cancer. Little is known about the reasons behind the success of most cancer treatments and more knowledge in this area will facilitate development of new treatments, Johnson said.

Fall of 1982 is the projected time for the lab to begin functioning, he said. Facilities in Ackert Hall have been devoted to the project by the Division of Biology. Approximately half of the $250,000 needed to start the lab has been acquired from both private and corporate sources, according to Johnson. The Cancer Research and Education Advisory Council composed of 14 members representing such interests as physicians, teachers, scientists and business people have worked with the Division and the KSU Foundation to raise funds and organize the project.

"We still have monies to raise, but we have enough to have a green light," Johnson said.

Twenty-five scientists from departments across campus have committed themselves to help with the lab. A total of about 80 people will be involved, including students. The lab will be both a research and an educational facility, according to Johnson.

"That's almost unheard of — to have 25 people (scientists) working toward this goal. It's a focus of everybody's attention," Johnson said. "What a marvelous opportunity for students to interact with these scientists."

Another health-related research project at K-State may provide an opportunity for greater knowledge about lung disease.

The combined efforts of Richard R. Gallagher, associate professor of electrical engineering, and Anthony Kiorpes, instructor of anatomy and physiology in the College of Veterinary Medicine, have been working on a project that may have a significant effect on the understanding of lung disease. Tested on animals, the multi-phased research may someday shed some light on the problem of human lung disease.

An impedance pneumography system being developed by Gallagher may be used to detect and evaluate abnormalities in the lungs of calves and goats. This system uses a specially designed electrode system which can focus and detect variations in deep tissue. Normal lungs were compared to diseased lungs in order to establish data for the testing of the system and the effects of certain degenerative lung ailments.

> "That's almost unheard of — to have 25 people working toward this goal. It's a focus of everybody's attention."

One diseased testing condition is the effect of paraquat, a herbicide that produces a condition Kiorpes called "paraquat lung." The condition results in a high water to air ratio in the lung, he said. The other condition induced in the test animals was an acute pulmonary emphsema that causes a high air to water ratio.

"Tests like the ones we've been developing will go further in determining whether irreversible damage has been done to diseased lungs," Kiorpes said. "Respiratory disease is the most common disease of food animals and a deviatation disease of horses, especially athletic ones."

He said that future developments will probably enable veterinarians to determine chances of recovery from respiratory disease with more accuracy than they have been able to do in the past.

The work has biomedical significance, Kiorpes said, as it has provided an animal model with which to study the problem of emphysema — a critical human problem.

Another aspect of research at K-State is developing farming potential.

The Wheat State, Kansas, will owe 41 percent of its 1982 wheat crop to the efforts, in part, of E.G. Heyne, professor of agronomy. Heyne had a major role in the development of Newton wheat, the variety is planted on almost six million acres of Kansas farmland.

Work on Newton wheat started in 1967, Heyne said. It wasn't until 10 years later that Newton was distributed to farmers. In recent years its growth in popularity has been rapid.

Ten generations of wheat are typically required to develop winter wheat variety, Heyne said. Each generation needs nine months of growth. This means about ten years of genetic breeding. Most advances are small, according to Heyne.

Advantages offered by Newton wheat include high yield per acre, suitable maturing time for Kansas' climate and a resistance to a virus that is present in two million acres of land in the state, according to Heyne.

He does not see this popularity as permanent, however.

"If we're doing our job, we'll replace it. You can't sit still," he said. "Hopefully, we'll have something better — it (Newton wheat) may be out of the picture in ten years."

The export of manufactured and agricultural products is a vital source of income for the United States and Kansas in particular, with its profuse resources. How to market these products successfully to the rest of the world is an important part of the economy, both now and for the future.

The International Trade Institute (ITI) was created in 1980 by the Kansas Legislature to help regional businesses participate in world trade. Raymond J. Coleman, professor of marketing and director of ITI, said that four areas will eventually be covered by ITI programs: research, education, service and communication.

"Most of our effort so far has been in the service area because it's self-sustaining," Coleman said. "Hopefully we'll get a master's degree in international trade within the next few years."

The real heart of the project will be research. It will be a "think tank" dealing with present and future problems of international trade that affects industry in the central United States, according to Coleman.

ITI also assists businesses in making contact and marketing to international interests.

"We think one of the major contributions will be the development of an information station and formulation of alternative policies affecting business and agriculture," Coleman said.

"We're very dependent on international markets to generate income for the state of Kansas. The world marketplace is becoming more and more complex. Segments are being controlled more and more. We have no free market because we haven't had a center to control resources," he said.

The International Trade Council of Kansas, Inc., serves as an advisory board and provides partial funding for ITI. Limited funding is supplied by the state.

The energy crisis is a subject of great concern on campus and of a number of research projects. One such project concerned with energy is the fluid-bed gasification process, according to Walter P. Walawender, associate professor of chemical engineering.

The process, which utilizes biomass waste materials to produce fuel, gas and chemical feedstocks used to make gases like methanol and ammonia, has been developed and tested at K-State for several years.

The "gasifier" is a cylindrical vessel containing solid particles, primarily sand, mixed with a portion of limestone. In the fluid-bed gasification process, wastes are mixed with these particles, Walawender said. A gas stream is passed through at a high velocity, creating a bubbling similar to boiling water. Rapid heating and attainment of a uniform temperature are used to maximize gas yielded. The products of gasification are gas, oil-like substances and char (a form of activated carbon), he said.

Sewage, grain dust, tire rubber, feedlot manure and coal mixed with manure are some of the wastes used in the research, Walawender said.

Tires, for example, yield a quality gas through the process and even more valuable, oil and char. The benefit is two-fold: besides the energy obtained, the use of such waste products solves what is a serious disposal problem for many cities, Walawender said.

Another area of application is the use of residues from row crops grown with irrigation. Corn stalks, for instance, may be used to produce a fuel gas to operate irrigation apparatus,

> "The world marketplace is becoming more and more complex. Segments are being controlled more and more."

completing a cycle using wastes profitably, he said.

Another area of research at K-State related to energy crisis is that involving thermal qualities of clothing.

Through collective efforts by the department of clothing, textiles and interior design, the College of Engineering and the Institute for Environmental research, K-State has become a leader in this area of study.

Deanna Munson, assistant professor of clothing, textiles and interior design, said the thermal comfort research conducted over the recent years is one of the most renowned in the nation. Indoor clothing is the main emphasis, as well as testing the warmth of such items as ski jackets and seeping bags, she said. A third area of research involves protective clothing for workers in high heat areas, such as firefighters' uniforms. An important part of the thermal research has centered around a copper mannequin wired to measure the thermal comfort zone of clothing. The mannequin is one of only two in the United States; the other is located at the Army Quartermaster Corps in Natick, Mass., and is used to develop clothing for extreme hot and cold temperatures, Munson said.

The facilities at the Institute for Environmental Research have allowed researchers to study human factors involved in thermal comfort as well. Test subjects can be put in environmentally-controlled rooms and their comfort under specific conditions is analyzed.

Recent work by Elizabeth McCullough, assistant professor of clothing, textiles and interior design, has focused on the design of clothing as it relates to warmth.

"Designers have never thought in that respect before," Munson said. "Now we're living in cooler temperatures and letting our clothing protect us."

Computers are becoming more common in all parts of modern life. School systems are no exception, according to Jackson A. Byars, assistant professor of curriculum and instruction.

Byars is involved in a program through Continuing Education educating teachers around Kansas about computers. How to use computers, load software (the discs and other equipment that goes into computers) and how to evaluate some of the products available are the main areas he teaches.

"Teachers are used to evaluating textbooks. They are not used to evaluating computers," Byars said. "Schools aren't comfortable with it."

Computers are used in a number of different ways in school systems, he said. They can be used for direct instruction in a "drill and practice" form and through stimulation games that expose students to experiences like running lemonade stands, working with the stock market or participating a presidential election.

Computers, wheat, temperature and disease control are only a few of the areas of innovative research at K-State. Dedication and ingenuity are the doors leading to the answers obtained through deligence and patience.

GRAIN TECHNOLOGY

Grain Science department, the only one in the free world, revolutionizes the grain industry.

Story by Doug Putnam

Through the cenozoic era, centuries old, man became a food harvester gathering grains for subsistence and later growing grains palatable for his diet. He grew and improved many grains through hybridization and the grains excelled in abundance. Ultimately his curiosity was co-named 'Grain Science'.

Today with the moderization of grains, equipment, milling and feeding the worlds population, man has further extended his knowledge by way of processing the many grains that he has under cultivation. He has specialized methods in processing grains that leave little to the imagination of one's mind.

The Grain Science department at Kansas State is the most unique department of any agriculture college in the free world. It is the only Grain Science department in the free world.

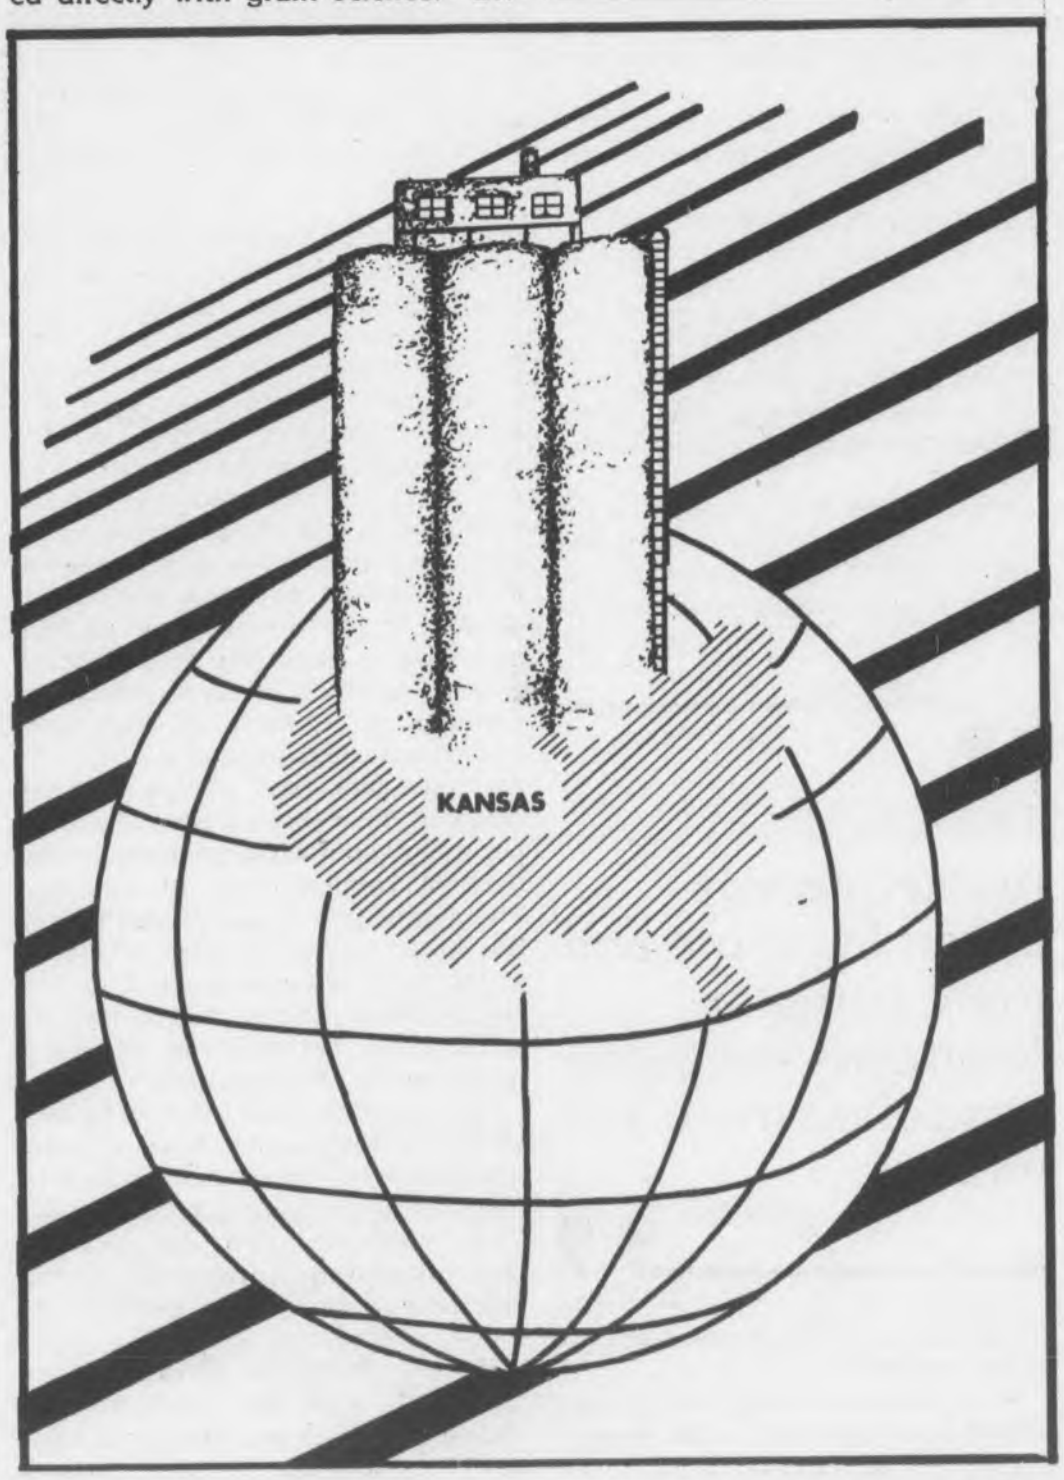
Although the Grain Science department may be the only one in the free world, its curriculum attracts individuals from all across the world. Over 50 percent of the graduate program in the Grain Science department is foreign students. The department has a technical aspect but also stresses communication skills.

"In our curriculum, we look for a strong background in the sciences and in communication skills. Factors involved in getting a strong foundation to build on and also to have communication skills is required in our undergraduate program. Regardless of whether you are in education or industry, you have to communicate to sell your ideas to industry. This is what we offer in the Grain Science department at Kansas State," Charles Deyoe, head of the Grain Science department said.

In these days of computer technology and world famine, Deyoe claims the Grain Science department is devoted to furthering studies to better technology and in improving grain quality, palatability and quanity for the world's people.

"The efficiencies that we achieve in this country as it is translated to other countries suggests better food products, more food supplies for more people around the world whether they are in developing nations or developed countries. Everybody is looking for better techniques and methods of getting more out of their grain products and that's what we are trying to accomplish here at K-State," Deyoe said.

Accomplishing this task of improving greater quantities of quality grains for many countries especially in the under-developed countries may seem impossible because of die hard traditions and primitive methods used in these countries. Deyoe doesn't think so because of the interest expressed by other countries in sending students to us and asking for trained technicians and acquiring the services of professors in K-State's Grain Science department to direct on-the-spot technological changes in grain milling within their own countries.



"One time I calculated we had something in the order of 120 man years of industry experience in the grain milling, storage and technical assistance within the United States and in other countries," Deyoe said.

Deyoe said his faculty is unusual because many of the professors worked in the grain industry for many years before they came back to K-State to teach, and with their return they brought innovative ideas that have further increased K-State's technical knowledge in the grain science field.

"Most of my senior and junior professors have served from five years to 27 years in the grain milling industry or the feed industry before they returned to teach their experiences to our undergraduates or in our graduate program.

Not all of our professors are involved directly with grain science. Dr. Patterson is heavily involved in grain storage and entomology research with stored grains. Dr. Benke worked with Far-Mar-Co for many years and has been one of our most effective teachers in our feed program. He has been very instrumental in generating new ideas and enthusiasm with our students," Deyoe said.

> "Everybody is looking for better techniques and methods of getting more out of their grain products and that's what we are trying to accomplish here at K-State."

Artwork by Meg Pyle

When a student graduates with a degree in Grain Milling, Feed Science or Bakery Science, Deyoe claims that there are five opening job positions for every K-State graduate in Grain Science.

"We have a very good undergraduate program that industry usually hires very rapidly. We also have many foreign graduate students who return to their countries after completing their master's degree in Grain Science. We have approximatey 50 percent of our graduate students from foreign countries that are totally supported by private industry or their countries and they usually return to their countries taking the experiences and advanced technology they learned at K-State to improve their own grain milling and marketing in their respected countries," Deyoe said.

Private industry in grain milling, bakery and feed technology makes it possible for many students to come to K-State but more importantly provides funds for research and development. During reconstruction and the addition of a third floor to Shellenberger Hall (the Grain Science building), private industry raised over 500,000 dollars and donated it to the Grain Science department in 1975. Private industry also provided additional funds for new equipment in the flour mill in 1972.

"The major funding is generated by outside grants and contracts from private industry. It is by far more than we get from state support. This vast support is generated from within by the efforts of our faculty. Actually they generate more money from private industry than we receive through the states total allocation to the Grain Science department," Deyoe said.

Deyoe mentioned that further financial help is received from the Agency for International Development (A.I.D.). This agency is part of the U.S.D.A. and it is supported by the Federal Government to provide research studies that may help underdeveloped countries in improving grain handling, storage, processing and the marketing of their food supply. A.I.D. has recently even provided funds for additional facility training space for international students taking a 16-week short course in Grain Science held twice a year at K-State.

Although the Grain Science department at K-State is a single entity and cannot hope to solve all of the problems of a hungry world, Deyoe says he thinks the Grain Science department at K-State has made valuable contributions in a field designed to promote the full utilization of grains and improving the use of grains to feed a hungry world.

REACHING FOR THE STARS

Planetarium proudly displays planetary delights to campus and community star-gazers.

Story by Liz Dierksmeier

There are few who have not watched with awe the setting sun, or admired the rising moon, or gazed spellbound at the stars in a cloudless sky.

When man was nothing more than a primitive tribesman, it was necessary for him to pay some attention to astronomical occurrences. The extent of his observances was probably only recognizing the daily return of the sun or the connection between the growth of vegetation and the seasons.

Ancient navigators used the stars to guide them when they made their voyages, caravans crossing the deserts did likewise, and the old-time shepherd or farmer was aided in his pursuits by paying attention to the sun and stars.

Astronomy is the science of the heavenly bodies. According to the book, Astronomy: Fundamentals and Frontiers, "the astronomer must examine his subjects from afar, the whole cosmos is his laboratory." He has no direct contact with the objects of his investigations. "The astronomer must call upon all his resources of ingenuity and employ more clever devices than the most astute detective to solve the problems of his business."

Astronomy strives to unravel the secrets of nature, not only on earth but also throughout space within the reach of the most powerful instruments. Found in the book, The Elements of Astronomy, it states that one of the goals of astronomy may be "to make man feel 'at home' in the universe."

Little has been done at this time to make him acquainted with the vast universe. In Fundamentals and Frontiers, "he is allowed to spend his entire life in ignorance of the wonderful realms of the earth." Yes, it is important that we be acquainted with the earth and what it contains. But it seems a great mistake to keep our thoughts forever centered on the globe and not allow them to go out to the stars.

Astronomy, more than any other physical or behaviorial science, offers the non-science student a mind-expanding educational experience. According to the book, An Introduction to Astronomy, published in 1977, the steadily increasing enrollment in astronomy courses reflect a growing awareness of this fact on the part of liberal arts students.

As a part of these courses, planetariums are offering instructive replicas of the heavens and of the motions of the celestial bodies. Found in the book, Highlights of Astronomy, the word "planetarim" may refer either to the complex apparatus that projects the picture of the heavens on the semi-circular interior of a dome, or else to the building or chamber that houses the apparatus. Not only may the instrument be set to depict the stellar skies of any latitude and time, but also may be driven at various speeds to show the apparent celestial motion of the sun, moon, visible planets and stars in intervals ranging from one day to a year.

Ted Stalec, director of the planetarium, plans for another program with the assistance of the projector apparatus. With this, he has the ability to display the northern hemisphere, specific constellations and many other stellar groups.

K-State has had a planetarium since Cardwell Hall was built in 1963. At that time, of the three major universities in Kansas, (K-State, University of Kansas and Wichita State University), K-State had the only planetarium.

In 1973, the physics department remodeled the planetarium at the top of Cardwell Hall at a cost of $5,000. It began with the addition of several projectors for viewing of solar and lunar eclipses and the constellations. A new sound system and a slide projector were also included in the remodeling.

To help reach an artistic environment inside the planetarium, they installed a small recording studio where they could record their own background music.

From the time the planetarium opened in 1963, until 1971, it was used specifically by the students in descriptive astronomy and man's physical world classes and for special groups outside the campus community.

Today, the use of the planetarium is available to any age group. There are about 30 shows to choose — from "Exploration of the universe" to the "Exploration of the solar system." Each program has a suggested age level, starting from pre-school to college level. Some of the programs, though, can be modified to fit any age group.

Programs vary in length. For pre-school, they choose a 20-minute segment because of their short attention span. With these programs, background music is utilized to make the visual more dramatic. This usually puts the youngsters in the mood to enjoy and soak up knowledge without realizing it.

A program could be as long as two hours. If a group has a special interest that they would like to see that is not available on the program list, Ted Stalec, an assistant instructor of the physics department and the director of the planetarium, will develop a program for them. According to Stalec, most programs are 45 minutes to one hour long.

The physics department has acquired taped programs from the Hansen Planetarium. Stalec explained the tapes are very fancy slide

> "It seems a great mistake to keep our thoughts forever centered on the globe and not allow them to go out to the stars."

THE NIGHT SKY IN MARCH

presentations with special effects that the department has developed through their recommendation.

Recently, the department has received footage from Hansen of the Voyager and the Apollo missions. People will have the opportunity to see photos not many others have seen. Programs such as these are in demand by a large number of grade school and high school science classes. Stalec schedules each class at least once a semester, but they are welcome to return.

By observing the simulated programs, the instructors and students are given a chance to carry on a little farther in what they have been studying in the classroom.

Because it is difficult for most classes to meet at night, "most will go with the current sky," Stalec said. The audience has the same relationship to the planetarium dome as the outdoor observer does to the night sky. "They will learn what the stars are like in their current positions, where the planets are currently, and how to use such things as 'star charts'." These are maps of the visible stars.

Any of the visible stars in the northern hemisphere can be seen in the K-State planetarium. The department does not have the capacity for the southern skies unless an additional star block is purchased.

According to Stalec, the planetarium can display all the pictures of the predominant constellations or "zodiac signs." He said that each is an imaginary figure and gives an idea of how to find those stars. "Usually," he said, "you can find them easier when you're looking for a specific, not just a collection of stars."

The famous Milky Way can also be seen. Stalec described it as "a kind-of-cloud that goes up around us." Actually, it is a collection of stars that exist within our galaxy. "The reason they show up," he said, "is because there are so many of them in one area."

Since last semester, the physics department has begun to present programs to the public. Everyone is welcome with any number they like, Stalec said. They are held the first Thursday of every month at 7 p.m. "We alternate our programs. One month we will use a live presentation, the next month it would be the taped presentation by the Hansen Planetarium," he said.

To publicize these programs, the department has become a part of the Sunday "What's Happening" calendar of The Manhattan Mercury plus the Collegian and KSAC radio notify the educational community. Each time this happens, Stalec said it brings near-to-capacity crowds. The planetarium accommodates 45 adults and 55 children.

As of now, there is no charge to view the "heavenly" programs. It continues to be a service by the physics department and offered to the campus community and the public.

The laboratory apparatus, according to Stalec, is designed to last 20 to 30 years. It requires routine maintenance and, at this time, is 100 percent operational. "Our particular apparatus does have limitations because of the way it is set up," he said. Some domes are larger — this one happens to hold less than 50.

"We are not trying to duplicate Star Wars or any other sensational effects. We can't and that's not what we are for anyway," Stalec said. A planetarium should be an educational tool and as that, "I think we are doing a nice job," he said.

The first Thursday of each month, the Manhattan community is invited to view live or taped presentations of the star programs. The physics department has been offering this service free of charge since 1971.

WORK IN A 'REAL' WORLD

K-State offers hand-on training through Matrix class and Environmental Research Institute.

Story by Margot Jones

It isn't the "real world", but it's the next best thing. It's in-class job-training.

They don't have the luxury of a private office. And, of course, all the fancy trimmings are missing. But for 10 art students, K-State offers a graphic arts opportunity something like the real thing.

Matrix, a class offered by the Department of Art for upperclassmen, breaks away from hypothetical, made-up assignments. In Matrix, an assignment is more than classwork. It's a project done with an actual client in mind.

"It's kind of a practice session," according to Karol S. Winegardner, assistant professor of art and instructor of the class.

For Mary James, senior in fine arts, Matrix means "getting the experience like it's going to be out in the world. We get to work all the time," she said.

Winegardner said a client will make a specific proposal to the class. He'll come with a "particular taste and directions he'd like to see developed and he informs them directly," the instructor said. He will often return after the project has been submitted.

"Sometimes we miss and sometimes we hit," Winegardner said. "Most of the time our clients find one of our products that he can use."

> "It's a learning-by-doing thing, instead of just reading about it."

The majority of clients are on campus. Professors want stationery and business cards; the College of Engineering wanted a logo to promote its Open House; the Department of Horticulture wanted to publicize a course and the theater department is a steady customer. A design that starts out for a theater production poster may be incorporated into table tent cards and programs, Winegardner said.

Requests come from off-campus as well. A student in the class worked on a logo for Lario, a division of Montara (real estate) of Topeka. A representative from Fort Riley wants safety and traffic posters. The Manhattan Chamber of Commerce chose the "Little Apple" theme from a Matrix design.

Clients hear about Matrix by word-of-mouth, James said. Someone pleased with the work done by the class will pass the word on to others.

"The clients aren't required to pay us," James said. Students are only occasionally paid for their work.

"It isn't always in the monetary value," James said. For example she designed the cover for the 1982 Royal Purple, for which she was given a yearbook. A student who does a poster for the theater department receives a ticket.

Formal class hours are just a portion of the time a Matrix student will put into class work. Most students take the course for three hours of credit and for each hour, three or four projects are required. James said most students work on two or three pieces at a time.

She said she spends 15-20 hours a week with Matrix work. The Royal Purple cover took 80 hours to make.

Matrix students have all had the basic lettering and graphic design classes, along with one to three advanced classes. Students who qualify are invited to submit a portfolio by a certain date in order to be considered.

"For our students, their futures are based on portfolios," Winegardner said. One of the main characteristics of Matrix work is the emphasis on the final product.

"They probably get a little bit more technical experience, because they do so much finished work," Winegardner said.

"We have the opportunity to get our work printed, which will be nice when we get into the real world," James said.

For some, the Institute for Environmental Research may be "just another institute" on campus. For others, it's the place they did their first psychology experiment. And for a few, it's a job opportunity.

Dr. Fred Rohles, director for the Institute, believes that jobs related to his projects are applicable to just about any discipline. At present, he has 10 students working on various aspects of his research projects. However, that number is temporary.

"The Institute is a sporadic operation. If we get grants, we get a lot of work," he said. "The hours worked varies, of course, on the nature of the study. We have people who have worked on the payroll steadily, 20 hours a week ever since school began in the fall," Rohles said.

Neal Strunk, senior in marketing and graduate student in computer science, is one of the Institute's employees. He said he has been working at least 25 hours a week because the Institute is at a peak time.

Strunk started out as a carpenter for the institute, moved up to being a research assistant and then began working in the control room. He is currently a computer programmer.

"I'm in computer science and that's what I'm doing now — most of the computer programming. So it's right in my field. You couldn't ask for a better job," Strunk said.

A current project for which Rohles is using student help is a study that concerns decision-making during exposure to simulated survival shelter environments — like fallout shelters.

In a five-year study, the first year is confined to a literature search of the topic. Rohles said he has a student in psychology and three in engineering who are currently searching and will compile an annotated bibliography of the research done in this area.

Rachel Roth, senior in industrial engineering, is working on this project. She works an average of 12 hours a week. She says she benefits from her job because of "the idea of working with a project, which means working with people."

Through her continuous library research, she's learned that, "If you can't do it one way, there's probably another way to do it."

Rohles said a general pattern has evolved concerning the work students do at the Institute. Someone collects data; another does the statistical analysis; another the graphs and artwork involved with the data; and someone else the computer work — coding and punching in the data.

"We pay these people anywhere from $3.50 to $5.00 an hour, depending on skill," Rohles said.

Rohles remembers spending a semester with a student, working to develop a research grant proposal, because he wanted the student to have the experience of doing it.

"I think that the important thing is that it's one thing to read about a piece of research in a textbook or a journal than to actually do it. And I think this and the excitement I see generated in these people is extremely refreshing. It's a learning-by-doing thing, instead of just reading about it," Rohles said.

Guerilla attacks shut some polls

Voter turnout heavy in El Salvador

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — Attacks by leftist guerrillas, including rooftop snipers, made voting impossible Sunday in Usulutan, El Salvador's fourth-largest city. But people turned out in large numbers elsewhere, sometimes casting their ballots within blocks of street gunbattles.

They were choosing a 60-member constituent assembly empowered to rewrite the constitution and name a provisional administration as a prelude to representative government.

Residents and the army said at least 24 guerrillas were killed in the capital, which resounded with street battles. Much of the fighting was near voting stations.

Two bomb explosions were heard in San Salvador in the late afternoon, but their location and nature were not clear immediately.

THE REAGAN ADMINSTRATION strongly supported the election. Eight U.S. observers, led by Sen. Nancy Kassebaum (R-Kan.) were among some 200 sent from various nations to pass judgment on whether the elections were free and fair.

U.S. observers praised the Salvadorans. "You should be very proud," Kassebaum told a woman in a line of more than 10,000 people that stretched all around the center of Santa Tecla, eight miles south of the capital.

Kassebaum said she was concerned that the long meant many voters would have to stand out in the tropical sun for hours. She said she was concerned that some people would get discouraged and not vote, but she added that many said they were willing to wait hours.

"I was just simply amazed to see this crowd this early," she said. "It isn't anything like you would see at home."

OTHER GUERRILLA attacks were reported at various points around this small Central American nation, but some cities were quiet, and a brass band entertained the voters of one town.

Centrists on the U.S.-backed ruling junta said general elections could be held in a year if they won. Leftists boycotted the balloting, calling it a farce.

Junta President Jose Napoleon Duarte's centrist Christian Democrats and the ultra-right Republican National Alliance of former Maj. Roberto d'Aubuisson were the major contenders, with four other rightist parties possible coalition members if neither main party wins a majority.

The last elected government — a right-wing regime chosen in 1977 and headed by Gen. Carlos Humberto Romero — was overthrown in October 1979 by moderate military officers.

About 1.5 million people were eligible to vote, and officials said they would be encouraged by a turnout of 500,000 to 700,000.

A SPOKESMAN for the Central Elections Commission said voting hours around the country were extended to 9 p.m. EST due to the large turnout. Polls in areas without electricity had been scheduled to close at 5 p.m. EST, and in other areas at 7 p.m.

Election officials said some places ran short of ballots due to the unexpected turnout. At La Libertad, 13 miles southwest of the capital, eight of the 20 votings booth were set up in another location because thousands of people kept pressing forward, disrupting the process.

Fighting in Usulutan, a city of 60,000 people located 65 miles east of the capital, kept polls closed. About 400 soldiers fought an undetermined number of guerrillas, including rooftop snipers.

THE HOSPITAL in Usulutan reported an unspecified number of wounded civilians, and a CBS news crew reported seeing at least five dead soldiers, 10 wounded soldiers, and a man who had been wounded walking to a polling place, which was closed.

By Noon, Usulutan was the only city in which a serious guerrilla attempt to take

Ellsberg to visit campus

Daniel Ellsberg, a prominent figure in the late 1960s and during the Vietnam War, will speak at an All University Convocation 10:30 a.m. Tuesday in McCain Auditorium. His topic will be "The Past and Future of Conspiratorial Government."

Ellsberg gained the spotlight in 1969 when he released to the press a secret Pentagon study of the history of American involvement in Vietnam. The New York Times began publishing the reports on June 13, 1971.

On June 28, Ellsberg was charged on two counts of using government property for his own purposes. The other charge was possessing government documents illegally. It was not until May 1973 that the charges against Ellsberg were dismissed.

Born in Chicago, Ill., in 1931, Ellsberg later graduated from Harvard University. Ellsberg became involved with governmental affairs when he joined the Department of Defense in 1964.

In 1967, he aided former Secretary of Defense Robert McNamara by studying the history of U.S.-Vietnamese relations from 1945 to 1967. At that time Ellsberg began working on the Pentagon Papers.

Phillip Kirmser, professor of electrical engineering and committee chairman for the convocation series, said Ellsberg was chosen because "we try to get the people the committee thinks are most interesting."

Third shuttle mission to end after 7 days

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Columbia's astronauts gave their space shuttle an encouraging once-over Sunday and prepared for a Monday landing at a makeshift spaceport on the white sands of New Mexico. Landing, set for shortly after noon, could come early to dodge midday desert winds.

A NASA forecast early Sunday evening called for decent weather conditions in the morning but becoming windier and dustier after noon, mountain time. Landing is scheduled for 12:27 p.m. MST — 1:27 p.m. CST.

"We maintain an option to come home early," said flight director Harold Draughon, who is in charge of Columbia's descent. A NASA decision to land one orbit early would cutasa news release, issued at White Sands, said, "The weather for Monday looks good for landing" and predicted visibility of 10 to 40 miles. But the release added: "By noon, blowing dust may reduce visibility to less than seven miles in some areas. Mission rules require a seven-mile visibility minimum for Columbia's landing."

A DECISION on an early descent to beat the wind could be made comfortably as late as six hours before landing. Columbia also could extend its stay in orbit by up to three days because of the weather; fuel, power and food are plentiful.

Astronauts Jack Lousma and C. Gordon Fullerton will guide Columbia onto the White Sands Missile Range's Northrup Strip, a barren backup site hurriedly equipped to receive the billion-dollar space plane.

The astronauts said landing would give them "a 100 percent mission," and they appeared relaxed and happy on Sunday. They beamed down a hygienic performance. Fullerton squirted some paste from a tube, let it drift into his mouth, and brushed his teeth. He picked up a hairbrush, remembered he is bald, shrugged and tossed it into weightlessness.

"The ship has performed beautifully," said Draughon. "Just a piece of cake to walk through...it's been very successful."

On hand to meet the astronauts when they step out of their ship will be their wives and children. "This is the last leg — this is the best one," said Gratia Lousma, the commander's wife as she left Houston. "It's been a good week. We'll have 100 percent when they touch down."

A TRAILER TOWN has grown around the two runways that crisscross the floor of the Tularosa Basin, Columbia's Flight 3 landing site. Hundreds of cars, trucks and campers already were in line early Sunday to be among the 80,000 that will be allowed onto the super secret base. A safety official said the post-landing logjam could stack up cars for 75 miles.

The Army cautioned spectators to bring a 12-to-14 hour supply of food and water and rented 130 portable toilets for $75 apiece. Spectactors will be five miles from the runway — television will provide a better view.

If the strip's malevolent winds don't change plans, Lousma and Fullerton are to land on the 116th orbit after 7 days, 3 hours and 27 minutes since its launch from Cape Canaveral.

SPACE OFFICIALS held open their option of landing an orbit early, if necessary, to beat the wind. Columbia also could extend its stay — fuel, power and food are plentiful.

The astronauts tested an auxiliary power unit that overheated during their launch last Monday. The unit, one of three, helps power the movement of wing surfaces when the ship has passed into the Earth's atmosphere. Flight director Harold Draughon said it worked "outstanding."

Despite the 800-mile eastward shift in landing sites — caused by a water-soaked runway at Edwards Air Force Base in California — the landing routine will be almost the same for Flight 3 as for the first two flights.

'Natural Guard' stages Wolf Creek protest

BURLINGTON — Up to 100 people took part in a peaceful march to the entrance of the Wolf Creek nuclear plant Sunday to commemorate the accident that occurred in 1979 at the Three Mile Island reactor in Pennsylvania.

"Everything has been super quiet," said Debbie Totman, a dispatcher for the Coffey County Sheriff's Department. "We haven't gotten any calls that there was trouble."

Sheriff's officers and the Kansas Highway Patrol followed the demonstrators as they marched about three miles from the John Redmond Reservoir to the gates of the Wolf Creek plant. Authorities estimated between 75 and 100 people took part in the march, which was organized by the Kansas Natural Guard, a group opposed to nuclear power.

Senator seeks non-combat aid to El Salvador

WASHINGTON — Sen. Barry Goldwater (R-Ariz.) said Sunday the Reagan administration should tell Fidel Castro it will start shooting down Cuban planes and sinking Cuban ships carrying arms to other nations in Latin America.

Goldwater, however, said he could not now "conceive of any circumstances" for sending U.S. troops to El Salvador to fight leftist guerrillas the administration says are being armed by Cuba and the Soviet Union.

"I would want to see us go down there if there is a chance of getting the whole thing to work," he said on CBS' "Face the Nation" program. "And I think maybe we can do it."

Goldwater said the United States should continue to do "whatever we can in a noncombatant way to help" El Salvador even if the centrist government in the Central American nation is replaced by one further to the right.

Goldwater, who chairs the Senate Intelligence Committee, said the crux of the problem in Central America is that "Cuba is now supplying Nicaragua with armament and Nicaragua is supplying El Salvador with arms."

Corporate connections may restrict education

WATSONVILLE, Calif. — Universities must be kept free of exclusive corporate connections which may restrict research or students' education, five university presidents say in a policy statement on conflict of interest.

The statement was issued Saturday at the end of a three-day meeting of academic and corporate leaders concerned about potential conflicts of interest created by the lure of big profits, especially in genetic engineering.

The policy statement said agreements between universities and corporations should not be written to "promote a secrecy that will harm the progress of science, impair the education of students" or "interfere with the choice by faculty members of the scientific questions...they pursue."

However, the broadly worded statement stopped short of advising universities on how specifically to restrict business relationships.

Recently, genetic engineering has moved from the laboratory to the marketplace, and has proved profitable for the universities involved.

Sinkhole season opens up in Florida

ORLANDO, Fla. — Another sinkhole season has arrived with a cone-shaped, 50-foot-wide hole that opened up in an orange grove near Ocoee last week, according to an authority on sinkholes.

The hole was discovered Friday by a sheriff's helicopter on patrol.

"Well, it's that time of the year," said Jim Jammal, the sinkhole consultant for suburban Winter Park, where a sinkhole opened last May 8, swallowing a house, several cars and parts of two businesses.

"We're just about two weeks ahead of schedule," Jammal said.

Sinkholes are most common in April and May, when central Florida water use is up to three times higher than in other months, Jammal said. Depletion of underground water tables causes sinkholes to form, he said.

Girl's trial may be held in juvenile court

GAINESVILLE, Fla. — A 6-year-old girl charged with striking a 7-year-old girl in the nose with a stick will not be tried as an adult as planned, a state prosecutor said Sunday.

State Attorney Eugene Whitworth said the case of Nancy Jo Burch will have to be taken up in juvenile court or dropped.

"Either they take this thing back to juvenile court...for arbitration or I'll dismiss it," said Whitworth.

The girl's attorney, Alan Wilhite, is to confer with the parents of the first-grader and give an answer on his preference at a meeting Monday. The child is accused of hitting Shirley Lynn Nickolls in an after-school tiff last Nov. 4.

On Friday, Circuit Court Judge R.A. "Buzzy" Green sent the case to Superior Court on Wilhite's motion. Under Florida law, he had to grant the request.

Weather

Today will be partly cloudy and warmer with a high of around 60. The low tonight will be in the low 40s.

"The Past and Future of Conspiratorial Government"
Daniel Ellsberg, Pentagon Papers analyst

A brilliant analyst and adviser on U.S. military policy in Southeast Asia during the 1960s, Daniel Ellsberg underwent a conversion from cold-blooded hawk to committed dove and released to the press portions of a top secret Pentagon study of American involvement in the Vietnam war. The resulting historic court battle over freedom of the press, official secrecy and national security ultimately resulted in the dismissal of all charges against him. Ellsberg earned B.A., M.A. and Ph.D. degrees at Harvard University and studied advanced economics at Kings College, Cambridge University.

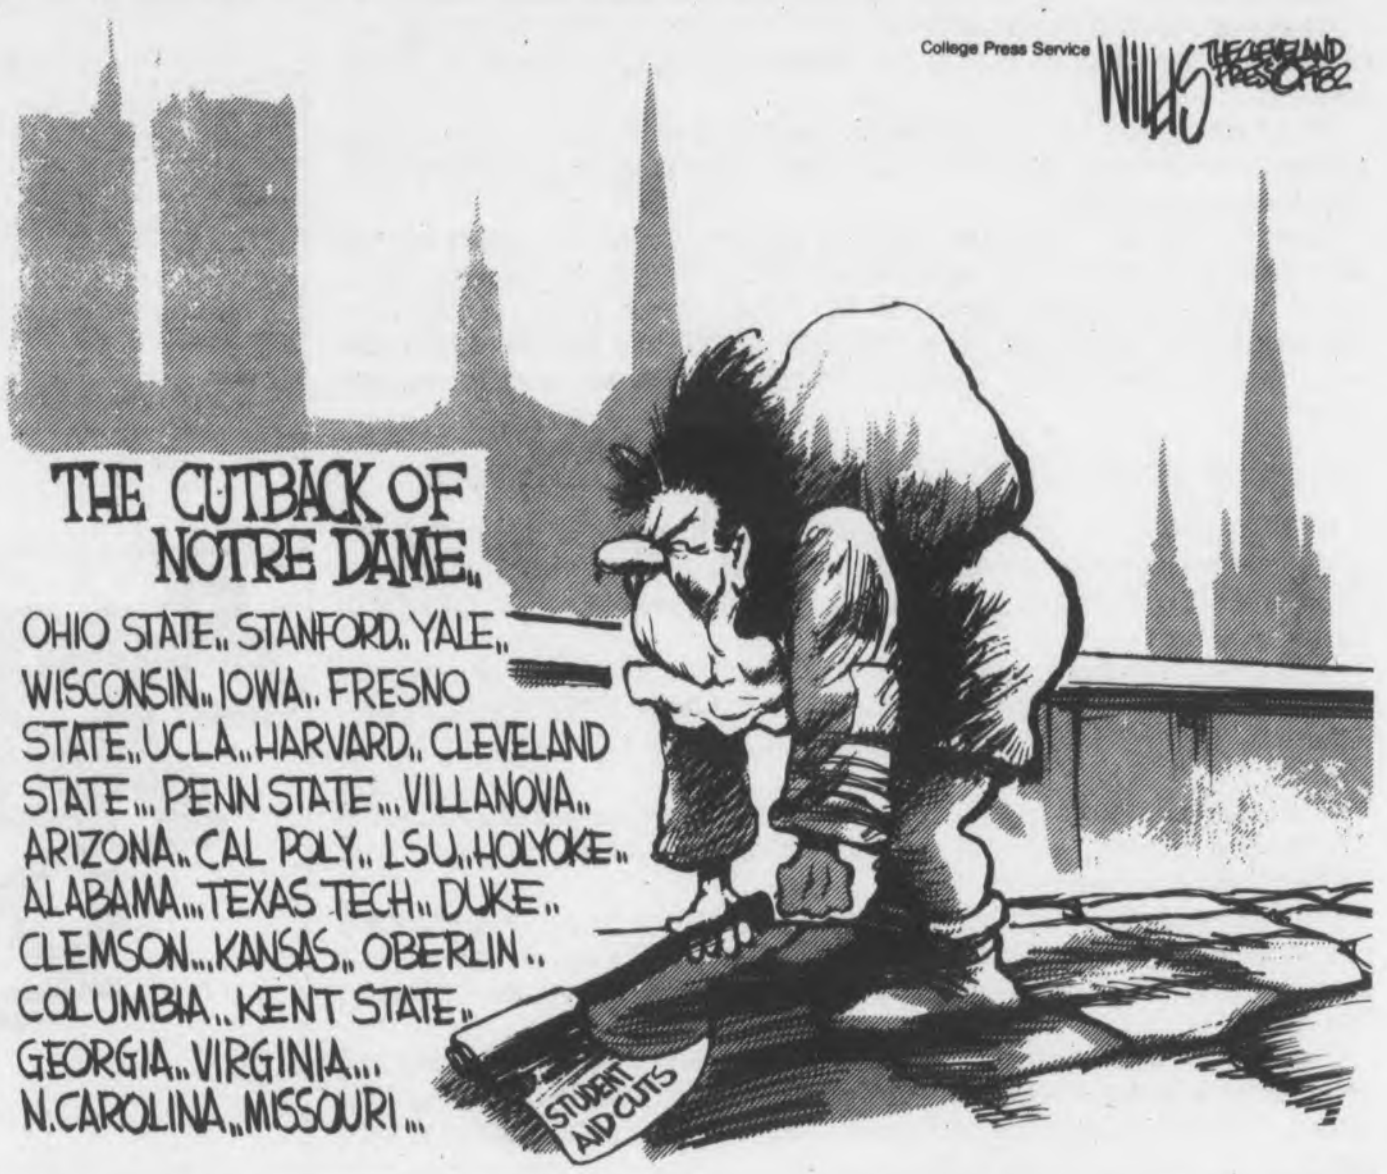
Present action determines future

Anti-abortion efforts seem to be gaining momentum.

The Hatch Amendment, giving states the right to outlaw abortion, is proceeding through the legislative process. Last week, anti-abortion groups questioned the right of nurses to hand out prescriptions, namely birth-control pills. Studies released concerning the world's population growth should give supporters of such action something to think about.

A report from the Worldwatch Institute, a non-profit research organization, believes that if the United Nations-estimated world population of 10.4 billion in 2020 is reached the standard of living for all nations will decline. The Insitute reports that such a decline can already be seen in Africa, which has highest rate of population growth, in South and Central America and the Middle East.

The report states that the average annual birth rate will need to drop from the 1980 level of 32 for each 1000 people to 11 for each 1000 people in 2020, according to the Associated Press. The 1980 birth rate in the U.S. was 16.2 for every 1000 people.



The AP continues with a quote from the report stating that "achieving a stationary population will be painfully difficult if contraceptive services are not backed up by legal abortion."

Those who cry out against abortion say that they do so because they have a deep concern for life. A true concern for life should include a concern for future generations and their living conditions.

The report shows a correlation between the large population growths and a decline in food supplies plus raw materials. Are the righteous, religious individuals who so adamantly protest against birth control and contraception ready to accept the results such restrictions would have?

Too often demands for change lack any consideration of long term results.

Quality overrules time

Editor,

I attended the Laugh-Off Preliminaries Thursday and was entertained by various K-State students competing for a chance to go to the finals April 1. When the five finalists were announced at the close of the program, one of the better acts of the evening was not among them.

Upon inquiry with an official I learned that the act, which had earned enough points to be one of the finalists, was disqualified because of a time limit.

I was interested in the comedian's ability to entertain rather than how long he stood on stage. It was a shame that this particular act will not have the chance to perform in front of a professional comedian at the finals.

I feel than an entertainer should be judged on quality, not quantity. The idea was to perform in front of a crowd, not a stop-watch.

Lessons in fitting molds

My mother always told me that if a person is going to be ashamed of what they are doing then they shouldn't do it. For some reason that line kept running through my head as I stepped from the elevator and headed to room 609 of the Ramada Inn. I was about to be interviewed by the Playboy photographers looking for a beautiful coed from K-State to appear in September's "Back to Campus" issue. This issue will contain women from the Big Eight Conference who will appear either clothed, semi-nude or nude.

When I first saw the advertisement about Playboy, I jokingly told my husband Ray that I was going to call and schedule an interview. He told me to go ahead. As the days passed I found myself wondering about not only the interview but how my friends would react. Each time I mentioned the possibility of going for the interview to a friend, I found the first reaction to be one of astonishment.

THURSDAY I PASSED the point of thinking about it and entered the world of action. Before I actually scheduled an appointment for an interview I called the photographers to get an idea of what to expect. It was hard to contain my laughter as each question was answered. The answers weren't funny but I was laughing because I was trying to make up my mind to "go for it" and was nervous.

I finally decided that I couldn't let my curiousity be on hold forever so I made an appointment for 2:30 p.m. This meant that having to sit through another class. During class thoughts of how Ray would react and what my classmates would say controlled my thoughts. But most important, I wondered what it took to be choosen. With a little photo airbrushing, could I also fit into the Playboy mold?

FINALLY THE CLASS ended and with some trepidation I walked over to Ramada Inn. I was met, as I stepped off the elevator, by the first of many reporters who would ask me about my personal life, my feelings about posing for Playboy, should I be choosen, and numerous other questions. The major question was why did I do it? To tell the truth, I didn't really know why.

They asked what Ray would think and I hated to say that he didn't know yet. Did I mind my name being used? At this point thoughts of my mom flashed through my mind and I told them to go ahead and use it. While I was talking to the first reporter a friend emerged from the elevator looking as sheepish as I felt. We both knew why we were there and laughed. Knowing that I wasn't the first to make this mistake made my adrenaline pick up. I was ready to face the troops.

I KNOCKED TIMIDLY, then forcefully on the door. As I walked into the room six pairs of eyes focused on me and I fervently wished that my clothes were less wrinkled and my socks weren't white. As I filled out forms I wrote down my name, age (without lying), birthdate, major, hair and eye colors. Then I saw that vital statistics were needed. I was stunned. I couldn't tell you my shoe size and the questions were more personal than that. So I filled in the blanks to the best of my knowledge (and figure).

Since I was the only applicant at that time I was taken into another room and posed in front of a mirror. My dazzling smile was photographed (along with the rest of me) and that was it. In reality there was no interview. The applicants were looked over by the photographer and that was it. You can forget personality and brains, these people wanted bodies only.

I DECIDED to wait for my friend and talked to more reporters. I also talked to the other photographer and immediately felt more at ease. As we chatted about his job he said that he looks for a twinkle in the eye of the girl and any aspect of personality that you don't normally see at first glance. He also said that most girls who are test-photographed for a centerfold back out when the time comes for the actual photo session. He believed that many of the girls photographed for this issue would do the same.

My friend finished and as we left I quizzed her about how her family would react. She said that her family and boyfriend knew that she had applied for semi-nude as well as clothed and they didn't mind. As we parted she said she would let me know if she was chosen.

AS I WAITED for my husband to return from work I thought about the afternoon. The reporters were more interested in why the girls had come rather than how they had decided to apply for the "job." The photographers gave me the impression that I was just another body with no mind attached. The girls themselves appeared to be thrilled at the prospect of having the nation view their finer points.

Maybe I am strange but I felt detached from the situation. I looked at the experience as a lark but felt that if I was selected, then fine. My ego could use a lift. If I wasn't selected, well, that's life. But like the rest of my life I felt that this experience, like all the others, would teach me some lesson in some way. In the meantime, I think I will wait by the phone and hope to hell that they call.

Marijuana: Getting 'high' in residence halls continues; staff, police find policy difficult to enforce

By CATHY KARLIN
Collegian Reporter

Getting "high" is an everyday routine for some people, and Gary (not his real name) is a classic example.

A self-described marijuana addict, Gary said he has gotten "high" nearly every day since the seventh grade and despite the fact that he now lives in a residence hall he has not altered his routine. In fact, Gary said he is not even bothered by the thought of being caught smoking marijuana in his room.

"Oh, yeah, you take precautions. I'll never let it (marijuana smoke) be smelled out in the hall," he said. "That'd be crazy."

He reached for a small silver spray can on his desk. "It (the spray) is called Ozium," Gary explained. "You spray that and it surrounds the little smoke molecules or whatever. It's a disinfectant. Or we have a fan — you blow your smoke out of the window. I know the whole floor does."

ALTHOUGH GARY SAID he smokes marijuana every day, usually in the room, he said he is one of the "lucky" marijuana users who has not been caught.

"I know what the consequences would be. It would be probation. If you look in the past when most people get caught it's just a slap on the hand. I'm too small to go to Lansing State Prison," Gary said.

Some residence hall staff members said the policy on illegal drug use in the residence halls is very hard to enforce.

'Residents are going to have to decide they've had enough of it.'

"If you detect a (marijuana) smell, you have to get the director or another staff person. While you're going to call the police, a friend down the hall will go and call them (the marijuana users) and tell them, 'Hey, the police are coming,' and they can open their windows," said John Mould, graduate in business adminstration and staff member on fifth floor Marlatt Hall.

"The problem is they (the marijuana users) dissipate the odor before the director can get here, then he says by the time the police are here the odor will be gone," Mould said.

"There's not much we can do to enforce it (anti-drug policy)," said Curtis Long, sophomore in mechanical engineering and Goodnow Hall staff member.

THE MOST EFFECTIVE action is to get the residents who live with or around marijuana users willing to file grievance reports against the users, Long said. If enough grievences stack up, then the residence hall's Judicial Board will hold a hearing and make a decision on any action the hall might take in response to the grievances, he continued.

"Residents are going to have to decide they've had enough of it. If they (drug users) are allowed to stay in the hall they'll have to realize people don't appreciate them using drugs," he said.

As a staff member, Long said sometimes he feels helpless in doing anything to enforce the drug policy.

Not only residence hall staff members, but police also experience frustration when trying to enforce the anti-drug policy.

"Unless people want to cooperate with enforcement, there's no way we can enforce this sort of thing," said Lt. James Tubach of Security and Traffic.

There are several ways the law enforcement system against illegal drugs in the residence halls can work, he said.

"Most of our referrals come by way of staff. If a staff member calls us at Security and Traffic and tells us that they are smelling marijuana or what they assume to be marijuana, a uniformed officer will go to the scene," Tubach said.

IF THE OFFICER detects the odor, he will knock on the door and identify himself, and if he is admitted, he can make an eyeball search of the room and explain his reason for being there, Tubach explained.

"If he sees drugs and/or paraphernalia, he does have the right to confiscate the evidence for action to be taken," he said.

Depending on personal judgment, the officers may make an on-the-scene arrest, or the evidence and an informational report are given to the county attorney. Further prosecution is at the county attorney's discretion, Tubach said.

The two legal procedures for entering a suspect's room are "upon the occupant's consent at the time, or if there is probable cause to presume there is contraband in the room, a search warrant will be requested from the court," Tubach said.

'Unless people want to cooperate with enforcement, there's no way we can enforce this sort of thing.'

First-time conviction for marijuana possession is a misdemeanor and can be punishable by a fine up to $2,500 and up to one year in the county jail, or any combination thereof, Tubach said.

During 1981, 12 drug-related incidents at the University were reported to Security and Traffic. Upon request, a member of the department will hold a "rap session" with residence hall staff members or any interested groups. The officer will show confiscated drugs and paraphernalia at the session to aid persons in recognizing the items, Tubach said.

THE MOST EFFECTIVE means of anti-drug enforcement is peer pressure, according to Tubach. Morals, values, quality and length of resident relationships are factors influencing a student's decision to inform authorities of a roommate's drug usage, he said.

"Say there are two people living together. One is a user (of illegal drugs), one is a non-user who knows the other one is using it but keeps quiet about it. And a third party informs on them. If we (law enforcement) go into that room and search that room, we are going to have to arrest both of those people unless there is further information," Tubach said.

One of the reasons residents will not report illegal drug activity is because many are ignorant of how they are implicated, even if they do not use illegal drugs, according to Jo Koehn, senior in accounting and Boyd Hall director.

"Residents run the risk of getting involved if they don't disassociate themselves from what is going on in their rooms. There cn be strong roommate loyalty. Basically it's a personal decision," she said.

ONE STUDENT, a sophomore living in Marlatt Hall, who tried to enforce the anti-drug policy, reported his roommate. He said the first time he came into the room and found his roommate smoking marijuana he did not know what to do. He said he "just kinda blew it by" and talked to others about it.

"Sometimes it could be your worst mistake to let it go by," he said. "He was doing illegal action in your room and you don't know if that's going to affect your life. It could have gotten me in trouble and affected my reputation, too."

Personal interpretation about how detrimental marijuana really is also affects a person's decision on how he reacts to its usage, as is evident with Gary.

Gary said he reads all the government statistics about how marijuana use affects short-term memory and causes a low sperm count, but he said he believes he could contradict every statistic with another survey that takes the opposite view. Gary said he also believes that non-users are out-of-touch with what he calls "the culture."

"I don't think it should be legalized, but it should be decriminalized. I don't want my kids to smoke it. It's so obvious — it's there — it's like prohibition," he said. "It's stupid for me to do. I could get busted and a future employer could look at my record and fire me. I guess I am (scared of being caught).

"I don't know why I don't quit. I know it's bad for me — it's hurting my lungs and it's hurting my head. It's a lack of motivation — you got to blame it on society and you've got to blame it on your friend who got you onto it."

Pure, simple motions highlight performance

A pure ballet style seems to be the production core of Heinz Poll, artistic director and choreographer of the Ohio Ballet.

The Ohio company performed this weekend in McCain Auditorium. Poll's choreography presents only a very sleek, minute intertwinement of the basic style differences that mark ballet and modern dance.

Saturday evening's dance offerings began with "Concerto Grosso." The curtain rose to a free-for-all of forms which produced a mood-setting upbeat tempo. The small ensemble from the University of Akron presented technically clean and complete executions most of the evening.

The second movement highlighted two impressive and talented dancers in this small, well-rounded company. Kim Abkemeier is a complete dance performer. Her facial expressions greatly contributed to the communication being physically related on stage. This is a mark that can divide a principal from the corps in a larger company.

ANDREW CARROL'S large stature alone demands attention. The grace and technique with which he danced literally filled the stage.

The pure style of dance Poll created was carried over into the lighting, stage designs and costuming. The key, yet unobtrusive lighting by Thomas Skelton added dimension to the mood changes in "Adagio for Two Dancers" and "Summer Night."

The following "Adagio for Two Dancers" was a sensate joy of both sight and sound. The music, Tomaso Albinoni's "Adagio for Strings and Organ," is a beautiful and familiar composition that demands bodily accompaniment. The opening stanzas make one think of dance and Poll created a flowing, yet impacting ballet. The movements were delivered with the equal sharpness and fluidity that makes today's choreography so interesting as compared to a "classic" style.

THE AUDIENCE THOROUGHLY enjoyed Robert Joffrey's delightful ballet spoof "Pas des Deesses." This choreography relayed the qualities of three great 19th century dancers — Lucile Grahn, Fanny Cerito and Marie Taglioni, as well as the "delicate" rivalry said to have existed among the three. Steffany-Lynn Stearns, Catherine Iwaniw and Judith Denman contributed an accurate hauteur which produced a wonderful break from the "serious" world of ballet.

The piano accompaniment by John Field added to the 19th- century setting and was a rare change from the taped music touring demands.

"Summer Night" relayed the same pure style of Polls' first two dances. The closing production "Wings and Aires" delivered a different style of choreography. The dancers' motions were as the title suggested. Here Poll reaches for the other side of dance, modern. The result was upbeat and progressive as toe shoes disappeared and the stage filled with fiery red figures in tight couplings of contractions.

Gliding gracefully across the McCain stage, Kim Abkemeir and Andrew Carroll perform the second movement of Concerto Grosso Saturday night.

Open House attracts 20,000 over weekend

By JOY CULVER
Collegian Reporter

The campus came alive Saturday when all eight colleges flung open their doors for the fourth annual All-University Open House.

The festivities, which began with a parade through campus Friday afternoon, attracted a bumper turnout.

"It was exceptional... the best ever," said Pat Bosco, assitant dean of student development and Open House Committee chairman.

Two-thousand students and faculty participated, either within their colleges, or coordinating various campus activities. Approximately 20,000 visitors attended the event, but Bosco said it was difficult to estimate an exact figure because activities were spread throughout the campus.

The Open House committee's goal was to get the entire University community involved, and they came closer to their goal than ever before, he added.

A special event Saturday morning was the dedication of Bluemont Hall by President Duane Acker. Acker said he was especially pleased to dedicate Bluemont Hall because it is the first building "completed start to finish" during his tenure at K-State.

MANY EDUCATION AND and psychology students attended the dedication, according to Jordan Utsey, dean of the College of Education. The education college and the psychology department are now located in Bluemont Hall.

Other activities throughout campus were of a musical nature. A "Showcase of Talent" featuring several choirs and the Concert Jazz Ensemble was presented Friday evening in Forum Hall.

The College of Veterinary Medicine gave tours through the Veterinary Clinical Science Building. One demonstration in particular captured visitors' interest — a cow with a hole cut in her side providing a view of the digestion process. Visitors were allowed to put their hands into the cow's stomach while she calmly ate hay.

The anthropology department used a gorrila-suited person to escort people into their display rooms in Eisenhower Hall. An international cafe was set up in the Eisenhower basement.

The College of Architecture and Design displayed many students' projects in Seaton Hall. Visitors observed the structural stress tests which involved pouring sand on cardboard models until they collapsed from the weight. Through these demonstrations the structural integrity of the designs was calculated.

The College of Agriculture, which has held open house for more than 60 years, staged numerous special events, including the rodeo in Weber Arena and many displays in Throckmorton Hall.

"There's so many things available at K-State," Bosco said. "Open House gives a very positive image of K-State."

Gloves from penguin skin? Not for Argentine hands

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (AP) — As if they knew of the plan to grind them into protein meal for export and make gloves from their skins, the penguins who spend half the year on Argentina's Patagonian coast will soon waddle to the waterside, dive into the cold South Atlantic and head for nobody-knows-where.

A Patagonian newspaper report last month saying that the Secretariat of Maritime Affairs had authorized the annual "processing" of 48,000 Magellan penguins brought an outcry from Argentina's few small environmentalist groups.

Public response was unprecedented for such an issue here, with "Save the Penguin" editorials appearing in newspapers across the country and pro-penguin calls flooding conservationists' offices.

A temporary injunction barring the slaughter was issued while a federal court studies the matter.

"We've won the battle, but the war is not over," Gustavo Costa, a director of the Argentine Wildlife Foundation, said in an interview with The Associated Press.

He said he was encouraged by the declaration of Argentina's president, Gen. Leopoldo Faltieri, that the government is not currently considering changing a 1974 law protecting penguins, sea lions, sea elephants and other animals along Argentina's 3,000-mile coastline.

The Secretariat of Maritime Affairs had granted the Hinode Penguins Corp., the firm that wants to process the meal, an exemption from the 1974 law to slaughter 48,000 penguins a year. The firm had asked for the exemption with a quota of 400,000 penguins a year. Faltieri entered the picture only after the environmentalists launched their protests.

But Costa added that he feared the law could be changed in the future. And, he said, Hinode has not given up on its plan to export the protein meal to Japan for human consumption.

Hinode's president, Gustavo Larrea, said the penguins on the Patagonian coast number some eight million, have overpopulated their habitat and are eating a significant portion of the Argentine Atlantic's anchovies.

Larrea said the project's main objective was production of a high-protein concentrate, but admitted in a recent interview the market for penguin skin leather is "very good."

But the Wildlife Foundation, aided by some international organizations, convinced the Chubut authorities that nothing should be done until a thorough study of the penguins has been completed.

Reagan unlikely to get his way on '83 budget

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate Budget Committee begins work Tuesday on a 1983 spending plan that, unlike last year, is almost certain to displease President Reagan.

A year ago, the GOP-dominated panel moved in virtual lockstep with the administration, approving more than $30 billion in spending cuts and an overall blueprint that left room for Reagan's three-year income tax cut.

This year, Republican and Democrats agree that Reagan's big-deficit budget has almost no support.

At least five of the 22 members of the Senate committee are vying for support of their own alternative budget plans to reduce a 1983 deficit now projected at $96.4 billion to $121 billion.

Each plan contains at least one of the following elements that Reagan has rejected often in public — much higher taxes, less spending for defense and a cut in cost-of-living increases in Social Security.

Despite the competing plans, Sen. Pete V. Domenici, (R-N.M.), the committee's chairman, expressed confidence Friday that the panel will pass a budget that Republicans and at least a few Democrats can support.

Though Domenici has summoned the committee to meet Tuesday, a delay is possible, particularly if Reagan signals a new willingness to compromise.

White House chief of staff James A. Baker III began private meetings last week with the Democratic chairmen of the House Budget, Ways and Means and Rules committees. But the only apparent agreement was a willingness to continue discussions.

Wichita officials battle aviation woes

WICHITA (AP) — It's tempting to assume nosediving light plane sales, aircraft company layoffs and pessimistic economic forecasts are transforming Wichita from the "Air Capital of the World" to the "Detroit of the aviation industry."

But it's an incorrect assumption, according to city leaders, union officials and spokesmen at Beech Aircraft Corp.and Cessna Aircraft Co.

"We're not looking at anything like that here," said Mike Potts at Beech. "Detroit is looking at a 25 percent unemployment rate. We're looking at a rate significantly below the national average," which was 8.8 percent for February.

Unemployment statistics show 5.1 percent of the 223,200-person work force in Wichita was unemployed in February. That compares with 3.9 percent in February 1981 and 4.5 percent in January 1982. The statistics don't take into account large layoffs announced in early March.

CITY MANAGER Gene Denton said Wichita won't suffer the unemployment fate of Detroit because of the diversification of the city's industrial base. The percentage of the labor force working at aircraft companies dropped to around 15 percent during the 1970s after reaching a high of 25 to 30 percent during the 1950s when the Boeing Military Airplane Co. was manufacturing B-52s. Denton said the current number of workers in aviation industries is something less than 20 percent.

Wichita has held its "Air Capital" nickname for several decades thanks to the activity of Boeing, Cessna, Beech, Gates Learjet Corp. and other planemakers. About 60 percent of the air frames in the world are built in Wichita.

Strong aircraft sales and good general economic health gained Wichita a reputation as an "island of prosperity" during the 1970s as an economic malaise spread through the nation.

THE ISLAND BEGAN eroding a little in the late 1970s when sales of single-engine planes began dropping off. Demand continued solid, however, for corporate aircraft, keeping those assembly lines busy.

But during the past few months, corporate America also quit spending as much money on planes. General Aviation Manufacturers Association statistics show year-to-date deliveries of light planes down 40 percent from 1981. Billings have declined almost 10 percent.

"There is a lack of buyer confidence," said GAMA's Ed Stimpson. "if you're a businessman, you're saying 'Gee, should I buy this airplane or wait 30 days and see what happens?'"

Declined in owner-flown airplane sales and the corporate market led to layoffs of nearly 4,000 workers at Cessna and about 1,800 at Beech in the past year. Cessna's employment has dropped from 13,096 a year ago to about 8,770. In March 1981, Beech had about 10,700 employees in Wichita, Liberal, Salina, Boulder, Colo., and Selma, Ala. By mid April, it will level off at about 9,000.

MOST OF THE layoffs are indefinite. Companies also use plant-wide vacations to curtail production. Cessna has announced temporary shutdowns of three weeks at one plant and six weeks or longer at another.

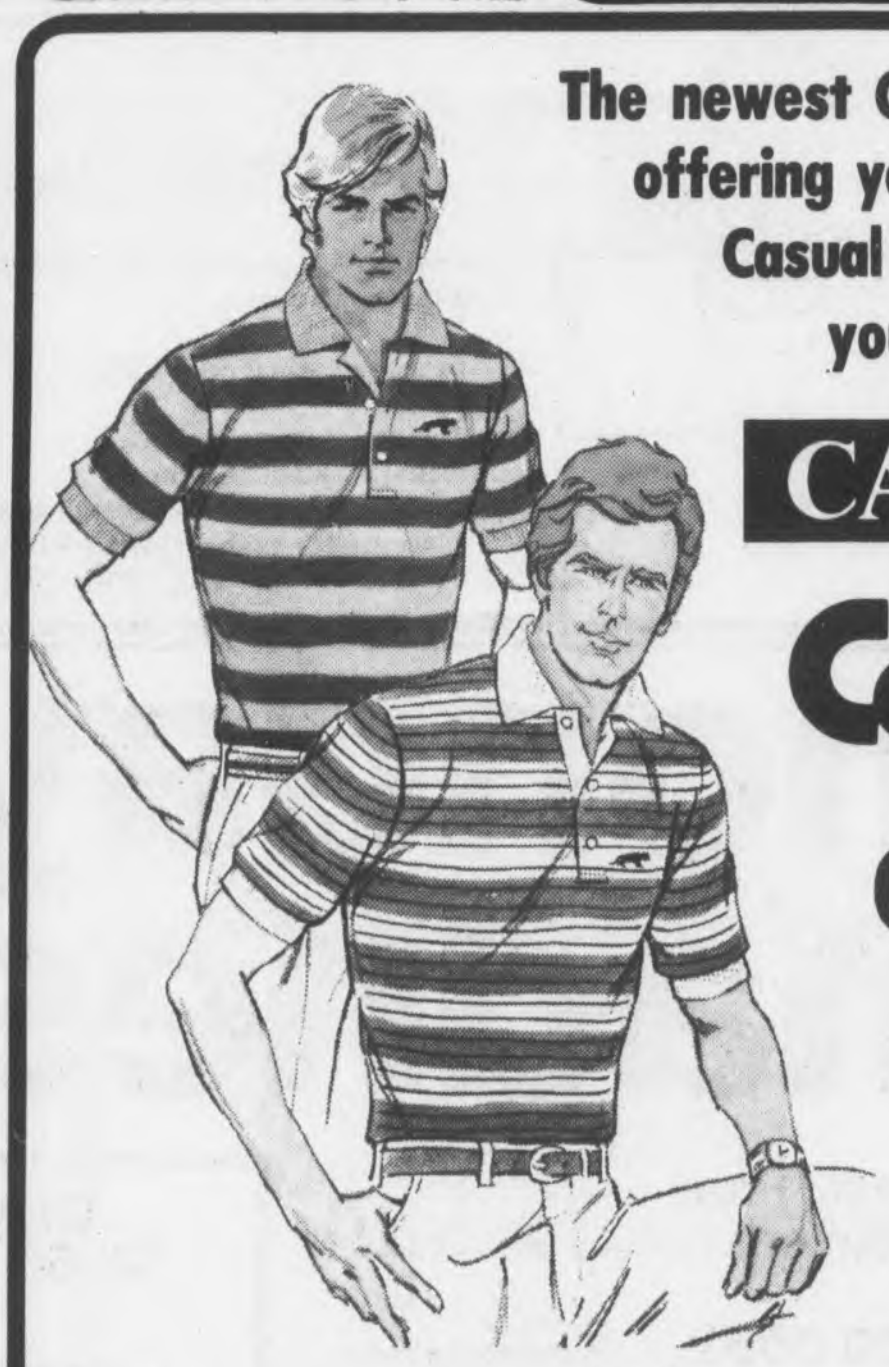
Unlike the automakers and other manufacturers, planemakers sell a high percentage of their output before it leaves the assembly line.

Field inventories are half what they were two years ago, a Cessna spokesman said. Dealers and manufacturers apparently learned a hard lesson in 1970-1971 when sales dropped about 50 percent sticking them with huge inventories, GAMA's Stimpson said.

NO DEALER OR builder wants inventory sitting around when it's financed at 17 to 19 percent interest, Stipmson said.

Cessna maintains about a 50 pecent share of the market, so it has has been hardest hit by the sales declines. It is the only manufacturer to offer a full line of planes ranging from two-place trainers to intercontinental business jets.

But none of the companies, including Cessna, appears headed for severe financial straits. Industry analysts point to the fact most of the firms are owned by parent corporations with vast resources. In Wichita, Beech is a Raytheon company and Gates Rubber Co. owns Gates Learjet.



INDUSTRY SPOKESMEN say there is sufficient pent up demand to end the slump and cause an eventual boom in light plane manufacturing. They report prospects are still taking test rides and planning purchases.

"The need for business aircraft — especially propjets and fan jets — remains as strong as ever and probably stronger," said Russ Meyer, Cessna chairman and president. "Airline deregulation has resulted in sharply reduced service to most cities and a business aircraft is in many cases the most efficient and productive means of transportation."

Meyer and others believe all that is needed is a decline in interest rates and an economic upturn. But they aren't predicting when either will occur. When they announced the layoff of 1,250 workers in early March, Beech executives quietly abandoned their forecast of an economic improvement by late summer.

AGR team competes at Chicago quiz bowl

By JANE RAMSBOTTOM
Collegian Reporter

The four-member Quadrathon team called the AGRs placed well in the national contest held March 21-22 in Chicago, according to Guy Kiracofe, professor of animal science.

A team from Iowa State University won the contest. The teams were not ranked below first place in an attempt to reduce the competitiveness of the event, Kiracofe said.

This is the third year of the Midwest region contest with a strong possibility that the other regions will initiate similar competition, according to Kiracofe.

"Two representatives from the University of California-Davis went through the competition for the purpose of learning what it was all about and to see how competition could be started there," he said.

THE TEAM COMPETED against seven other teams and was comprised of Chris Baker, Brent Kuehny, Mark Reinhardt, seniors in animal science, and Jeff Bryant, senior in agricultural education.

The two-day contest was held in conjunction with the American Society of Animal Science Midwest Meeting in Chicago. The contest, which is designed to test team members' knowledge of their over-all skills and knowledge of livestock, was divided into several different categories.

The lab practical, which was held at the University of Wisconsin, included such skills as trimming lambs' feet and evaluating feedsuffs for beef cattle, according to Baker.

ANOTHER CATEGORY required an oral presentation for which the team was given an hour-and-a-half to prepare and was presented to a panel of animal science professors. According to Baker, the AGRs spoke on the topic "How the purebred industry serves the commercial producer."

The final portion of the contest contest and perhaps the most challenging of all was the quiz bowl. In qualifying competition Feb. 16 here at K-State, winning the quiz bowl portion of the Quadrathon contest enabled the AGRs to travel to Chicago.

The quiz bowl consisted of a double elimination format where the members were competing against the other teams in answering questions pertaining to the livestock industry.

"It was a really worthwhile experience to participate in and although this is K-State's first year to be involved, they will probably continue to participate in the future, if the interest continues," Baker said.

"The big benefit is the local competition," Kiracofe said. "The interaction between students and faculty is a real powerful thing. With the amount of interest shown this first year here, next year should really be something," he added.

Faculty advisers for the trip included Kiracofe, Dell Allen, professor of animal science, and Dave Nichols, assistant animal science professor and extension swine specialist.

Bennett urges Republicans to be political 'evangelists'

Today's College Republicans must become more active in politics, according to former Gov. Robert Bennett.

Bennett spoke at a banquet culminating the 1982 College Republican State Convention held Friday and Saturday in the Union.

"It is necessary that we become evangelists for our party," he said. "You can enthuse your college classmates to become more active in political activities. We need that kind of support.

"You have a greater obligation and greater burden. It is not sufficient to attend small group meetings, lick postage stamps and pass out pamphlets," Bennett said.

He impressed upon the members of College Republicans the fact that they can make a difference.

"You and the students have the power of who will be elected," he said. "You do have the opportunity to change the course of events and elect a public official to office."

Bennett also pointed out the increasing awareness of federal control in local and state government.

"If you really want to take government out of your life there are sacrifices to made," he said. "People have been told that there is still a free lunch and they're just now realizing that there are sacrifices to be made and costs to be incurred."

Secretary of State Jack Brier, luncheon guest speaker, echoed similar sentiments.

"We can make a difference," Brier said. "We must continue to expand our speaking to groups and reiterate to everyone our doors are open."

Delegates from Pittsburg State University, Washburn University and K-State participated in the workshops and meetings.

According to Teresa Larson, senior in public relations and pre-law, who coordinated the convention, elections were also held for state officers of College Republicans.

"The convention worked pretty well," said David Lehman, senior in agricultural economics and political science, and previous state chairman. "The program was the best we've had. I was disappointed with the number of delegates we had."

Shuttle

Australia, the astronauts will fire their two medium-sized engines for 2½ minutes.

It will cross over Los Angeles, out of view 30 miles overhead, then over Edwards Air Force Base, to north of Phoenix, across the Continental Divide. It flies over its landing site, 10 miles high, makes an 18-mile U-turn and lands at 220 mph — only 30 miles faster than an airliner.

The equipment brought to Northrup Strip has two purposes. The first is to remove left-over explosive fuels and toxic gases and to cool it. The second is to get the ship ready for a return to Kennedy Space Center where it will be prepared for its fourth and final test launch June 27.

That "turnaround" time is vital to the space agency, which hopes one day to make 24 flights a year, rotating among four ships. Columbia, the only ship in the fleet so far, was readied for its second flight in 183 days, for the third in 130 days and NASA's hope is the fourth will take only 97 days.

Lawmakers support bill to halt annexation plan

By LISA KESSLER
Collegian Reporter

The current status of the controversial bill to ban annexation of Fort Riley by Junction City received much attention at the bi-weekly Eggs and Issues breakfast Saturday morning attended by area legislators.

Ivan Sand (R-Riley) reported that "the Fort Riley situation has been taken to Senate and State federal committees." Sand said that it put a great deal of pressure on the senators. "It is tough to do," he said.

Don Montgomery (R-Sabetha) said the Junction City annexation bill should be adjourned in cooperation with the House. The bill to ban annexation of Fort Riley introduced by Sand has passed the House and is presently in conference committee in the Senate.

LEGISLATORS PRESENT at the breakfast applauded Merrill Werts (R-Junction City) for holding out against pressure from Junction City officials to support annexation.

Werts asked a Senate Federal and State Affairs Committee in Topeka Friday to support the House-passed bill against annexation of the 104,000 acre post. Annexation of he post would increase Junction City's population by approximately 20,000, qualifying the city to receive additional revenue-sharing funds. Surrounding cities claim this would be done at their expense.

The school finance bill, which is currently in conference committee in the Senate, was also discussed at the breakfast.

Denny Burgess (R-Wamego) said "we should have the school board decide on how much to spend, not Topeka. We should focus on the children, not the computer."

Montgomery said there should be a limit on the amount of funds going to wealthy school districts because it would be easy for them to "race ahead. They should put more state dollars in poorer school districts and budget on what the kids need," he said.

The consensus among legislators present was that the House will concur with the Senate, which has removed district budget limitations and cancelled the three-year fiscal projections proposed by the House.

Burgess, a member of the conference committee debating the issue, predicted the House will agree with the Senate early this week.

Joe Knopp (R-Manhattan) said he would probably vote to concur.

In regard to the severance tax bill, Werts said he voted to keep the bill alive, however, two bills have already been killed in the Senate. He said he believes the severance tax is still alive in the Legislature, and that if no results come from the Senate, there will be avenues available in the House to win support for the legislation.

Voting

and hold a population center had been reported.

In Apopa north of San Salvador, soldiers in a second floor classroom fired at guerrillas across fields on two sides of a school as voters huddled in an enclosed courtyard below.

In Ayutuxtepeque, a suburb of San Salvador, Chilean television cameraman Carlos Ruz suffered a serious wound in the neck when he and others were caught in a crossfire, co-workers said. He was hospitalized in the capital.

TWENTY FUEL trucks carrying gasoline to San Miguel, 67 miles east of the capital, were turned back by rebel gunfire for the second time in two days. San Miguel, the country's third largest city, has been without gasoline or electricity for two weeks because of sabotage and fighting in the area.

Two barricades of fallen trees blocked on the coastal highway about three miles west of the Lempa River, where guerrillas blew up a major bridge Oct. 15. AP correspondent Soll Sussman, on the scene, said soldiers who removed the barricades found them boobytrapped with mines, and guerrillas exchanged fire with them as they detonated the mines.

The cities of San Miguel, Santa Ana, San Vicente and La Union were reported quiet, although a hospital official reported four soldiers wounded in fighting outside San Vicente. People in those cities came in from the country by foot, oxcart and election commission truck.

IN ZACATECOLUCA, southeast of the capital, a brass band entertained long lines of voters.

In San Francisco Gotera, capital of the rebel-infested northeastern province of Morazan, residents said a few people voted. They said they heard gunfire for three hours early in the day.

Even in the working-class district of Soyapango, a leftist stronghold east of the capital where a light turnout had been expected, an estimated 10,000 voters lined up. Some women fainted from the heat and crowded conditions

Much of the street fighting in San Salvador was near polling places.

WHERE THERE was no interference, capital residents lined up for blocks, exchanging jokes and pleasantries as they waited for polls to open at 6 a.m. (6 a.m. EST), journalists at the polling places said.

Jorge Bustamante, head of the elections commission, had predicted that about 7 percent of the country would face so much guerrilla activity that balloting could not be held. But that was not expected to interfere with the election of a full number of representatives, because they are apportioned by relatively large districts and some voting was expected in all districts.

THE LEADING OPPOSITION candidate, Roberto d'Aubuisson, charged the election was "totally disorganized" and that ballots and other supplies had failed to arrive in some areas. He accused the Christian Democrats of trying to keep the vote low and justify keeping the junta in power.

About 30 guerrillas took over a school in the San Antonio Abad district of San Salvador for a half-hour before dawn, then were driven off by troops who said they killed 12 guerrillas. Two soldiers died, they said. But the later voter turnout was heavy.

The left boycotted the current election and tried to disrupt it, calling it a "farce" amid civil war.

Cowboys compete in racing, riding, roping

At 8 p.m. Friday the grand entry paraded around the arena. Silence filled the arena when the national anthem was played. Then suddenly the arena exploded with excitement as the first bareback horse of the evening was let out of chute No. 1.

Bareback horses bucked, reared and twisted in wild rage trying to throw the spurring rodeo cowboys from their backs.

Rodeo fans were entertained by cowboys and cowgirls at K-State's national intercollegiate rodeo held in Weber Arena Friday, Saturday and Sunday.

Over 250 competitors from Kansas and Oklahoma colleges entered the rodeo. The cowboys and cowgirls competed for prizes totaling more than $14,000.

The competition was the 26th annual rodeo coordinated and staged by the rodeo club. According to rodeo club president, Scott Van Pelt, the club puts on a rodeo each year to stay in good standing with the National Intercollegiate Rodeo Association and to make money for the club and K-State's rodeo team.

HIGHLIGHTS OF THE rodeo included: bareback riding, calf roping, team roping, saddle bronc riding, steer wrestling, and bull riding for the men's teams. The women's teams competed in barrel racing, breakway roping, goat tying and team roping.

Rodeo clowns Jeff Rutland and Randy Henton were featured at each performance. Dressed in bright colors,oversized Wrangler jeans, accompanied with painted faces, the clowns entertain the audience. But when it comes time for the bull riding, they work at distracting the Bramha bulls to ensure the cowboy's safety after his ride has been completed.

On Friday night, Teri Sellers, senior in elementary education, was crowned the new Miss Rodeo K-State. Competition for this event was held earlier in the week and contestants were judged on horsemanship, appearance and personality.

"I entered the contest because I wanted to get more involved in rodeo," Sellers said.

After winning the title, Seller's official duties include promoting rodeo on the college level throughout Kansas. Winning the contest will enable Sellers to compete for the Miss College Rodeo title at the National College Finals Rodeo to be held this summer in Bozeman, Mont.

Featured in Friday's and Sunday's perfomances were K-State's own calf dressers. The contest was open to all K-State students. "Calves are let loose in the arena and the team that catches and dresses the calf the fastest wins," Van Pelt said.

On Friday the AGR fraternity won the event and the "Not Yet Vets" won Sunday afternoon.

The high point teams for both the men's and women's competition was South Eastern Oklahoma State University.

K-STATE'S TEAM faired well in the competition and had several event placings.

Layne Hier, junior in agriculture education, placed second in calf roping. Jay Domer, freshman in general, placed fourth in calf roping and third in steer wrestling. Joe Peabody, graduate in reproductive physiology, tied for fourth in the saddle bronc event with Jimmy Henson of Panhandle State University. Todd Domer, junior in agriculture journalism, won the first go in team roping with a time of 6.6 seconds. In breakaway roping, Cindy Powell, senior in interior architecture, won the first go with a

A safe dive... K-State's Cary Colbert dives safely into home plate during the opener of a twinbill with the Iowa State Cyclones Sunday afternoon. The Wildcat's split the doubleheader with scores of K-State 17-9, Iowa State 17-11.

Baseball team splits series with Cyclones in league tilt

By MACK McCLURE
Collegian Reporter

K-State baseball team's six-game homestand over the weekend was an open and shut case. The Wildcats put a lid on preseason play sweeping a pair Friday from Concordia College, Minn., then opened the Big Eight season splitting four games with the Iowa State Cyclones Saturday and Sunday.

Sunday was definitely not a day for the pitchers. K-State shelled the Cyclone hurlers for 18 hits in the Wildcats' 17-9 win in the first game. But the situation was reversed in the nightcap as ISU connected for 17 runs on as many hits in a 17-11 triumph.

In the opener, a seven-run outburst in the first inning sealed a win for the Wildcats. Cary Colbert singled in the first two runs of the game, scoring Mark Teague and Glynn Perry.

Colbert was a terror in the six games, driving in 15 runs with three home runs. He batted at a .500 clip, 13 for 26.

Don Grause hit a three-run homer after Colbert's single. It was his second of the year. Scott Pick scored on a wild pitch and Brian Barlow scored when Perry, batting for the second time in the inning, reached first on a fielder's choice.

Iowa State scored once in inning two and twice in the third. Craig Howard's two-run shot accounted for the Cyclones' runs in that inning.

The 'Cats scored five runs in the bottom of the fourth. Highlighting the stanza was Pick's and Jay Kvansnicka's two-run homers.

After three runs crossed the plate for Iowa State in the fifth, K-State answered with two of its own in the bottom of the inning. Colbert jacked his sixth homer of the season over the left field fence. He leads the club in that category. Grause then drew a walk and scored on a wild pitch.

The 'Cats produced three tallies in the sixth to finish their scoring. Teague scored on Goedert's single. Perry and Goedert crossed the plate when Colbert doubled to center field. Colbert went five for six in the opener and drove in six runs.

Mark Gomez, now 3-0 on the year, got the win. He allowed eight runs, seven hits, and walked six. Tony Smith and Dave Schmit pitched in relief for the 'Cats.

ISU started off the second tilt in a fury, scoring three runs in the first, but the Wildcats clawed back with five runs of their own in the bottom of the inning.

Perry, who reached on a fielder's choice, scored on a single by Colbert. Goedert and Colbert crossed the plate when Pick singled to left. Goedert got on by hitting into a fielder's choice. Grause walked, then he and Pick scored on wild pitches by Cyclone pitcher Marty Kilgore.

Perry opened the K-State second inning with a double to center field. He scored when Goedert hit a sacrifice fly to center. Perry now has a 17-game hitting streak going.

Barlow singled after one out and Jeff French walked in the third. Kvasnicka's single to center brought Barlow home. Perry knocked French in with a single.

Iowa State's top inning was the fifth where Jeff Schneeberger clubbed a two-run homer. The Cyclones scored six runs in that inning. The visitors assured themselves of a victory in the seventh when they scored four more runs, for a six-run spread.

"Our pitchers weren't mentally tough. They didn't concentrate," said Wildcat Head Coach Dave Baker of his hurlers in the nightcap. He also noted that the 'Cats faltered at the plate in clutch situations, as twice they left the bases loaded.

Nick Zumsande was the winning pitcher for the Cyclones. Mike Wright was the starting pitcher for K-State. Duane Harms relieved him and took the loss. Schmitz later relieved Harms.

In action Friday, the 'Cats took on Concordia, and swept a doubleheader.

K-State's four-run first inning aided pitcher Scott McClanahan in the Wildcats' 8-3 win over the Cobbers in the first game of their sweep of the doubleheader played Friday night. Cary Colbert smacked a pair of three-run home runs to boost K-State, the host school, to an 11-5 advantage in the nightcap.

Scott McClanahan's win makes his record 1-0. Dan Schroeder of the Cobbers was pinned with the loss with Jon Ahrndt in relief.

In game two, Colbert gave the Wildcats a 3-2 lead after one inning of play when he belted a three-run round tripper. Glynn Perry and Goedert were on base, via base on balls.

The Wildcats made it 9-3 after five. The Cobbers scored twice in the sixth, although the 'Cats did too, making the final count 11-5.

On Saturday K-State kicked off its conference season splitting with the Cyclones.

K-State hurler Louie Trujillo scattered two runs and five hits in the Wildcats 9-2 win over Iowa State in the nightcap of a twinbill played Saturday, at Frank Myers Field. The Cyclones handed K-State a 13-3 setback in the first game.

K-State hits the road for the first time this season for a two-day stint with Oral Roberts University Wednesday and Thursday in Tulsa, Okla.

Louisiana Tech gets past Cheyney in NCAA final

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Louisiana Tech's Janice Lawrence sparked a decisive 26-4 spurt in the first half, leading the topranked Lady Techsters to a 76-62 victory over No.2 Cheyney State in the first NCAA women's basketball championship game Sunday in Norfolk, Va.

Louisiana Tech, 35-1, won last year's AIAW title.

Cheyney State's Lady Wolves overcame Tech's pressure defense for the first nine minutes. They led 20-14 with 10:20 left in the first half, but Tech then penetrated Cheyney's zone defense and took a commanding lead.

Lawrence scored 12 of her 20 points in Tech's key surge, which put Louisiana Tech ahead 40-26 at intermission.

Tech's Debra Rodman tied the score 22-22 with 6:44 remaining in the half by hitting two free throws. Then Kim Mulkey put the Techsters ahead on a fast-break layup.

Cheyney State missed 13 of its last 15 shots in the half.

Cheyney State, 28-3, closed to 50-42 on a driving shot by Valerie Walker with 11:39 left in the game. But Tech maintained control the rest of the way.

The loss ended Cheyney State's 23-game winning streak.

Walker led Cheyney State with 20 points. Debra Walker added 12, and Rosetta Guilford and Yolanda Laney had 10 apiece. Rodman and Pam Kelly each contributed 14 points for Tech.

Louisiana Tech out-rebounded Cheyney State 38-30.

Kelly grabbed 10 rebounds for Tech, while Debra Walker was high for Cheyney with 11.

The Lady Techsters shot 55.6 percent from the floor to 43.1 for Cheyney State.

This is the first year the NCAA has sponsored women's basketball. Many of the nation's top teams switched their affiliation from the AIAW last year.

HARMLESS NATIONAL Guard maneuvers turn into a nightmarish, undeclared war fought by amateur, weekend soldiers in Southern Comfort, (Showing Friday and Saturday, March 26 and 27 in Forum Hall), a drama of survival set in the wintry swamps of Louisiana. When the Guardsmen unknowingly invade Cajun poaching lands, then wildly shoot blanks at the natives as a prank, a terrifying ordeal is triggered in which the Cajuns seek deadly revenge. They kill the Guard leader almost immediately, leaving the others lost in a maze of nearly impenetrable marshy bottomlands, bayous and stagnant bogs, without navigation or communication equipment. Survival is all that matters. The disorganized men slowly turn on each other out of fear, while also trying to escape the avenging swamp dwellers. They seem to be doomed. Keith Carradine (The Long Riders) and Powers Boothe (TV's The Guyana Tragedy), in his major motion picture debut, brilliantly head the cast as two strangers who become friends out of mutual respect as much as necessity. Director Walter Hill (The Warriors, The Long Riders) carries the plot of Southern Comfort to its most suspenseful end, utilizing the eerie swamp, the tension of the men, and their desperate, disintegrating civility to elicit a strong, gut reaction from the audience. The film doesn't miss a beat in its jolting effect—your heart will, though. (126)

Federal credit act gives protection to consumers

Editor's note: Consumer Corner is a project of the Consumer Relations Practicum class.

By JEANNE FAUROT
Contributing Writer

Buy now, pay later.

Americans, more than any other people, live by this motto. Consumer credit, promising to pay in the future for some things received now, touches us all. We get a loan to buy a car and we charge the gas it runs on. We charge everything from meals to trips. Credit is a convenience. Ironically, this convenience was denied to more than half the population on the basis of their sex until 1975. Those people were women.

Consumer Corner

To allow women and other minorities equal opportunities in the credit market, Congress passed the Equal Credit Opportunity Act, which went into effect Oct. 28, 1975. The major provision of the act prohibits credit discrimination on the basis of sex, marital status, race, color, religion, national origin or age. Banks, finance companies, department stores and all those who regularly extend credit are controlled by this act.

MEN AND WOMEN are protected equally under the law but many provisions specifically protect women. The act states specifically that creditors may not do the following on credit or loan applications:

— Ask the applicant's sex, unless it is a loan to build or buy a home.

— Request an applicant to use Miss, Mrs. or Ms. before her name. In some cases, creditors can ask if she is married, separated or unmarried.

— Ask about personal birth control practices or childbearing plans or make assumptions concerning them.

In the past, creditors discouraged married women from seeking credit in their own name by turning them down or requiring their husbands to co-sign the loan or account. Under the Equal Credit Opportunity Act, women are allowed to get credit in their own name based on their own credit worthiness. This does not mean a duplicate credit card on their husband's account.

JUST AS CREDITORS cannot ask the applicant's sex or marital status on most credit applications, they cannot deny credit on the same basis. The act allows women to choose to use their maiden name, husband's name or a combination on accounts or loans. The act also states that creditors cannot:

— Fail to count income from steady part-time employment. The creditor must count all income, including alimony and child support, if the applicant chooses to disclose the amount.

— Consider whether the applicant has a phone listing in her own name. This discriminates against married women.

— Require a husband to co-sign his wife's account or loan if she is credit worthy unless property rights are involved.

— Ask for information about a woman's husband or ex-husband if she applies for credit on the basis of her income unless it includes alimony, child support or maintenance payments. This does not apply in the community property state or when the husband is going to use the account.

WOMEN ARE ALSO protected by the act from discrimination due to a change in marital status. The act states that creditors cannot require reapplication for credit due to divorce, widowhood or marriage. Also, it is illegal to close or change the terms of an account on these grounds unless a change in credit worthiness can be proved.

Creditors are required to consider the history of accounts a woman held with her husband. If a woman can show it reflects her credit worthiness, creditors must consider an account in her husband's name. It is the woman's responsibility to prove the record does not reflect her credit worthiness if it is unfavorable. If both husband and wife use and are responsible for an account, reports to credit bureaus on the account must be made in both names.

If a woman takes out a credit account solely for herself using her own income, then a credit agency cannot delve into her husband's financial situation before granting that credit. Establishing one's own credit history is the best protection against discrimination stemming from a partner's actions.

The Equal Credit Opportunity Act also states that a credit applicant must be notified within 30 days whether the application has been accepted or denied. If it was denied, the notice must be in writing and specify the reasons for denial or inform the applicant of his right to request the information. The same rights apply when an account is closed. If a person thinks he has been discriminated against by a creditor, he has recourse under the act. An individual can sue for actual and punitive damages up to $10,000 if the violation was intentional. Violations of the act should be reported to the Federal Trade Commission.

Rodeo

time of 2.7 seconds.

Rodeo competitors entertained near full house crowds at each performance.

"The rodeo was bigger and better this year than ever," said Bob Clore, assistant professor of art and rodeo club faculty adviser. The success of the rodeo is due primarily to the seemingly better coordination between the rodeo club, coaches and advisers, according to Clore.

This year's rodeo chairman was Brian Keith, junior in animal science. "The job of chairman requires a lot of hard work and time," Van Pelt said. Planning for the rodeo started as early as October and all work was done by rodeo club members, according to Van Pelt.

For the first time, Sunday's performance of the rodeo was taped to be televised on KTWU channel 11 at a later date, Van Pelt said.

Union health fair offers chance to check on physical condition

Lots of nights in Aggieville, all-nighters and junk food may be enjoyable but may also play havoc on your good health.

Students, faculty and staff can check up on their health at the Health Fair from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. Wednesday in the Union Ballroom.

"The Health Fair will provide basic health screening tests, health education and awareness and information about local health and social resources," said Cindy Culver, health educator at Lafene Student Health Center.

The Health Fair is free and participants may go to as many or as few of the screening stations as they would like, according to Culver.

The areas of health screening include height and weight screening, blood pressure measurement and analysis and a finger prick blood test for anemia.

Vision and glaucoma testing will be done by two Manhattan optometrists. If glaucoma is detected at an early stage, preventive measures can be taken to combat the disease, according to Culver.

Smokers and non-smokers can take advantage of the pulmonary function screening to find out their breathing capacity. This test will be conducted by a respiratory therapist from St. Mary Hospital.

The Department of Health, Physical Education and Recreation (HPER) will administer the bike test to determine cardiovascular fitness. HPER will also conduct the skinfold test to measure the percentage of body fat.

Dental screening will be done to check for oral disease or oral cancer. It will not include checking for cavities, according to Culver.

"Each station is optional and participants may choose which ones to attend. If they attend all of the stations it will take 45 minutes to one hour to go through it," Culver said.

Following health screenings, participants will have personalized health assessment interviews to review the results of the screening and point out possible problem areas, according to Culver.

The Health Fair is not intended to replace a physical examination by a physician but is specifically designed for promotion and prevention through early detection of potential health problems or diseases, Culver said.

The K-State Health Fair is part of National Health Fair Week (March 27-April 4) and is sponsored by Lafene Student Health Center.

Explosion on French train kills five

LIMOGES, France (AP) — A bomb exploded aboard an express train racing through the hilly countryside near Limoges Monday night, gutting one car and killing at least five passengers. Officials speculated that it was either a terrorist attack or an accidental explosion of a terrorist bomb.

Twelve people were injured, two of them seriously.

French television said police believed explosives being transported by terrorists may have blown up accidentally. The broadcast said authorities were questioning a young woman passenger.

An official at the Limoges prefecture (regional authority) described the explosion as "a terrorist attack." There was no immediate claim of responsibility.

The blast hit the second car of the 15-car train about 15 miles northeast of the city of Limoges on a regular Paris-Toulouse run.

A spokesman for the state-owned railroad network SNCF said the train, a favorite of businessmen, could carry 450 people. But he did not know how many were aboard on a quiet Monday night.

A journalist, Simone Jorand, estimated there were 300 to 400 passengers.

The spokesman, who in accordance with French custom refused to be identified, said he did not know immediately whether any foreigners were aboard the Capitole express.

Jorand said the train was traveling at 85 to 100 mph and the engineer was unable to stop it for more than a mile after the explosion.

She said the train did not derail, but stopped in a deep cutting, and the 200 rescuers had to walk more than half a mile along the tracks to reach the wreckage. Debris blocked both tracks and halted all traffic between Limoges and Chateauroux.

About three hours after the explosion at 9.30 p.m. (1:30 p.m. CST), a railway spokesman said the wrecked car was about to be towed to the nearby station of Ambazac — an indication that no more passengers were believed trapped in the wreckage.

El Salvador scrambles for coalition

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — The centrist Christian Democrats and their extreme-right challengers, both falling short of a majority in El Salvador's election, scrambled for coalition partners Monday to govern the war-weary country.

The U.S. ambassador called together leaders of all six parties that participated in Sunday's election in an apparent bid to build harmony for a common front against leftist guerrillas.

Seventy miles southeast of here, leftist guerrillas pressed their bloody siege of the city of Usulutan, in one of the biggest attacks of the 2½-year-old conflict. At least four soldiers were reported killed Monday.

THE REAGAN administration, meanwhile, sent a new signal on negotiations to end the civil war.

Secretary of State Alexander Haig said in Washington the constituent assembly elected here Sunday should "hold out the hand of conciliation" to leftist guerrillas who are ready to join in the democratic process in this Central American nation.

The White House, noting the apparently large voter turnout, hailed the election as a "victory for the people" and a defeat for the guerrillas, who had sought futilely to disrupt the balloting.

The left had boycotted the election, saying its candidates would have been risking assassination by El Salvador's right-wing "death squads."

ARCH-CONSERVATIVE Roberto d'Aubuisson said hours after the meeting with Hinton that his Republican Nationalist Alliance (ARENA) and the four other opposition parties had agreed to a coalition, and claimed victory.

"We have won! We have won!" he told a jubilant crowd at his party's headquarters while Roman candles whooshed and exploded and his supporters occasionally fired their weapons into the air.

But National Conciliation Party spokesmen said no decision had been made on a coalition and said none would be until the party's 10-member executive council met, possibly Tuesday.

"What d'Aubuisson says is his problem," said Dr. Armando Rodriguez Eguizabal. "No decision has been taken. We haven't met. There is nothing now."

D'AUBUISSON CLAIMED the opposition parties had united at noon — an apparent reference to the luncheon meeting with U.S. Ambassador Deane Hinton.

"We are a majority and we're going to fulfill the desire of the people," d'Aubuisson said.

He did not explain how such a calculation could be made or announced with only about one-fourth of the polling places reporting.

As returns continued to come in Monday, the major parties' shares of the vote held steady. The Christian Democrats of Jose Napoleon Duarte, president of the current

Shuttle's record flight longer than anticipated

WHITE SANDS MISSILE RANGE, N.M. (AP) — Columbia, diverted from landing and still in orbit, will try again Tuesday in a suspenseful third-flight finale that could force the shuttle to bypass sand-blown Northrup Strip and return nonstop to Florida.

The runway there: 15,000 feet of concrete surrounded by a moat.

Columbia has never made a paved-runway landing, but the alternative is another try at wind-whipped Northrup, and NASA officials were pessimistic that conditions would improve.

In space, 141 miles above Earth, astronauts Jack R. Lousma and C. Gordon Fullerton, were in fine fettle with plenty of food, fuel and power.

It was the first time in 20 years of space flight that a landing was scrubbed. Kennedy Space Center, at Cape Canaveral, is NASA's third-choice for Flight 3. The main runway in California is waterlogged and out of service.

Equipment at Northrup Strip, hastily assembled to handle a shuttle landing, may have suffered some damage from the winds but the gusts still were too strong to make an assessment at midday.

Alex Paczynski, a NASA official at White Sands, said an opportunity to land at Northrup at 8:33 a.m. (CST) on the 128th orbit "looks like the preferred target. That would give us ample time to look at the runways, assess the damage and repair them if they are repairable."

AT THE SCHEDULED TIME of landing Monday, as they passed over New Mexico, Lousma said "it's pretty gusty looking down there ... I guess we kind of agree with your decision for today."

Capcom Brewster Shaw replied: "The vis (visibility) on the surface is about zero. The last gust report we got was 48 knots," a vigorous 55 mph.

Columbia was less than an hour and a half from its landing — and minutes from firing its engines to leave orbit — when the decision was made.

John Young, commander on the first space shuttle, flew a wind-testing mission and reported he couldn't see the end of the runway. First he recommended a shift in runways, then said, "I think we ought to knock this off."

THE ASTRONAUTS WERE out of radio range at the time. They were told a few minutes later, at 12:02 p.m. (CST). They were supposed to land at 1:27 p.m.

Then NASA's Jack Riley announced from Mission Control in Houston:

"The probabilities are high the space shuttle will land at Kennedy Space Center, which is forecast to have the best weather. While here in the control center, flight planning is getting under way for a landing at KSC, we will continue to watch the weather at Northrup because we prefer to land at Northrup if at all possible."

Before attempting a touchdown on a paved surface, the space agency had wanted to get the experience of four landings on wide-open desert runways — at the prime site, Edwards Air Force Base in California, or the backup Northrup Strip.

But the Rogers Dry Lake floor at Edwards still is too wet from early-March rains and Northrup's winds could be just as bad Tuesday as they were Monday.

THAT LEAVES THE 15,000-foot runway at Kennedy, which will be used routinely when the shuttle makes for-hire flights into space when it is operational after Flight 4.

The last minute wave-off was a dramatic anti-climax to the space shuttle's longest and most strenuous test.

Lousma and Fullerton had already donned pressure suits for descent when Mission Control told them "there is some probability of a wave-off."

But, the astronauts were told, "We don't anticipate that."

Winds were gaining strength, however, and Mission Control said, "We will have to watch it all the way to the de-orbit burn." If that engine firing had occurred, the descent would have been irreversible.

House panel to consider appropriations bill

TOPEKA — Making a solid start Monday, the House Ways and Means Committee will consider and possibly act today on an appropriations bill for state universities and the Board of Regents.

The funding measure already has passed the Senate.

Of particular interest today, the committee will consider a subcommittee report which recommends the deletion of a $1.5 million salary enrichment fund for unclassified employees, as provided by the Senate in the board's budget.

That money was inserted in the Senate during floor debate to be spent at the discretion of the Boar of Regents to pay better salaries to certain key faculty, such as engineering instructors, who are being lured away by private industry.

The committee adopted subcommittee reports on K-State and its Veterinary Medical Center, Emporia State and Wichita State Monday, making changes that had minor effects on the $286 million budget approved by the Senate.

It also concurred wuth Senate recommendations to provide average 7.5 percent salary increases for faculty members, a 6 percent increase in other operating expenditures of all institutions, assess unclassified salary shrinkage at past rates, continue the enrollment adjustment procedure adopted by the Legislature last year, and not to fund tuition fee waivers for graduate teaching assistants.

Senators recommend stricter DWI penalties

WASHINGTON — Vowing a nationwide crackdown on drunken drivers, the Senate Commerce Committee on Monday recommended the automatic, 90-day suspension of driver's licenses of all first-time offenders who fail chemical sobriety tests.

The committee approved the legislation unanimously, sending it to the full Senate for action.

Those convicted of drunken driving twice within a five-year period would receive mandatory jail terms of at least 48 hours under the proposal, a set of voluntary minimum standards for all states to follow.

States heeding the minimum standards or enacting tougher drunken-driving laws would be rewarded in increased federal highway safety funding under the bill sponsored by Sens. Claiborne Pell (D-R.I.) and John Danforth, (R-Mo.).

"Our legislation will establish a strong national deterrent to reduce the senseless and tragic loss of life caused by drunk drivers," Pell said.

Haitians die when freighter capsizes

HIGHLAND BEACH, Fla. — The bodies of two Haitian women were washed up on a beach here Monday from a freighter that had capsized in the rough Atlantic. High seas, stiff winds and poor visibility forced officials to stop searching the ocean for two others missing.

Six survivors struggled to shore through 10-foot waves after their vessel capsized sometime before midnight Sunday. One man was hospitalized for exposure and the others were sent to a refugee camp.

Mike Kelley, a Coast Guard spokesman, said no distress signals or radio messages were received from the Esperancia, a motorized, wooden-hulled freighter.

"There probably wasn't even a radio on board, unfortunately," he said. "Our first warning that something was wrong was when the survivors swam ashore."

Federal officials said they were trying to determine whether the 70-foot vessel was on a cargo mission or if it carried illegal Haitian refugees.

Centerfolds appear in Wards catalogs

CHICAGO — A couple of Montgomery Ward customers have opened their new spring-summer catalogs to the women's jean section and found a model looking back — no jeans, just the model.

The unauthorized entry was the centerfold of the March issue of Playboy magazine — 21-year-old Karen Witter of Long Beach, Calif. — who was wearing only a a tiny, silver pendant around her neck.

Her picture, between pages 80 and 81, apparently got there by accident or efforts of an imaginative employee at the W.H. Hall Printing Co. of Chicago, which binds both Ward's catalog and Playboy magazine, according to Ward's spokesman Charles H. Thorne.

"Somebody apparently dropped a few of the centerfolds into a binding pocket as a prank — or possibly it was an accident," Thorne said in an interview Monday.

"We put out about 6 million copies of the catalog," he said. "As far as we know the centerfold appeared in only two of the catalogs."

The customers were both families in the Minneapolis-St. Paul area.

Thorne said that when the families notified the company, a representative offered to exchange the centerfold catalogs for new copies.

He said one family exchanged its catalog, "but the other family preferred to keep the one with the centerfold as a souvenir."

Parking proposal increases problem

Parking. It is currently one of the biggest problems on this campus. Why then is a proposal being considered that would allow freshmen to park on campus when there is not enough parking space for upperclassmen and faculty?

The Traffic and Parking Council recently passed a proposal providing for a 100 percent parking fee permit increase, down from the former 200 percent increase proposed. But the proposal will also allow freshmen to park on campus. If approved by the Board of Regents the proposal will go into effect this fall.

This provision for freshmen parking on campus is ludicrous. We already have a huge parking problem. This problem is spilling over into the city, causing streets around campus to be overcrowded by parked cars.

Allowing freshmen to park on campus will increase the number of vehicles in town which will only complicate the existing parking and traffic problems. It will encourage freshmen to bring their cars to campus when they might otherwise wait a year.

The overabundance of cars on campus will cause more overflow onto the city's streets, which could eventually lead to more restrictions such as those imposed by the city commission for the streets east of campus. It is not unimaginable for relations between the city and the campus to become strained as a result of the overcrowded parking situation.

Solving K-State's parking problem is a difficult task. The Traffic and Parking Council, Gene Cross and President Acker have worked very hard to come up with a fair proposal to raise necessary revenue. Allowing freshmen to park on campus, however, is not the answer.

Abortion is apathetic

Editor,

The problem with thinking that abortion is an expression of concern is that this philosophy stems from the belief that abortion is the solution to overpopulation, suffering, starvation, child-abuse and sexual inequality.

Birth never causes suffering and starvation. The cause is that world resources are controlled by and concentrated on a smaller number of people. Abortion is merely a way to sweep these problems under the rug. That is not concern, that is apathy.

If you had true concern for humanity you would strive to solve these problems at their roots.

Representation for all

Editor,

Recently I stopped at the Maranatha table in the Union and had a conversation which roughly went like this:

Me: That's a pretty interesting sign, "One government". You aren't suggesting that the church should supplant democratic rule, are you?

Maranatha representative: Supplant? I want the government to submit itself to God.

Me: Then what's going to happen to the rest of us?

Maranatha representative: If you get in God's way he may kill you. He's killed a lot of people.

Me: I'm more interested in what you might do. Don't you think the government can represent all of the citizens instead of enforcing the doctrine of a few of them?

Maranatha representative: You'd have to be two steps from a fool to think this government could represent both of us.

I relate this conversation to illustrate my basic disagreement with the new religious right. Where as I would like our government to try to keep our various pluralistic groups from hurting each other too much, they seem to want the government to pick a side and join the fray.

If it's spring, this must be baseball

Ah, spring is here. And a young man's fancies are supposed to turn to — love?

Sorry, all you incurable romantics out there. Spring has very little to do with love and/or romance. The true meaning of spring is to be found on the playing fields of Arizona, Florida and in one case, California.

For these fields are where the major league baseball teams are now participating in one of the most hallowed of yearly rituals in the serious world of pro sports — spring training.

Baseball, although it owes its roots to the English games of rounders and cricket, is a truly American sport. There is nothing more enjoyable than spending a warm summer afternoon at the ball park. Hot dogs, beer, fresh air, Ladies' Day — what else is there to life?

EVEN THE occasional appearance of the ubiquitous Chicken doesn't make it any less pleasant.

Oh, some of the purists out there say such events detract from the game. But that is what makes each baseball game special. Where else in this world can you pay the price of admission, and then never really know how long the contest will last.

Of course, if it lasts less than five innings due to acts of God, you'll get another chance. If it lasts more than five innings — but less than nine — you're out of luck.

There is also the chance that you may never leave. Extra innings. What a great idea! During those lengthy games you might have to call your loved ones to make sure they don't put out a missing person's report when you don't show up for breakfast the next morning.

AND WHAT OTHER entertainment value offers two for the price of one — doubleheaders. In this case, you know you're in for about six hours of entertainment — at least. Unless of course one (or both) of the games go into extra innings. Then the sky's the limit.

Some of the non-afficionados may not see the charm of this seemingly slow-moving and, dare I say it, boring sport.

Well little do they know.

Others might wonder at the fan's fascination for watching grown men play what is really a children's playground game.

Or as a friend described it, "men running around in their pajamas."

Just as it takes a trained eye to appreciate the ballet, or a trained ear to appreciate opera, one must be well-schooled in the fundamentals of baseball to truly appreciate its intricacies.

A MISSED SIGN can spell disaster. A pitcher makes a mistake of two or three inches and the ball ends up in the seats. The manager replaces the number one batter with a pinch hitter who is batting .125, and he knocks in the winning run.

What about the big inning theory? Does pitching really win pennants?

Baseball is, in its basic form, a gambler's game. Not for the amount of money wagered on the games but in the execution itself. Strategy is based on odds, odds which come from the mountains of statistics compiled by baseball fanatics across the country. Second guessing the manager is as much a part of the game as cheering for the home team.

And, like gambling for money, it can be habit-forming.

Baseball is probably as addictive, if not more so, than video games. And with the advent of cable television, it is even more accessible.

Just think, once the season starts, there are innumerable opportunities for a baseball junkie to overdose.

There are Chicago Cubs' games, Atlanta Braves' games, Kansas City Royals' games, NBC's Game of the Week, ABC's Monday Night Baseball and USA's Thursday Night Baseball. Not only that, but the Braves' and the USA presentations are replayed in the wee hours for the night owls.

Ah, spring is here at last!

Outdoor amphitheater moves toward reality

By PETE MANFREDO
Collegian Reporter

The dreams of an amphitheatre on the east side of the Union have moved one step closer to reality.

Preliminary plans for the structure were approved by the University Amphitheatre committee on March 23, Walt Smith, Union director, said.

According to the proposed plan developed by Robert Page, associate professor of landscape architecture, the character of the area will be one of natural space instead of a paved plaza.

"It's a difficult space to work in," Page said. "There are trees and utilities in the area that complicate everything. It's the size of a backyard space, which makes it a challenge to work on."

The plan calls for a multi-level stage area, approximately 10 feet by 20 feet, composed of limestone slabs. The stage will have a background of large native cedars and a foreground of a small pool, similar to a natural spring.

THE SEATING AREA would be a sloping lawn which should have a seating/reclining capacity of 140 people and a standing capacity of 250 to 300 people. The lawn area would have several large limestone outcroppings for seating. A lower walk area, also limestone, would edge the pool and lawn area.

The entire area would be surrounded by a low limestone wall and evergreen trees. The wall would serve as a handrail for the steps and protect the planted area from foot traffic generated by performances. The wall and trees will also block some noise.

"We wanted to come up with a pleasant space to be in when there's no performances also," Page said.

The proposed plan retains the existing sidewalks and street. Handicap access to the upper level is provided by a ramp at the north end and to the lower level at the south end. Controlled access for ticketed events is provided by two entrances and by the low wall and evergreen trees.

THE AREA to be developed consists of approximately 6,000 square feet, according to the plan. Construction costs are estimated at $23,000, or $3.83 per square foot. According to Page, a public outdoor space built to accommodate frequent large numbers of users will normally have a budget in the range of $7.50 to $10 per square foot.

In the proposal, Page said the Union should consider increasing the budget to be able to develop the facility properly. He added that if more money was available he would recommend using limestone for the sidewalks and steps instead of concrete in order to create a "nicer effect."

Page also said it was not considered feasible to develop the area to accomodate an overflow audience.

While Page is working on the final plans, approval from the University Long Range Planning Committee and President Duane Acker will be sought.

SMITH SAID if the plans are drawn and accepted soon, the facility could be built this summer and be ready for use by fall.

The people selected for the committee were chosen because they will be responsible for programming and maintaining the amphitheater. This group includes members of the Union Program Council (UPC), Union Governing Board and Student Senate.

"These people have done an excellent job," Smith said. "We've had a lot of good suggestions by the committee and we've tried to act on all of them."

The amphitheater would provide an outdoor area for use during warmer months for UPC events, lectures, discussions, movies, or activities normally held in the Union Courtyard, according to Smith.

The estimated facility development costs for the amphitheater totaled $25,000. The senior classes of 1975, 1976, 1977, 1979 and 1980 may donate a total of $4,000 to help meet the construction costs of the amphitheater.

Reagan proposes plan to aid housing industry

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan proposed Monday a modest assistance program for the depressed housing industry that offers regulatory relief but rejects any "budget-busting bailouts."

In a speech at the same hotel where he was shot a year ago today, Reagan asked the National Association of Realtors to support his economic plan, which he said was the only source of long-term relief for the industry.

"In your communities and in the Congress, spread the word that you have faith in these programs," he pleaded.

Reagan said "budget-busting bailouts will only aggravate the interest rate problem — the underlying problem in the housing industry."

He did not mention a proposal by Sen. Richard G. Lugar (R-Ind.) to provide mortgage aid to homebuyers at a cost of $1 billion a year for five years. Deputy White House press secretary Larry Speakes said Reagan was "still studying" the proposal.

Even the White House, in a fact sheet, said the relief program offered by the president was "modest." Reagan said the regulatory changes had been recommended by his Cabinet-level task force on short-term housing needs.

That task force also considered and rejected suggestions by the Department of Housing and Urban Development to provide various government subsidies to help the industry, according to administration sources.

Task force representatives from the Office of Management and Budget, the Treasury Department and the Council of Economic Advisers all opposed such subsidies as being against Reagan's free market philosophy as well as expensive.

The actions Reagan announced Monday will:

— Extend FHA home loan eligibility to allow relatives to help make a down payment on a home..

— Permit expanded housing investment by private pension funds.

— Ease regulations to permit real estate agents to offer such services as title insurance.

— Relax regulation of mortgage revenue bonds to enable 50,000 more homebuyers to get mortgages at lower cost.

Reagan left no doubt that he believed long-term solutions to the industry's problems will come only through his economic program, though he rejected blame for the state of the economy.

'Aggies' grow closer during week's events

It was a busy time for the aggies on campus this past week.

March 23 marked the beginning of agriculture week with an international agriculture exhibit in the union. Activities concluded Sunday at the agriculture awards assembly.

The purpose of agriculture week, sponsored by Agriculture Council, is to foster a closer working relationship with students in the College of Agriculture, departmental clubs and create more unity in the college, according to Larry Erpelding, assistant director of the college.

Events for the week were all put on by clubs and organizations in the College of Agriculture.

The Agronomy Club sponsored a hay-bale throwing contest.

"We decided to participate in agriculture week to get more people involved in the program," Darrel Blakeslee, senior in agronomy, said.

WHILE MANY SEASONED bale buckers were throwing with all their might, Julianne Cummings, junior in interior design, tossed a bale of straw 14.3 feet. Women in the contest were allowed to substitute straw for the hay.

"A friend of mine asked me to do it," Cummings said, "This is the first time I have ever picked up a bale of straw."

Ken Henton, freshman in agriculture economics, finished first in the over-140 pound division of the hay bale throwing with a throw of 26 feet. In the 140 pound and under division, C.J. Schrick, sophomore in agriculture mechanization, threw his bale 21.7 feet to capture first place. In the women's competition, Marla Sites, sophomore in general, and Verneda Edwards, graduate student, placed first and second respectively.

Earlier in the day, the Collegiate 4-H Club sponsored a tractor weight guessing contest. Interested students guessed for more than an hour. After the weight guessing was finished, a pull-the-tractor contest was held.

Winning the contest was the team consisting of Dwight Call and Charlie Kraus, both freshmen in agriculture. In the tractor weight guessing contest, Betsy Perry and Scott Brooks, seniors in milling science and management, tied for first place with guesses of 2,734 pounds, which happened to be the exact weight of the tractor.

AS A PART OF Ag Week the Dairy Science Club had Wilma the cow in front of Seaton Hall on Friday. Wilma mooed and ate hay all day while students tried to guess howmuch she weighed.

"We had people guess from 680 pounds to more than a ton," Michell Weingartner, freshman in general, said.

Jim Stewart, junior in animal science, won the contest with a guess of 1,445 pounds, only one pound away from Wilma's actual weight of 1,444 pounds.

Throughout the week the Union hosted displays from several different clubs in the College of Agriculture. The first display, on international agriculture, opened on March 23.

"This year we tried new things like the international exhibit so that more people could become aware of agriculture in other countries," said Bob Larson, Ag Week chairman and sophomore in animal science.

OTHER DISPLAYS ranged from agriculture economics to the Agriculture Communicators of Tommorrow photo contest.

On Sunday, Ag Week concluded with the annual awards assembly.

During the assembly, Anita Conley, sophomore in animal science, was crowned Miss Agriculture K-State. As Miss Agriculture, Conley will serve as official public relations representative of the College of Agriculture. She is required to attend several functions for the college and make other appearances for agriculture-related areas.

Conley, who represented the Block and Bridle club in the contest, said she will enjoy her reign as Miss Agriculture since she enjoys being with and meeting people.

According to Larson, Ag Week serves to show the professionalism of agriculture. In addition, the week helps to educate non-agriculture people about agricultural concerns and opportunities, he said.

Future challenges farming methods

By TIM MORSE
Collegian Reporter

The agriculture situation may be unstable now, but the future is still bright, Barry Flinchbaugh, professor of agricultural economics, said.

Flinchbaugh spoke on "Farm Policy" in Throckmorton Hall Saturday in conjunction with Ag Science Day.

"There are a lot of pessimists around today, and not very many optimists. But you know, an optimist and a pessimist see the same when they look at the world," Flinchbaugh said. "However, the pessimist discovers problems and burdens. If you are an optimist when this decade is over you will conclude that it was a great time to be alive."

Flinchbaugh said he believes the problems of the future will be more challenging than those even of the "Great Depression."

"Agriculture is just beginning its third revolution," he said. "The first revolution in agriculture occurred when man learned to cultivate the land and husband the animals in an organized fashion. The second revolution in agriculture occurred when we moved from animal power to machine power."

FLINCHBAUGH DESCRIBED the third revolution as a movement from many small farms to larger corporate farms. Several times throughout his lecture he commented he did not always like his predictions, but that he was only telling the story as he sees it. Flinchbaugh said these corporate farms may be family-based, but not be necessarily so.

1980 statistics show approximately 2.3 million farms in America, but those figures are misleading, Flinchbaugh said. Under the U.S. Department of Agriculture standards and definitions of a farm, "my mother-in-law's garden qualifies," he said.

To be a qualified farmer, one must produce $1,000 worth of farm goods. That 2.3 million farm figure is useless, according to Flinchbaugh, because it does not tell anything about agricultural policy and where it is leading to in the future.

To bring some meaning to those statistics, Flinchbaugh said the 2.3 million farms needs to be divided up into categories. One category includes 60 percent of the food produced by only 10 percent of the farm population. That is an excess of $100,000 worth of farm products per year per farm. He said that 30 percent of the farmers produce 85 percent of the food.

FLINCHBAUGH SAID that as long as farms are all treated the same regardless of structure, there will be difficulty in meeting adequate needs for individuals. That is why corporate farms will have the advantage in the future, he said.

"If the current trends continue, I don't think there is any question that 95 percent of our food supply will be produced by 300,000 farm units by the year 2000," Flinchbaugh said.

The "essential farm policy question of the future" is who will be in control? he said. His opinion is the family-based farm, farm corporations and a few giant food producing and processing firms will control agribusiness.

The structure of agriculture in the year 2000 is not going to be determined by economics, according to Flinchbaugh. He said most Kansas farmers are efficient but that will not determine whether they make it, but that politics will.

"The key to successful politics for the American farmer is to learn to practice the politics of the potent minority. Why do I say potent? Because it's producing food and that makes it potent," he said.

FLINCHBAUGH SAID today's agriculture needs a few policy rules. First, he said, agriculture should be viewed issue by issue rather than philosophy by philosophy. Second, he stressed the need to build coalitions and broaden consumer relations. He said producers and consumers need to find out what they have in common and compromise.

When consumers prosper they buy more products and when producers prosper they produce more products, he said. That is the connection, he added.

Flinchbaugh urged people not to become too politically "tight" with any party if they want to practice politics of the minority to their advantage.

"I'm 99 percent convinced that the 1981 farm bill was the beginning of the end of commodity programs. I doubt very much we will have commodity programs in the year 2000. I think the 1981 farm bill was the beginning of the weaning process," Flinchbaugh said.

Competition between agricultural and urban users of water will be the controversy by the year 2000, he said. "If we (agriculture) don't get our act together, if we don't practice the politics of the minority, that one we'll lose."

Flinchbaugh said there will be a need for dedicated agricultural people, but not so much on the farm. "It's going to take the best brains possible to feed all those people. We need people in ag-related areas," he said.

Other speakers Saturday included David Mugler, assistant dean and director of resident instruction, who spoke about "Today's College of Agriculture and You;" Charles Marr, professor of extention horticulture, spoke about "Growing Groceries." Charles Norton, professor of animal science, gave a travelogue on central European agriculture.

Rubber replaces gas in tractor pull

By TIM MORSE
Collegian Reporter

The Farmall spun its wheels from the starting point. Its tires grabbed for traction, and the front wheels nearly left the track.

Participants appeared pleased with the pull but anxiously awaited another turn. Nearly 100 spectators let out sighs of satisfaction and applauded the effort.

Sound like a fuel-powered tractor pull? No, it was the first annual rubber-band powered model tractor performance contest in Throckmorton Hall Saturday afternoon in conjunction with Ag Week activities.

The pull was organized by the Agricultural Mechanization Club. The meet allowed any junior or senior high school students, as well as an open class of college students, to participate.

Ed McQueen, senior in agricultural mechanization, said few non-college students replied to the invitation sent through Future Farmers of America mailings, but K-State students filled the void in participating in the new event.

THE CONTEST RULES mandated two No. 64 B.F. Goodrich Hylux rubber bands to power the model tractors during the tug. The rubber bands are tightened in such a fashion as to propel the wheels into motion and thus pull the weight dragged behind the tractor from the drawbar.

Any model tractor could be used, or a homemade tractor could be built as long as it met the required measurements and weights. The tractors pulled weights from 50 to 1,600 grams, and the weight choice was left up to the participants.

The judge tallied each participant's pull by multiplying the grams tugged by the distance in centimeters traveled by the tractor.

Some of the tractors had a positive track — a single rear axle that requires both the wheels to turn simultaneously — but others had independently turning wheels. The style used for propulsion varied from tractor to tractor, but all of the models had pulleys or spools to carry the rubber bands on track and aid the toy through a smooth run.

The tractors were required to stay within a specified track so steering was an important factor. Some of the contestants were penalized for tractors going out of bounds.

Paul Schmidt's, senior in agricultural mechanization, tractor led the tug in the first of three trial runs with a score of 40,498. His tractor pulled 472 grams that go-round and led the rest of the field by more than 2,700 points. He retained the lead with the "White-2-135" in the second trial, also with a score of 38,170.

THE THIRD AND final round, however, belonged to Darrel Blakeslee, senior in agronomy. He won the meet with a great, last-minute surge of a mere 272 grams, but his distance out-matched his competitors' and he went on to take the championship title with 45,614 points, using a Farmall tractor.

Schmidt won second place with his White and best pull of 42,244. Third place went to Kim Claassen, sophomore in agricultural mechanization, with 38,162 points. Claassen was the only contestant to enter a homemade model and conceded to a last minute construction job.

A special award went to Jeff Brockhoff, freshman in agricultural mechanization, for the "best engineered" tractor, an Allis Chalmers. The winner, Blakeslee, will enter his model in the national pull in Chicago.

The contestants received trophies for the first three places and the "best engineered" tractor. A Wamego farm equipment firm donated the trophies to the club.

Would-be assassin awaits trial date

WASHINGTON (AP) — One year ago John W. Hinckley Jr. was captured, gun in hand, in what appeared to be an open-and-shut case of a would-be presidential assassin.

Why then, is this 26-year-old, one-time drifter who almost killed a president to gain the attention of film star Jodie Foster still in a military stockade awaiting trial?

It isn't an easy case, even though the only issue is Hinckley's sanity at the time he shot President Reagan and three other men on March 30, 1981.

Government and defense psychiatrists spent four months probing Hinckley's mind so they could form opinions on his criminal responsibility for the shootings.

Lawyers for both sides have spent half a year arguing over complex constitutional issues that caused an indefinite postponement of the trial in U.S. District Court. No trial date has been set.

The wheels of justice have turned slowly in criminal case 81-306.

SOME LEGAL EXPERTS say the wait is necessary. They say time is needed, both to safeguard Hinckley's constitutional rights and to give the government the opportunity to bring its best evidence to trial.

"If all the efforts had been to ramrod the case through in 60 days, I would have been troubled," said B.J. George Jr., a professor at the New York Law School.

Added American Bar Association staff member Richard Lynch:

"Everyone involved had tried to see to it that Mr. Hinckley is most adequately protected, that his rights are being pursued. Everybody is being extremely careful and that explains part of the delay."

Sanity main issue in Hinckley case

Hinckley's father, John W. Hinckley Sr., wishes his son would be tried soon.

IN AN INTERVIEW published Sunday in the (Denver) Rocky Mountain News, the Denver oilman said he was upset that the trial had not started.

"John is truly ill, and we're anxious to get that across in court. His rights to a speedy trial have been denied him," said the elder Hinckley, president and chairman of the Vanderbilt Energy Corp.

The current delay is over admission at trial of an oral statement taken from Hinckley the day of the shootings and the seizure of handwritten notes from his cell last July.

The trial judge and a three-judge panel of the U.S. Court of Appeals said the evidence was obtained in violation of Hinckley's constitutional rights. The government appealed to the full appelate court, hoping to gain the right to use the evidence to show Hinckley was sane a year ago.

STATISTICS FROM THE Administrative Office of the U.S. Courts show that most federal criminal defendents would have had their trials long before Hinckley — even if they pleaded innocent by reason of insanity, as Hinckley did, and even if their constitutional rights were the subject of pre-trial arguments.

"It's hard to make the Hinckley case comparable to anything else," said Norbert Halloren, special assistant to the deputy director at the Administrative Office for the courts.

"It's such a cause celebre. The U.S. Attorney, the Justice Department and the FBI are working under such a spotlight, they're probably going to be extra careful," Halloren said. "It stands to reason they would feel justified in spending more time, effort, and money on something that touches such a tender nerve on the part of the general public."

Halloren's statistics for the year ending June 30, 1980, showed only 7.3 percent of federal criminal defendents waited more than 180 days between the time of their arrest and trial.

He estimated that only 3 percent waited more than a year.

CONGRESS WAS CONCERNED about trial delays when it passed the Speedy Trial Act in 1974.

The law said the time from arrest to trial should be 100 days, but permitted the clock to stop ticking for some 20 categories of delays, including the filing of pre-trial motions, appeals to higher courts or psychiatric examinations — all pertinent in Hinckley's case.

In the two previous presidential assassination attempts, justice was swift. Lynette Alice "Squeaky" Fromme pointed a gun at President Gerald Ford in Sacramento on Sept. 5, 1975 but did not fire a shot. She pleaded not guilty, but was convicted of attempting to murder the president and sentenced to life in prison on Dec. 17, 1975.

Sara Jane Moore, who shot at Ford in San Francisco on Sept. 22, 1975, pleaded guilty and was sentenced to life in prison on Jan. 15, 1976.

WHILE THE PSYCHIATRIC examinations of Hinckley were crucial, did they have to take four months?

"A month should be adequate in most cases," said Dr. Leonard Diamond, who has examined criminal defendents and teaches both law and psychiatry at the University of California at Berkley and San Francisco. "But when you attempt to assassinate the president, you don't get routine treatment."

Diamond and George, the New York Law School professor, are working with the American Bar Association on a study of the criminal justice system — including the role of psychiatry and speedy trial problems.

George said the government had no choice but to delay the trial in an effort to get its crucial evidence before a jury.

He noted that if prosecutors didn't put on their best evidence, and then lost, Hinckley could not be tried again.

Justice Department spokesman John Russell added, "We're not serving the public if we don't go into court with our best case. We would be negligent if we didn't pursue it."

Hepburn, Fonda triumph at Oscar awards ceremony

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — Henry Fonda and Katharine Hepburn won Oscars for their co-starring roles as husband and wife in "On Golden Pond" at the 54th Academy Awards on Monday night, and "Chariots of Fire," was named best picture.

For the 76-year-old Fonda, it was his first Oscar for acting. It was the 72-year-old Hepburn's fourth — a record number for acting in a leading role.

"Chariots," a British film that won critical acclaim, had not been considered among top contenders for best picture of 1981. It told the story of two runners — one a Jew from Oxford, the other a Scottish missionary — competing in the Olympic Games of 1924.

Maureen Stapleton, who played crusading Communist Emma in "Reds," and Sir John Gielgud, a gentleman's gentleman in "Arthur," won Oscars for supporting roles.

"Raiders of the Lost Ark" took an early lead with four technical awards. Steven Spielberg's fast-paced, tongue-in-cheek adventure film patterned after the serials of the 1940s won Oscars for sound, editing, art direction and visual effects.

Warren Beatty was winner for his direction of "Reds," marking the second year in a row that a star took a directorial award; last year Robert Redford won for "Ordinary People."

Gielgud was nominated for an Oscar for "Beckett" in 1964. The veteran English actr was the only candidate for supporting actor who was not in the audience at the awards ceremony. "Mephisto," a Hungarian film about an actor's rise in Nazi Germany, was awarded the Oscar as the best foreign film. And "Arthur's Theme" from "Arthur" won the award as best original song.

Actor John Travolta presented this year's special Oscar to Barbara Stanwyck for her long and distinguished acting career.

After a standing ovation, she thanked the film crews she worked with and added a special tribute to the late William Holden, whose career she helped start in 1938's "Golden Boy."

She said: "I love him very much, and I miss him. He always wished that I would get the Oscar. And so tonight, my Golden Boy, you got your wish."

The 56-year-old Miss Stapleton, a screen and stage veteran previously nominated three times in the supporting category, clutched the Oscar and said: "I'm thrilled, happy, delighted — sober."

The 54th annual awards proved festive, despite occasional showers that forced some stars to wear raincoats over their glamorous formal wear.

The crowd of 2,500 outside the Los Angeles Music Center greeted their favorite stars with cheers — with one of the biggest ovations going to Jane Fonda, a best supporting actress nominee and daughter of Henry Fonda, a nominee and sentimental favorite in the best actor category.

Emcee Johnny Carson started the show with his ususal barbs, among them: "Isn't it nice that James Cagney and Fred Astaire returned to movies last year to entertain another Depression audience?"

Fonda was the sentimental favorite to win his first acting Oscar, but his wife said the 76-year-old actor was "much too sick" to attend the ceremonies.

Fonda, who received an honorary Oscar last year, was nominated for the Oscar twice before as best actor, for "The Grapes of Wrath" and "Twelve Angry Men." The 48-year Hollywood veteran was nominated this year for his portrayal of an aging college professor terrified by the prospect of death.

Tar Heels slip past Hoyas

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Freshman Michael Jordan hit an 18-foot jumper with 15 seconds left and James Worthy won the duel of dunks with Patrick Ewing to give North Carolina its first NCAA basketball championship under Coach Dean Smith with a 63-62 victory over Georgetown Monday night.

Worthy scored a career-high 28 points and his steal, coming on a giveaway pass from Georgetown's Fred Brown with 10 seconds left, insured North Carolina the national title and finally lifted the monkey from Smith's back.

The North Carolina coach had taken six previous teams to the Final Four and came up empty-handed each time, but this time it was Worthy, Sam Perkins and Jordan who delivered the championship trophy into the hands of Smith in his 21st season as coach of the Tar Heels.

The battle between the front line of North Carolina — 6-foot9 junior Worthy and 6-9 sophomore Perkins — and the 7-foot Georgetown monolith, Ewing, produced one of the closest title games in recent history.

Not since 1959 had there been an NCAA championship decided by one point. California won that title by beating West Virginia 71-70, but the past 22 title games have, for the most part, been blowouts.

This game was undecided until the very end. Eric "Sleepy" Floyd had given Georgetown a 62-61 lead when he worked into the lane and fired up a 10-footer with 57 seconds to play.

North Carolina, already in a slowdown for the past four minutes, called time out with 32 seconds left, then worked the ball around the perimeter and Jordan threw up the game-winner from the left side.

As Georgetown brought the ball down court, Brown turned to his right and tossed the ball into Worthy's hands. Worthy then headed toward the Georgetown basket, and was intentionally fouled by Eric Smith with two seconds remaining. Worthy missed two foul shots, but the victory had been sealed.

Smith, criticized as a coach who couldn't win the "big one," finally ended all that talk. As fans and photographers swarmed onto the court, first Worthy, then the coach, were lifted onto teammates' shoulders to begin the traditional cutting down of the net at the Louisiana Superdome, where a crowd in excess of 61,000 watched for the second time in the past three days.

Smith finally won the championship with a team that had perhaps the best starting five of his career and compiled a record of 32-2, his best at North Carolina.

"I'm very grateful to my players. We played probably the best team we've seen all year, along with Virginia," said Smith. The loss ended Georgetown's best season ever with a 30-7 record, but the Hoyas were foiled in their first championship game since 1943 when they lost 46-34 to Wyoming. No more than four points separated the two teams in the second half and Jordan's winning basket produced the ninth lead change of the half.

The show, however, belonged to Worthy and Ewing, both of whom brought the crowd cheering to its feet with mammoth slam dunks. Worthy had four dunks in the second half, including one over Floyd, his junior high school buddy, that produced a three-point play and pulled the Tar Heels within one point with 11:52 left.

Softball team is second to 'Hawks

K-State women's softball team posted two come-from-behind victories last Friday, but back-to-back losses Saturday made the Wildcats settle for second place in the KU Invitational Softball Tournament in Lawrence.

Assistant Coach Doug Penner was pleased with his team's efforts on the tourney.

"We were extremely proud of how the girl came back and won both games on Friday, beating KU and Oklahoma," Penner said. "I think that we have found out that we can compete with three of the six teams in the Big Eight."

In the opening game, K-State trailed until the fifth inning when the 'Cats produced two runs to win 3-2.

After a scoreless first inning, Kelly Scoles of the 'Cats singled in Pat Howard for the first score. Howard opened the inning drawing a base on balls. Diane Punzo moved Howard ahead on a sacrifice before Scoles' single.

In the third frame, KU scored when Cox singled in Fox. Sharon Clarke of the 'Hawks, put her team ahead with a home run in the fourth.

K-State added two runs in the fifth. Brenda Holaday started things with a single. Then Cathy Hinson drew a walk. Pam Hentzler struck out and Tammy Totlands' grounder forced Holady out at third. The KU shortstop tried to double off Hinson on the play to second base, but the throw went over its mark and into the outfield. Hinson and Totland scored as a result.

Punzo retired the last 11 KU batters to seal her third win against only one defeat. The 'Cats had to produce four runs in the seventh inning to turn back the Oklahoma Sooners in game two.

Behind 2-1, the 'Cats faced a do-or-die situation. Hentzler led off the inning with a bunt single, and then stole second. Then Totland singled and Pam Rufener sacrificed the runners to second and third, respectively.

Scoles connected on a grounder to score Totland with the second run. Janel Anderson hit a triple after that, to bring in Scoles and Howard. Anderson was the winning pitcher in that game, upping her record to 4-1.

Punzo suffered her second loss Saturday in an 11-inning battle with Nebraska. The Cornhuskers edged the Wildcats 4-3. Tied at three apiece after regulation play, Day of the 'Huskers led off the 11th with a single. Schroeder sacrificed Day to second. Wagner singled in Day.

The 'Cats went to the championship Saturday afternoon for a rematch with the Jayhawks. On the mound for Kansas was Clarke who proved to be very stingy. She ran her record to 9-5 with a no-hitter, defeating K-State 2-0.

The Wildcats will travel to Wichita State Friday for a doubleheader. The next home action for the 'Cats is April 13 in a twin bill with Washburn University.

Sox manager predicts title

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Attorney Tony LaRussa, who manages the Chicago White Sox when he isn't busy with writs and torts, offers some expert testimony about the 1982 baseball season.

"We will win the West," said LaRussa. "White Sox fans can make plans to attend the championship series at Comiskey Park this fall."

Now that would be a switch. The last time there was postseason baseball in Chicago was 1959, when LaRussa was 15 years old.

But the Sox's manager likes his team's chances, especially after two major winter trades which delivered a pair of big bats — outfielder Steve Kemp and first baseman-outfielder Tom Paciorek.

To win the West, though, the White Sox will have to overcome an All Star-packed California lineup and the razzmatazz of Billyball as orchestrated by Manager Billy Martin in Oakland. Texas and Kansas City should be in the thick of the scramble with Minnesota and Seattle bringing up the rear.

Kemp and Paciorek join a Chicago lineup that includes Greg Luzinski, Carlton Fisk, Harold Baines and Ron LeFlore. Bill Almon and Tony Bernazard proved a capable second base-shortstop team last year and Jim Morrison is the third baseman with Mike Squires helping Paciorek at first.

LaRussa has some talented young pitchers headed by Britt Burns, Steve Trout, Dennis Lamp and Richard Dotson. Lamarr Hoyt, Jerry Koosman and Lynn McGlothen are in the bullpen.

The Angels are loaded with a lineup of name players that borders on awesome. Rod Carew, Bobby Grich, Rick Burleson and Doug DeCinces form the infield. Fred Lynn, Reggie Jackson, Don Baylor are available outfielders along with rookie flash Tom Brunansky. Brian Downing, Ed Ott and Bob Boone are solid catchers.

HIS program promotes friendships

By HEIDI BRIGHT
Collegian Reporter

Many international students in American schools return to their homelands thinking Americans are "apathetic, racist, and unfriendly."

That is what Dr. Bob Taussig, associate professor of veterinary medicine, learned when he and his wife, Mary, were missionaries in Africa.

To combat this problem and develop cross-cultural communication, the Taussigs began inviting Africans into their home in 1976.

"We tried to do things for them. Most of them were feeling isolated," he said.

Soon more Africans were coming to their home than the Taussigs had time to help.

"We were just two people, and we needed help," Taussig said.

THEY APPEALED TO local churches in 1977 and to campus Christian organizations in 1980 for volunteers to create friendships with international students.

In 1978 Helping International Students (HIS) was founded to bring Americans and international students together.

Americans often ignore international students. They "don't know what to do. They're shy," Taussig said. He added that Americans have their own friends and are generally "ignorant of the rest of the world."

Currently HIS pairs 230 Americans with 280 international students. These pairs are divided into groups of 10 to 15 which are supervised by a unit leader.

The program's success "depends upon the attitude of the person, what he thinks of HIS and what his commitment to HIS is," said Susan Denzon, graduate in agricultural education from the Philippines.

Amy Malone, junior in business, said, "They really need to screen people to see if they're willing to give the time and effort to the relationship. They ought to make sure the people don't have 'the poor little international' attitude. They are just as good as we are. They're able to sense it when we're looking down on them."

THE SUCCESS of HIS also depends on the American taking the initiative in the relationship. Yet many international students have never been contacted by the American who signed up to be their friend.

Leila Saldanha, graduate in foods and nutrition from Bombay, India, had not been contacted by her American friend as late as Thanksgiving. "The first thing I did was go to the International Student Center," she said. "I signed up Aug. 10 (for an American friend). I was the first to sign up, I think. I was really disappointed over this."

The unit coordinator reminds Americans to contact their international friends and asks the Americans how the relationship is developing, Janet Maxwell, a former unit coordinator, said. Each unit functions separately with a variety of activities for the group to do together.

"Potlucks are popular," Maxwell said. "People like things that focus on fun, a good time together, and food."

In some situations, however, what appears to be a lack of commitment on the part of the American may simply be that the American was never able to contact the international student.

MANY INTERNATIONAL students change housing after they first arrive and do not inform the International Student Center. As a result, the American tries to contact the international student at the address listed and cannot reach that person. Nevertheless, Taussig said the failures in communication are usually on the part of the American.

International students have a difficult time getting started and finding housing.

Saldanha was such a student.

"There was nobody to help me the first 10 days... I'd just been left to fend for myself," she said.

HIS volunteer commitment sometimes brings positive results.

Denzon wrote that the Taussigs, Sally Coltrain, sophomore in chemical engineering, and Harold Shaver, former professor of journalism and mass communications, "were the very people who encouraged, inspired, gladdened me up during my first days at K-State.

"I was depressed, confused, lonely and almost sank. But there they were, calling me up, comforting me, talking to me, inspiring me, encouraging me to go on and even invited me to their places," Denzon continued.

Malone said developing close relationships even with Americans can be difficult.

"It's really hard sometimes to get past the superficial level..." she said. "I've been blessed with two really outgoing (Malaysian) friends. They're willing to communicate. We're willing to accept each other as we are and we aren't trying to change each other."

DESPITE ITS PROBLEMS, most international students and Americans see the HIS program as a success. Veronica Alejandro, graduate in pathology from the Republic of China, said many international students only see Americans in movies before coming to the United States and think films portray Americans realistically.

She said the program helped widen her knowledge.

Denzon said, "I expected Americans to have superiority complexes and be snooty, but I found them to be helpful, open, friendly and independent."

Maxwell also believes the program is a success in giving international students a positive reaction to Americans.

"They feel they're getting friendships. It is beneficial to both Americans and international students," she said.

Salvador

U.S.-backed civilian-military junta, had 40.5 percent of the nationwide tally, and ARENA had 29.2 percent.

EACH OF the two parties predicted it would form a majority coalition with one or more of the smaller conservative groups in the 60-member assembly, which is to name an interim government and write a new constitution leading to general elections, probably next year.

With about one-fourth of the 4,600 voting stations reporting, the Central Election Commission gave the following count: the Christian Democrats, 136,829 votes, 40.5 percent; ARENA, 98,653 votes, 29.2 percent; National Conciliation Party, 54,187 votes, 16 percent; Democratic Action Party, 32,091 votes, 9.5 percent; Popular Salvadoran Party, 11,880 votes, 3.5 percent, and Popular Orientation Party, 4,134 votes, 1.2 percent.

THIS DID not necessarily indicate how many seats each party would win. Each of El Salvador's 14 departments, or provinces, had a number of assembly seats assigned to it, to be distributed to the parties proportional to their vote in each department.

There were no immediate official reports on the turnout, but Salvadorans said it was the largest in recent memory. About 1.5 million people were eligible to vote.

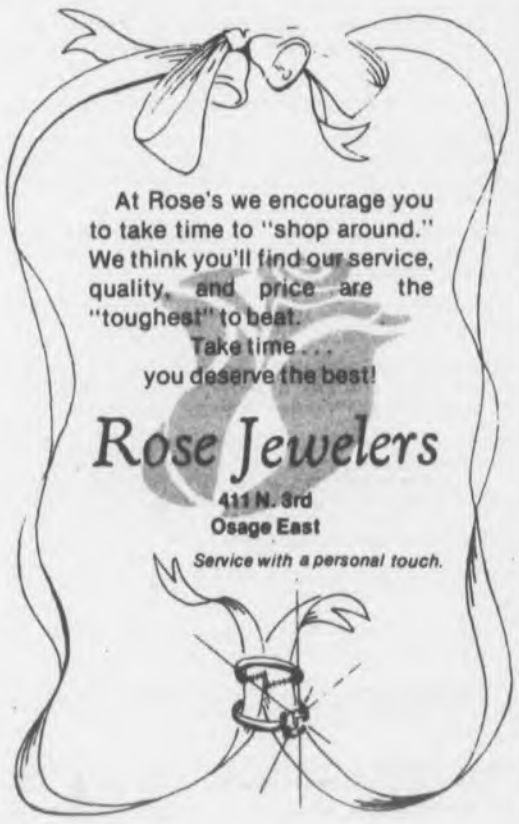
D'Aubuisson's ARENA and the four smaller parties in the election, all conservative groups, opposed a land redistribution program and other reforms that were decreed by the Duarte-led junta in an effort to undercut support for the guerrillas.

Christian Democrat leader Guillermo Guevara said talks were under way with Democratic Action, the most moderate opposition group.

THE DEMOCRATIC ACTION leader, Rene Fortin Magana, said, "We are open to a coalition with anybody." But he said he would demand modification of the junta's reforms.

D'Aubuisson, who has been accused of links to coup attempts and right-wing death squads, said his party could control the assembly with help from National Conciliation, the party that ruled from 1961 until October 1979, when a coup put the junta in power.

The Reagan administration and the Salvadoran junta and military had promoted the election as a democratic step toward peace, a strengthening of the legitimacy of the Salvadoran leadership.



But any swing to the far right and retreat from the agrarian and other reforms could erode support in the U.S. Congress for American military aid to El Salvador in its war with the guerrillas.

In an apparent effort to reconcile the six parties, the Ambassador Hinton held a luncheon meeting at his residence Monday with leaders of all the parties and with the members of the official U.S. delegation sent to observe the election.

Shuttle landing ends longest flight

WHITE SANDS MISSILE RANGE, N.M. (AP) — Framed by purple mountains and a brilliant blue sky, America's space shuttle sliced through desert breezes Tuesday to crown its longest, toughest and most ambitious test flight.

Three down, one to go and Columbia flies for hire.

Weight on wheels came at 10:05 a.m. CST on an unfamiliar runway, 22 hours past due. The landing ended an eight-day mission that demonstrated Columbia's versatility and stamina in space.

The weather was as kind to astronauts Jack Lousma and C. Gordon Fullerton as it was inhospitable the day before. Skies were relatively calm — a stiff headwind instead of the cantankerous sandstorm that made a return Monday impossible.

"Everybody in America started breathing again when you made that landing," President Reagan told the pilots in a telephone call. "Our thoughts and prayers have been with you every second that you've been up there."

AT A RUNWAY ceremony, a beaming Lousma said: "I couldn't say you it was a good flight, because it was a great spectacular flight from where we sat. We had eight days of a great time and a great spacecraft."

He added, "Columbia has flown our colors around the world and all Americans can be proud of that."

Fullerton echoed those comments and said, "Everything was better than my wildest dreams could imagine."

After the ceremony, the astronauts headed back to Houston.

There, flight operations director Glynn Lunney said the spacecraft survived its trip better than the two-day second flight last November.

"STS-3 (flight 3) was a very powerful success," he said, and added that nothing stands in the way of "flying payloads for paying customers," beginning with the fifth flight next November.

THE ASTRONAUTS and their ship had been in space 8 days, 4 minutes and 49 seconds since launch from the Kennedy Space Center in Florida on March 22. Had the weather proved unacceptable Tuesday, Columbia would have been directed to Kennedy's concrete runway.

But test landings, by John Young of the first shuttle flight, showed Northrup to be OK, and the astronauts got the word to land here. The fickle winds picked up as landing crews hustled to secure the ship.

Daniel Ellsberg reacts to a question during the All-University Convocation in McCain Auditorium Tuesday.

Ellsberg stresses America's responsibility for changing U.S. nuclear weapons policy

By TANYA BRANSON
Staff Writer

Adamantly supporting bilateral disarmament and questioning U.S. policy toward nuclear weapons, Daniel Ellsberg, a prominent early 70s figure — best recognized for his part in the Pentagon Papers affair, spoke at the last of the year's Lou Douglas Lecture Series Tuesday night.

"I don't think humans can exist — co-exist — on this Earth with nuclear weapons," Ellsberg said to a large crowd at Forum Hall.

Bilateral disarmament must be achieved, because the United States is not going to get by with the same policy it has in the past, he said.

In 1961, when Ellsberg was working in the Pentagon, the United States could make threats to the Russians and, as they did, humiliate the Russians with the Cuban Missile Crisis, according to Ellsberg.

The United States could do that because its stockpile of weapons was tremendously larger than Russia's stockpile, he explained. For example, in 1962 Russia had 192 bombers while the United States overpowered them with 3,000 bombers. The public never knew how far behind Russia as, he said.

Since then, the difference in weapons has narrowed to a tight race in achieving superpower, highly-accurate nuclear warheads, Ellsberg said. When Reagan makes those threats today, it is not so clear Russia will back down.

"The United States has made threats (in the past), like Reagan is doing — in Korea, Indochina — but 20 years later these threats are like playing Russian roulette. Russian roulette is a gun that is pointing at the heads of all our children," he said.

The gun that is pointing is more destructive than anything in years past, he warned. The United States and Russia have increased the power of nuclear warheads immensely. Ellsberg's example was a bomb that was dropped over North Carolina by mistake. The bomb did not go off because the last of five safety systems worked, but if it had — more explosive than 12 World War IIs or three Vietnams — it would have destroyed all of North Carolina.

The U.S.'s plans, which can be considered comparable to Russia's plans, have enough warheads to aim at every city in Russia that has a population more than 100,000. These are "annihilating, extermínating plans," Ellsberg said.

Almost all of the weapons are first-strike weapons. It is a fallacy of the American public to think that the United States increases weapon stockpiles to fight Russian attacks, he said.

Ellsberg asserted that no President has ever in fact believed it is in United States' best interests to stop the arms race.

According to Ellsberg, Americans should look hard at what Reagan is doing, refusing to believe him when he says "Trust me, let me take care of it." Reagan is not any different from presidents in years past, just more open about his arms policy, Ellsberg said.

However, he said, "maybe this is good. He alerts us if he doesn't blow us up first."

The arms policy hasn't been up for public review in the past 20 years, he said. Now that Reagan is more open, Americans will examine the policy and Ellsberg said he hopes the Americans will react.

Ellsberg says nuclear threat can be stopped

Speaking on the topics of nuclear arms and U.S. involvement in El Salvador, Daniel Ellsberg, Pentagon Papers analyst during the Vietnam era, addressed an audience Tuesday morning at the All-University Convocation in McCain Auditorium.

According to Ellsberg, threats of initiating nuclear war are being made by the Reagan administration and many Americans do not realize it.

"There is a chance we can end the arms race in Reagan's term in office. We can cause the president to propose to the Soviet Union to end it with us if they choose," he said. "If not it will go on until a war will destroy both of us."

"Neither side has a purpose for these ground weapons unless they are planning on initiating action," he said. "We are prepared to use nuclear weapons and, of course, the Soviets are ready to reply."

Ellsberg went on to say that "until a president is willing to see this competition stopped, it will go on. Right now we are all hostages of nuclear threats."

Although the topic of Ellsberg's speech was "U.S. Nuclear Weapons Strategy and the Arms Race," he dealt mainly with the current status in El Salvador and frequently referred to the Vietnam years.

"A lot of Americans learned the same things I did about Vietnam — it was 10 terrible years of involvement. I think it taught us the folly of trying to rule people 10,000 miles away," he said.

"Our involvement (in El Salvador) is comparable to the year 1961 when the (Vietnam) movement was just beginning," Ellsberg said.

According to Ellsberg, despite the fact that most Americans know little about the El Salvador situation, the majority want the United States to become less involved.

"Even the views of many experts on the situation are clouded. We must first realize, however, that this is one of the most vicious regimes ever seen (in El Salvador)," he said.

Ellsberg also covered the topic of the Middle East situation in his speech, warning the United States to change its dependence on oil from foreign countries.

In his closing remarks, Ellsberg said the public should voice its opinions on the arms race and the situation in El Salvador.

"I believe demonstrations are necessary to get the point across," he said. "At stake is the entire survival of our species."

Man returns $5,500; honesty surprises widow

LEE'S SUMMIT, Mo. — Only one person was more surprised than Charles Dunn last week when he opened a toolbox bought for $15 at a garage sale and found $5,500 inside.

That was the 64-year-old widow to whom he returned the money Saturday.

"When I gave her the money, she was halfway between laughing and crying," said Dunn, a Western Electric Co. employee. "She couldn't even count it she was so nervous."

Dunn said he found the money, mostly in $100 bills, tightly wedged under tin plates in the toolbox as he was cleaning it out.

"The first thing that came through my mind was that legally, it's my money, but morally it's not," Dunn said.

Dunn said his family goes to garage sales and swap shops because "we don't have the money to buy all the things we need.

"It's a good lesson to my son," he said. "If a parent can't be honest, how can they expect their children to be honest?"

"It did something to me to know there is an honest person left," the widow said. "There aren't too many of them."

Paratrooper exercise causes deaths, injuries

FORT IRWIN, Calif. — Four paratroopers were killed and at least 24 were injured Tuesday as desert winds blowing up to 40 mph wreaked havoc on a massive military parachute exercise, authorities said.

Lt. Gen. Robert C. Kingston said two of the dead paratroopers had malfunctions in their parachutes. A third landed on heavy equipment already on the ground, he said, and a fourth apparently was dragged by the wind.

Nearly 2,300 troopers participated in the jump. Statistically, according to Lt. Col. Ron Johnston of the 82nd Airborne, the average injury rate when a unit makes a jump is 1 percent.

Kingston emphasized the toll of 24 injured was preliminary but said winds on each of the five drop zones was below the 13 knots regarded as safe for peacetime jumps.

Six people were flown by military helicopter to Loma Linda University Medical Center, where five were being treated for head injuries and one had a fractured pelvis.

Search continues for trapped scoutmaster

LAFAYETTE, N.J. — Rescue workers blasted into a rocky hillside with explosives and jackhammers Tuesday in a last-ditch effort to free a Boy Scout leader trapped in a cavern for three days.

State police and workers said they would proceed as if Sgt. Donald Weltner had survived, but by Tuesday they were not optimistic he was still alive.

Thwarted by jutting rocks and a narrow passageway to the cave, rescue teams were forced to abandon an attempt to lift the state trooper from the cavern 15 feet below the hill.

The 48-year-old scoutmaster was trapped about 3 p.m. Saturday while leading a spelunking expedition of 18 Boy Scouts from Millstone Township Troop 116. He and his sons, Roger, 11, and Christopher, 14, crawled 70 feet into Crooked Swamp Cave at the Blue Heron Rookery. When Weltner tried to crawl out, he slipped into an uncharted crevice and became pinned.

Blasting through the hillside was considered a last-ditch move because officials feared the earth and rocks would collapse onto the victim.

A registered nurse and one rescue worker who was able to get close to Weltner on Sunday and Monday said they saw no signs of life. Officials said then they were clinging to the hope that extremely low body temperatures — hypothermia — had reduced his body functions to "slow motion."

6-year-old alleged assailant may face charges

GAINESVILLE, Fla. — A private arbitrator handling the case of a 6-year-old girl charged with smacking a playmate said he may have a way of settling the defendant's case:

"I may suggest that we all go to dinner and the movies together; bring the kids," Gary Weinstein said. "We may all go to Disney World or something."

Weinstein, director of a private, non-profit program that handles juvenile problems, was appointed Monday to get Nancy Jo Burch's parents and the parents of her 7-year-old alleged victim talking to each other again.

If Weinstein is successful, no charges will be filed against Nancy Jo in adult court.

Nancy Jo's defense lawyer has contended that a child of 6 isn't sufficiently cognizant to commit a crime, but a circuit judge rejected that contention and ruled her case could be heard in juvenile court.

On Friday the defense attorney, Alan Wilhite, won her a jury trial in adult criminal court.

Weather

March will exit like a lamb today as skies will be mostly sunny with highs in the mid-to upper 60s. Partly cloudy tonight and Thursday. Lows in the upper 30s to low 40s. Thursday will be a good day to relax in the sun as highs in the low to mid-70s.

Some people will do just about anything for a Swannie's Yum-Yum!

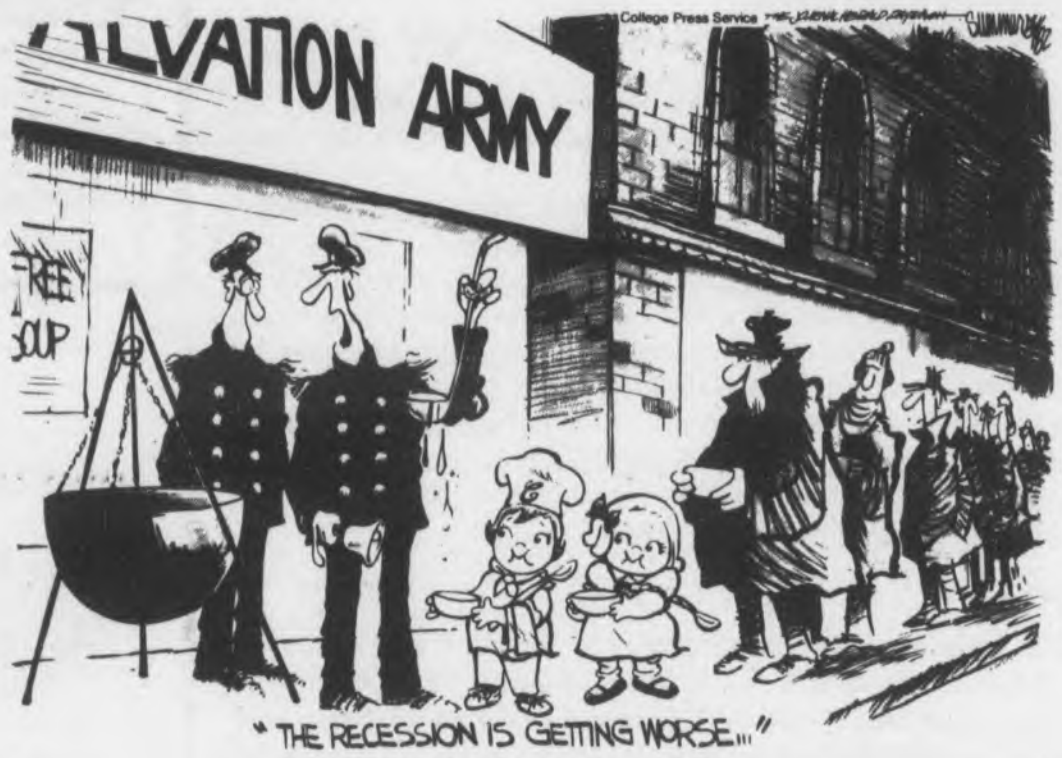
Kiddie court case is cartoon law

The continuing saga of six-year old Nancy Jo Burch is giving law and parents a bad name.

Shirley Lynn Nickolls suffered a bloody nose after being hit in the face with a stick by Nancy Jo. The defense attorney won a jury trial in an adult criminal court Friday. Today a Florida curcuit judge ruled that her case could be heard in a juvenile court.

The entire incident brings back memories of neighborhood dirt-clod fights, crash-filled bicycle races, after-school tussles and heated sibling fights. The resulting injuries were not settled in a court of law but in the family living rooms of those involved.



Parents have a responsibility to develop and teach a code of ethics which their children will abide by. Is six years is an adequate teaching period?

The growing trend of settling all disputes, no matter how irrelevant or trivial, in court needs a stopping point. If this case enters a juvenile court then courses in Barbie-doll arbitration and no-fault kiddie insurance will be in great demand.

What, if any, precedent will this case really set?

A private arbitrator has suggested that, in order to get the parents involved speaking to each other again, all participants should take a trip "to Disney World or something." It would be an appropriate setting to end this farce in cartoon law.

Solution is not simple

Editor,

Once again Kelly Blair has exhibited her remarkable simplicity.

First, she is swallowing the United Nation's projection of a 10.4 billion world population in 2020 without a thought, despite the fact that the "chicken little" predictions of the past have considerably over-estimated actual population results.

Second, to Kelly Blair being anti-abortion is equivalent to disregard to the future "population explosion." I think her fears of a lowered standard of living due to a larger world population caused by banned abortion are unfounded.

The human mind has an almost unlimited capacity to solve the problems that confront us. American consumers were buying 2.2 million more barrels of oil per day in 1979 than they were in 1981. Has our standard of living decreased? Information on solar energy and organic foodproduction (sensible alternatives for current situations) is growing and becoming more popular.

Areas where problems like starvation exist are very often perpetrated by political actions ranging from apathy to war.

The ides of March bring thoughts of Erin

Empathizing with Vonnegut's Billy Pilgrim comes easy for me. I haven't an ordeal like Pilgrim's Dresden to cope with, but there is one period of my past which persistantly marches into my present.

One consolation of dealing with these moments of flashbacks is that they make perfect sense and clearly are from a six-month adventure I had. A bit of a problem exists however, in that they occur at the most inopportune of times. What's worse is that, for at least one reason known to me, the vivid, all-too-real flashes have been increasing in frequency, duration and lingering affect.

After several of the unannounced flashbacks I'm left feeling like I'd gone through a day half-dazed. Mesmerized by the dream-like encounters, I'm unable to shake the blanket of haziness.

IMAGINE IF YOU CAN the confused communication which takes place when my mind and powers of concentration and motivation are vaporized by a dose of flashback.

It's like driving after having indulged in spirits. The experience is an awakening to a realization that you've nearly left the road or slammed into a bridge abutment. This is followed by wondering just how long you were in an alternative state of being.

The increasing rate of these reality-piercing moments is due to accidentally running into people who are talking about their plans and preparations to go eastward, to Europe.

About a year and-a-half ago I packed my bags and went to Ireland. When I returned, Ireland came with me. The Ireland that remains with me is like a good drug that rids the pain, without causing any damage.

OUT OF NOWHERE a memory, such as a sundown arrival to a dark and empty castle for a supposed night of sleep, will engulf me. The site was to be a youth hostel where I thought I would be able to talk to other travelers. Instead, the night turned out to be something movies are made of. After being admitted by the caretaker, who quickly retreated to a small room near the back of the castle, I began practicing the art of self-reliance. Before I could go exploring for a place to sleep I decided to start a peat and coal fire in the main ballroom on the first floor and was able to kindle a glow in fairly short order.

As I looked about the huge room I noticed a dusty plaque on the wall above the fire place. The inscription spoke of the Learmont family who had built the castle and owned the surrounding countryside in the late 1700s. The writing told of two violent deaths which occured in the castle.

THE KILLINGS of Lord Charles Learmont and his son by peasants were what led to the loss of the family's control of the land. The castle had remained vacant for many years because of reported "strange" unexplainable incidents. Reading the plaque as shadows of the evening grew did little to boost my sense of adventure. My thinking quickly turned from fulfilling a childhood dream of exploring an empty castle to finding a room I'd survive in until morning.

I entered the main entryway and cautiously climbed the grand staircase. Upon arriving to the second floor I went into what later seemed to be a storage room. There was a bed and no one else, I hoped. I pulled the primal self-survival act of hiding under a pile of blankets, and have lived to tell about it.

WITH THE MORNING light returned my sense of exploring. The castle turned out to be most of what the movies portray them to be, big, drafty, equipped with dungeon and yearning to have its history told. With a walk around outside it became clear why the Learmont family would want to control the land. It was lush, green and gently rolling toward the sea.

To mention but another memory or two which cause me to temporarily leave Kansas, I would include a little side trip I made from the bar I worked in.

Four co-workers and I made a journey to a country Irish bar in which there was no electricity or running water. Making our way to Finns Old Bar in Rosemore we would stop to ask for directions. When stopped we'd have a pint, wish the barkeep and customers the best and be on our way.

FINNS BAR was not typical in its lack of modern conviences, but everything else was typically Irish. The bar was run by most any local who happened to be there if Finn should have to be away. And when the substitute became engaged in conversation, which frequently happened, the customers began serving themselves. The Irish difference being that the money was always deposited in the till.

Although the facilities were simple, the essentials included a fireplace, a cement floor for dancing, a few wooden benches and stools and shelves to hold the daily delivered beer.

Near the end of my visit to Ireland I made my way back to the Cliffs of Moher. The majestic cliffs are what divide the Atlantic Ocean and the United States from Ireland's west coast. The cliffs are an appropriate border for Ireland's Clare County.

CLARE COUNTY is known for it's subtle beauty to be found in the stone fences, sparce trees and lush-green glens. The most noticeable thing about Clare, though, is the blue eyes and dark hair of its people. Their eyes define the word blue and their pale faces touched with rosey cheeks tell of the stoic character that has helped them survive countless invasions.

As I reached the cliffs it was like no other time I had been there before. A fog, dense enough to resist the gail-force winds blowing up from ocean, was creating an air only to be imagined in a dream. Holding on to the stone fence that separated the path from a 800-foot drop I walked to O'Brien's tower, a distance of about a hundred yards.

From the tower I could see about 10 feet of the 800-foot fog. I then walked the four miles to O'Connor's Pub in the village of Doolin. I stopped for a bite to eat before heading back to the hostel from which I had traveled. It was late afternoon when I arrived and a couple of men in the bar recognized me from earlier visits. When I told them I would be returning to Kansas in a few days they insisted I stay. We continued with our 'rounds' until we had exhausted the energies of the musicians and had solved all the world's problems.

Being too late to travel to my hostel I was given a room above the pub often used for such occassions.

The above memories are but a portion of the hundreds which continue to consume me in overwhelming moments of flashbacks.

Trying to tell someone who has not been to these places, at those moments is like Billy Pilgrim telling people about his experiences in Dresden or his travels to Tralfamadore. If I should be found seeming to be elsewhere, please bear with me, I'll return.

Tennessee Valley Authority awards grant

Fertilizer reactions in the soil associated with deep placement of phosphorus materials will be studied by two professors in the Department of Agronomy with assistance of a $42,000 grant.

The grant, awarded to Roscoe Ellis and Stephen Thien, both professors of agronomy, is from the Tennessee Valley Authority. The study will occur over a three-year period, and according to Ellis, the research will test the availability of phosphorus to plants at different levels in the soil.

The results of the testing will primarily benefit farmers, Ellis said. By determining benefits from deep placement of phosphorus, farmers may be able to increase the efficiency of their fertilizer use.

Anti-Cancer Lab receives Haymaker grant

The new Anti-Cancer Laboratory in the Division of Biology is the recipient of a $15,000 gift from Jennie Marie Haymaker of Edina, Minn.

The gift is in memory of her husband, John N. (Jack) Haymaker, a 1941 graduate of K-State, who died in August from a brain tumor.

Haymaker was the vice president of the Cargill Grain Company, and the son of Henley Haymaker, a distinguished professor of biology for whom Haymaker Residence Hall is named.

According to Terry Johnson, director of the Division of Biology, the new Anti-Cancer Drug Laboratory will be a unique addition to the tumor research program at K-State.

Designed with an interdisciplinary approach to understanding cancer drug action and toxicity, more than 25 scientists have already made a commitment to the success of this new program.

Report questions colleges' ability to retain faculty

Editor's note: This is the first of a two-part series.

By DOUG WARD
Collegian Reporter

It's a continous battle. A cold war fought not with tanks and guns but with economic ammunition — salary erosion, institutional comparisons, unemployment figures and per capita support.

It's a conflict that involves faculty members fighting for adequate salaries and maintenance of quality education; and state legislators caught in a political bind of tight resources and taxpayer opposition to increases in University funding.

According to the 1982 Faculty Senate report on faculty salaries and fringe benefits at K-State, the ability of the University to recruit and retain quality faculty members is being challenged by other universities and private business.

This is due to erosion of salaries in comparison to Kansas per capita personal income, and to low salaries and fringe benefits at K-State in comparison to peer institutions and other land grant colleges, the report said.

THE ANSWER to this problem, according to the report, is a 15 percent salary increase in fiscal 1984-88 and improvement in retirement and medical benefits in each of those years.

But there are problems in trying to achieve these goals. Sen. Jerry Karr (D-Emporia) said one of the problems in allocating additional funds for higher education is that because of low population and a large number of institutions in Kansas, the state already "invests" high per capita support.

"You might say we have to spread the peanut butter on the bread a little thinner because of the number of insititutions," said Sen. Paul Hess (R-Wichita), chairman of the Senate Ways and Means Committee.

According to Karr, Kansas has an excellent diversity of universitites but with this diversity comes a question of whether the state has more insititutions than it can effectively fund.

Sen. Ross Doyen (R-Concordia), president of the Senate, said because of investments and improvements made in all the universities, "we would never close any of them."

PRESIDENT DUANE ACKER said that changing the number of institutions is "probably not a viable alternative."

Instead, Acker suggested working on improving the economy and creating efficiency in management of funds through added authority by University officials.

Jerome Frieman, associate professor of psychology and chairman of the Faculty Senate Subcommittee on Faculty Salaries and Fringe Benefits, said that while Kansas ranked 15th in appropriations per capita in 1981, it was 23rd in terms of dollar appropriations.

"You can look at per capita support but that is not a real measure of the wealth of a state," Frieman said. "When you talk about state support, you must look at personal income of that state."

Heinz Bulmahn, president of Faculty Senate, said that he can't argue that there is a problem with the number of state funded institutions.

"But to say there are too many universities doesn't improve my position as a faculty member and doesn't improve the university's ability to retain faculty," Bulmahn added. "It's that simple."

ONE WAY IN which the problem of low faculty salaries is being addressed is with an amendment to the current Board of Regents' bill.

According to Karr, sponsor of the amendment, a $1.5 million enrichment fund would be set up with the board to address critical areas in which universities are losing faculty.

"We must address this problem now," Karr said. "It is not a new problem but is becoming more acute. Faculty salaries are falling behind the private sector."

Frieman said that the enrichment fund would help in areas where

'The Little Prince' film lacks charm of book

By SHARON FLEMING
Collegian Movie Reviewer

This week's Kaleidescope film is Lerner and Loewe's musical version of Antoine de Saint-Exupery's "The Little Prince."

Saint-Exupery's fable is a long-time classic. It tells of a pilot, wrecked in the Sahara desert, who has an encounter with a visitor from another world. The visitor, the Little Prince, is searching for the meaning of life. Gradually he reveals to the pilot his journeys and the knowledge he has gained.

The movie follows the plot of the book, but does so ineptly. The simplicity of the plot and charm of the book are marred. The technical aspects of the movie are not well-handled. The special effects are poor. Portions of the movie are filmed with a fishbowl technique, innovative but disruptive at times, especially in the fox's scene. There is a noticeable difference between the location and set scenes.

The songs, with the exception of "Snake in the Grass," are unmemorable, trite, and generally ill-timed. The directing is characterized by a lack of subtlety, especially at the end. Lack of subtlety sometimes renders hilarious portions of the movie intended to be otherwise.

Still, there are a few brief moments when the genius of Saint-Exupery shines through. The best dialogue in the movie is taken from the book. Although it is often broken up by hideous songs it retains its charm.

Some of the actors' performances retain the tone of the book. Steve Warner, who portrays the Little Prince, is as enchanting as the original. The best moments of the film come from the performances of Bob Fosse and Gene Wilder. Bob Fosse, best known to audiences as the inspiration and creator of the award-winning movie "All that Jazz," portrays the snake. His dance "Snake in the Grass," which he choreographed, is fantastic. Its sibillant undulations are snake-like. The highlight of the movie, however, is Wilder's haunting performance as the fox who gives the Little Prince the secret of life.

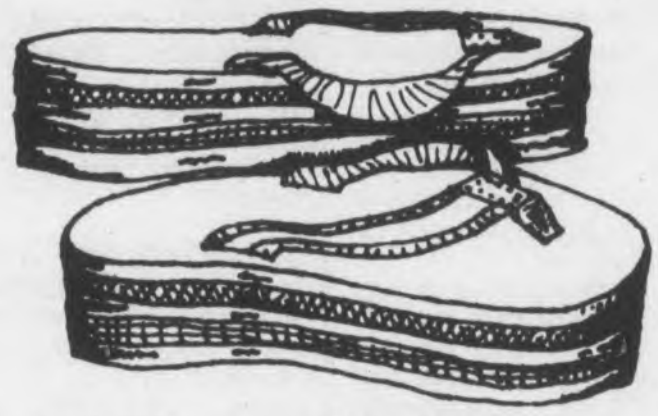
"The Little Prince" is a wonderful book. Unfortunately this is a terrible movie version. Saint-Exupery's magic that manages to break through, combined with the performances of Wilder and Fosse, make the movie worth seeing.

"The Little Prince" will be shown at 7:30 p.m. Wednesday and Thursday night at Forum Hall, and 3:30 p.m. Thursday in the Little Theatre.

Energy Office report says gasoline prices to go lower

TOPEKA (AP) — Gasoline prices in Kansas should continue to drop through midsummer, with some nearing the 90-cent-a-gallon mark by the end of next month, the state Energy Office reported Tuesday.

In its monthly "fuels outlook," the Energy Office noted that some gasoline prices had dropped 6½-cents-gallon this month and the agency projected that trend to continue.



However, Lyle Goltz, chief fuels allocation officer who wrote the report, cautioned that a reversal of conservation efforts by Kansas drivers would lead to an increase in fuel prices.

"If motorists continue to drive like they have, we feel prices will continue to slowly drop until mid-summer. That's when the surplus should be used up," Goltz said.

As it is across the nation, surplus crude supplies and intense competition for sales have spawned price reductions.

"It is possible that reduced gasoline prices with sufficient supply will push consumption of gasoline to higher levels putting OPEC back in the driver's seat and the motorist over the barrel," the report stated.

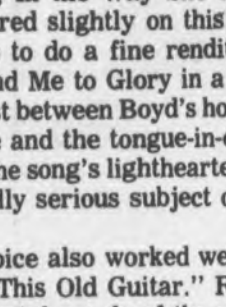
Performer plays folk, pop

By LESLIE FROST
Arts and Entertainment Editor

Spring seeped into the Catskeller Tuesday as the clear, fluid voice and acoustic guitar of David Boyd, graduate in mechanical engineering, brought to mind bicycle rides down sunny roads, green grass and blue skies.

Boyd started with a James Taylor tune,

Review



"Something In the Way She Moves." His voice quivered slightly on this one, but he warmed up to do a fine rendition of John Biggs' "Send Me to Glory in a Glad Bag." The contrast between Boyd's honest, almost sweet voice and the tongue-in-cheek words played up the song's lighthearted treatment of the usually serious subject of death and dying.

Boyd's voice also worked well with John Denver's "This Old Guitar." Riding above the sentimental words of the song about a man's love for his guitar, his clear unadorned voice staved off any maudlin interpretation.

Billed as a folk and pop presentation, the Nooner performance was filled mostly with popular songs, two Jim Croce numbers, Denver's "Follow Me," "Yesterday" and "If" by Bread.

"I don't know why I know so many songs about losing women," Boyd said.

Shuttle

Columbia was not supposed to have come here originally; it was to make a third landing at Edwards Air Force Base, Calif. But the Rogers dry lakebed wasn't dry enough and the back-up site became No. 1.

THE SHUTTLE — a rocket on launching, a satellite in orbit and an airplane on descent — has been in space and returned three times in just under a year. After one more flight, expected late June, the shuttle will be declared operational and begin routine missions hauling cargo to space for military and commercial customers.

Flight 3 was flush with success: the rigorous flight plan proved the value of Columbia as a space-borne science platform; it showed the ship could deposit satellites in space and retrieve them. And it flaunted the ship's flexibility — landing at a makeshift spaceport and staying aloft beyond its allotted time.

The ship was a little shopworn, with gaps where heat protective tiles had wrenched loose and limping in with a maimed radio.

COLUMBIA LANDED with a thump on the Northrup Strip, rolled, its nose rose and fell again, and a minute later it came to a stop — dead center on the line drawn on the white gypsum sand runway.

The site was as beautiful as it was desolate, a great white sparkling expanse, flat as a pond, surrounded by majestic mountains. At the strip, civilization had come in the form of trailers and machinery to handle the shuttle and a swarm of news people.

On Monday, more than 25,000 people had driven to the runway, braving the winds and the blowing sands only to be disappointed by the postponement. On Tuesday, with the weather perfect and the landing accomplished, the crowd was estimated at only 6,200.

THE SHUTTLE crossed the coast 50 miles south of Ensenada, Mexico, and Lousma radioed:

"We got the coast of California in sight. We are about to go over Los Angeles at Mach 13. I think we're moving right over the commander-in-chief's ranch right now."

At that point, about 12 minutes before touchdown, the shuttle was 167,000 miles high traveling at 8,160 mph. "Mach 13" is 13 times the speed of sound.

Reagan asked the astronauts later: "When you went over the ranch there, I've been worried about one of the horses. How did they look?"

"Well, sir," said Lousma, "We saw a few running around in the pasture there."

Over Silver City, N.M. a few minutes later, Lousma radioed: "It looks good on board."

And then: "A little bumpy around Mach 2."

BY THIS TIME NASA astronauts in chase planes had the shuttle in their cameras. The first televised views were from below, the shuttle a wispy apparition against the blue New Mexico sky.

market competition is tough — areas such as engineering, business and computer science.

"Maybe the message finally got through," Frieman said referring to Karr's amendment. "At least they (legislature) have done this much."

Verlyn Richards, head of the Department of Finance and memeber of the Faculty Senate Subcommittee on Salaries and Fringe Benefits, said that while an enrichment fund would help, it could also create a problem. Richards agreed that areas such as engineering, business administration and computer science would benefit most because of high demand.

However, in other areas where there is not a high demand, salaries would lose ground in comparison because of the high number of faculty available, he said.

There are always one or two people in a particular department who hold a "good chunk" of expertise and would be difficult to replace, Bulmahn added.

"We need a broader view than tying the money to a certain department," he said.

So the battle for additional funding continues. According to Karr, the regents' bill recently passed by the Kansas Senate, made a base recommendation of a 7.5 percent salary increase to be awarded on merit.

House passes DWI bill imposing stiff penalties

TOPEKA (AP) — Saying it was "time to make a stand," Rep. Karen Griffiths (R-Newton) pushed through the Kansas House a bill that imposes tough new penalties on anyone convicted of driving while intoxicated Tuesday.

The bill, a substitute for an earlier measure, requires a fine ranging from $100 to $500 for a first offender, revokes the person's driver's license for a minimum of 90 days and imposes a two-day jail sentence or, in lieu of incarceration, requires 60 hours of public service.

The House gave tentative approval to the measure, by a slim 61-48 vote. The measure now returns to the Senate for consideration of the House amendments.

"This is the year we must make a stand," Griffiths told a surprised House. She offered the bill as an amendment to a Senate-passed bill dealing with driver's license revocation, in a move that caught most of the lower chamber — including House Speaker Wendell Lady — off guard.

"Today's the deadline for committee work on Senate bills and I think it's very important we take action on this issue," Griffiths said. "We worked hard on this bill in Federal and State Affairs (Committee) and the bill has just been sitting on the bottom of the calender. The Transportation Committee still hasn't worked their bill so I decided it was time to do something."

The measure faced stiff opposition on the floor from lawmakers who opposed a provision that denies plea bargaining. They also fought for a provision to allow a person faced with a DWI conviction to enter into a diversion program to avoid the charges.

Another DWI bill, introduced by Sen. Jan Meyers (R-Overland Park) and approved by the Senate, is being debated by the Transportation panel and includes provision for a diversion program. For purposes of increasing the penalties on second and third offenders in a five-year period, the diversion would count as a conviction.

"How can you count diversion as a first offense when it's not a conviction?" Griffiths asked.

The bill calls for a $250 to $1,000 fine for second offenders, a jail sentence from seven days to one year, and driver's license revocation of one year. For the third offense, the bill requires a fine of $1,000 to $2,500, incarceration ranging from 30 days to one year and driver's license revocation of one year.

Also, Griffiths' amendment requires that anyone refusing a breath test would face driver's license revocation ranging from 180 days to one year.

The amendment states that a blood alcohol level of .10 percent would be evidence that a person was under the influence of alcohol. It further states that at lower than .10 percent a person could be convicted of DWI with evidence that other intoxicating substances or drugs were being used by the person.

New sidewalks replace beaten campus paths

By JOY CULVER
Collegian Reporter

Walking to class may be a little easier when it rains now that well-traveled cowpaths around campus have been paved over.

The new sidewalks are part of a list of priority improvements made up by University Facilities, according to Gene Cross, division vice president. Other items include landscaping barren parts of campus, upgrading classrooms and certain roofing projects.

New sidewalks have been designated for areas south and east of Fairchild Hall, along the northwest corner of Lafene Student Health Center, at the southeast area of the International Student Center and possibly on the south and west sides of King Hall. Cross said the sidewalk proposed for the west side of King Hall depends on whether the proposed chemistry building is built.

The sidewalks are being paved on the major pedestrian paths and are most needed in those areas, Cross said, since cowpaths scar the campus.

"Paving is a lot cleaner than a five-foot mud path," Joe Nowaskey said. "We have an emphasis toward clean and green."

Nowaskey, director of General Services, said criticism is often drawn because more sidewalks are being paved. People complain about the grass being covered up by cement.

Other improvements, according to Cross, are the much-needed upgrading of some classrooms.

Kedzie 106 was mentioned as needing new armchairs and eight other rooms in buildings around campus are also being upgraded. Another classroom improvement will be the addition of new furniture (desks, chairs and podiums) in about 25 classrooms.

Landscaping projects are being completed in many areas of the campus, according to Cross. The corner of 17th Street at Durland Hall will soon be planted with shrubs, and shrubbery is planned for the International Student Center, Nowaskey said. The northeast corner and southeast corner of East Stadium, near Security and Traffic offices, and Ahearn Field House are also pegged to be landscaped.

There are also plans to place bicycle racks and trashcans on concrete slabs, while landscaping around the bicycle racks to improve their appearance.

Shortcuts through the shrubs at the south end of the Union parking lot will soon be impossible because a fence will be placed along Anderson Avenue. This is so people will use the control signals on the corners, Cross said. The fence will also be an attempt to save the shrubs that get trampled on by pedestrians, Nowaskey said.

Funds for the improvement projects are coming from maintenance accounts, Cross said. He estimated the landscaping will cost $8,000 to $10,000. Classroom improvements are expected to run about $90,000, he said. Nowaskey estimated the sidewalk and concrete improvements to cost $15,000.

All of the improvements will be finished by the end of August and are part of a ongoing plan, Cross said. Each year, University Facilities surveys the campus and sets priorities. Then it is decided how just what the budget will allow.

Senate decides Kansans won't get highway to Oz

TOPEKA (AP) — The senators were ready to put away the yellow bricks Tuesday.

However, Rep. Robert Frey (R-Liberal) persuaded the Senate Labor, Industry and Tourism Committee to take one last look at his proposal to designate U.S. 54 in southwestern Kansas as "The Yellow Brick Road."

Following a hearing on the bill Tuesday, the committee agreed not to take any action on it.

Usually that is about the same as dousing the wicked witch with a bucket of water. The measure could be expected to die quietly in committee.

However, Frey, the House majority leader, couldn't testify before the committee to promote his bill, because it met while the House still was in session debating bills.

On learning of the committee's inaction, Frey found Sen. Bill Morris (R-Wichita) the committee chairman, and asked if he could personally plead th case for the Yellow Brick Road on another day.

Morris agreed. He called a special meeting of his committee for 1 p.m. Wednesday to listen to Frey.

The bill still can be approved by the committee before Thursday's deadline for consideration of legislation by committees.

The bill was given thoughtful attention by the committee Tuesday.

Sen. Jane Eldredge (R-Lawrence) said she watched The Wizard of Oz, shown on television last Friday night, and was not convinced the Yellow Brick Road actually was located in Kansas.

"It's a way to get back to Kansas," she said. "It isn't in Kansas."

The Yellow Brick Road would have been from Liberal to Wichita. In the House-passed bill, Wichita could be designated as the Emerald City.

However, the committee was informed that Seattle, Wash. already has laid claim to that title.

Earlier this year, a Senate committee decided not to recommend making the channel catfish the state fish. But the House remained undettered.

Monday the House amended a bill concerning street improvements in Plains so it would not take effect until after the catfish was made the state fish.

And even the Yellow Brick Road was dying in committee, three doors down the hallway a House committee was introducing another piece of legislation — naming the square dance the official state dance.

"It crosses all different lines — young, old, poor and rich. It doesn't make any difference," said Rep. Keith Farrar (R-Hugoton), the bill's sponsor.

Political convictions divide Iranians

Mistrust, 'hit men' add to conflict

By VERONICA LORSON
Collegian Reporter

Standing silent, shrouding their faces with paper-plate masks, about 30 Iranians bear signs reading "Death to Khomeini" and "Condemn Khomeini's Spies on K.S.U." The Iranians also distribute flyers asking "all freedom-loving people to condemn criminal acts of Khomeini's regime and spying of his agents on campuses abroad."

Phone calls threatening the lives of Iranians and their families are frequent.

Few Iranians walk alone at night. Iranians attacking Iranians is not uncommon. The attacks occur off-campus, on campus and, according to one source, in the Union during the day by one he said is similar to a "hit man."

Students are allegedly forced to sign pro-Khomeini petitions under threat that funds from their families in Iran will be cut off.

Iranian organizations on campus are sharply divided into two categories, pro- and anti-Khomeini. From about 130 Iranian students on campus, eight groups have evolved. Two are pro-Khomeini and six are anti-Khomeini, either through the purpose of the group, or by the beliefs of the individual members.

The two pro-Khomeini groups, according to group members, are:
— Iranian Moslem Organization or Moslem Association of Students-Persian Speaking Group (MSA-PSG).
— Iranian Moslem Association (IMA).

The anti-Khomeini groups are:
— Progressive Iranian Women.
— Iranian Student Association at Manhattan or Iranian Student Association at KSU (ISA).
— Organization of Iranian Students (OIS).
— Iranian Moslem Student Society (IMSS).
— People's Mojahedin Organization of Iran (PMOI) or Supporters of Mojahedin.
— Progressive Iranian Students (PIS).

MSA-PSG, A GROUP registered with the University Activities Board, is the oldest Iranian group at K-State. It is the largest pro-Khomeini group on campus and is accused by many of collecting information about Iranian students opposed to Khomeini. The MSA-PSG is said to be sending the information back to Iran.

"Khomeini's agents collect information and send it back to Iran. If we go back we may be killed or they may torture our families to get words out of them," said one anti-Khomeini Iranian student who asked that his name be withheld.

An MSA-PSG member, identified only as "Anghi," said, "We are agents of the government and we are agents of Khomeini. Because it is our government, because we like it, because we want to keep it, we will do what we can to protect this government."

Ahmed, a member of the PMOI, perceives the MSA-PSG's motives differently.

"The MSA-PSG are spies of Khomeini. We feel a threat from them," he said. "As soon as we finish (our studies), we wish to go back. But the threat that exists is another thing. We would be killed."

Some Iranian groups have asked administrators to condemn spying by Iranian students on campus.

Mobarez (his first name), an ISA member, went to the administration asking that spying activities be stopped. With him he took a letter written by Mostafa Aghorlikhani, senior in mechanical engineering, on Sept. 29, thanking a "Collegian photographer for taking the picture of the Monafeghine demonstration, because it is very useful to us (in identifying groups by Khomeini's orders)."

Aghorlikahani is a MSA-PSG member, but said he was acting as an individual.

ANGHI, AN MSA-PSG member, said he believes there is no danger in Iranians taking an anti-Khomeini stance, but refused to use his name.

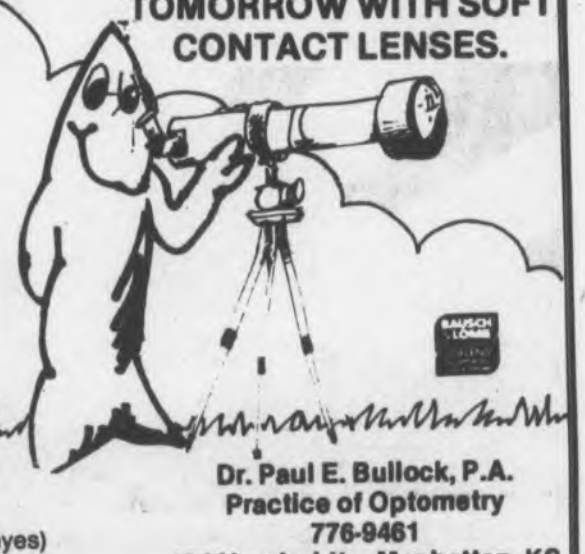
"Robbing places, shooting people, assassinating, are the only crimes punishable by death (in Iran)," he said.

However, a member of ISA, tells another story: "They are executing people for having one (anti-Khomeini) newspaper in their hand," she said.

This statement is supported by other Iranian students.

According to Ahmed, PMOI was originally neutral toward Khomeini, but still anti-Shah. Six months after Khomeini took power, unfavorable reports of the new government reached many members and divisions within MSA-PSG. Many high-ranking MSA-PSG officials, both locally and internationally, retained a pro-Khomeini attitude and those against regime left the organization. These people, Ali, an MSA-PSG member, calls "monafegh," or hypocrites.

The MSA-PSG has other grievances as well. According to Ali, a group he refers to only as "the opposition" employs the services of a "hit man."



"This person has been used by the opponent group. He is just being used to hit members of our group. Two, three times this man did it (attacked MSA-PSG

It spreads like malaria. It infects like malaria and it kills like malaria, but it only occurs in dogs.

Heartworm disease is a condition in dogs caused by Dirofilaria immitis, a worm that lives as an adult in the right side of the dog's heart.

The heartworm does all of its damage in its adult stage at which time the full grown male worm reaches a length of about six inches. The female heartworm becomes about 12 inches long, according to information provided by the veterinary hospital.

"If heartworm disease is not treated, it ultimately causes death," Dr. R.A. Taussig, associate professor of veterinary medicine, said.

In order to help control the disease the veterinary hospital is offering a heartworm testing clinic. The clinic is open to all people owning a dog. The next and last clinic date is Thursday at 1:15.

Symptoms of heartworm infection can be detected by observing the animal.

"Severe infection of the animal results in coughing, labored breathing, tiring and general weakness," Taussig said.

IN ADVANCED STAGES, the heart becomes badly damaged along with the lungs and the liver, according to Taussig.

"The time to treat a dog is when the animal is first infected. If you wait until the symptoms appear then it may be too late for treatment to take affect," Taussig said.

Saving a dog's life in the advanced stages of heartworm disease is difficult if not impossible. Many dogs will die of heart failure caused from the damage done by the heartworm, according to Taussig.

The disease is common to dogs and is not known to threaten other animals.

The infection is transmitted from dog to dog by mosquitos. An infected mosquito bites a dog and passes into the dog's blood stream the infective larva. The larva stays under the animal's skin for approximately three months. During this time it grows to about three inches long. After this stage is completed it then migrates into the heart. The heartworm stays in the right side of the heart and in adjoining blood vessels.

ACCORDING TO Taussig this is where the disease does most of its damage. Since the disease is spread from dog to dog by mosquitos it is hard to control.

"We were alarmed at the number of cases we have seen," he said.

The disease was initally prevalent on the southern coastal areas due to its warm climate.

"With a more mobile population today, many dogs are being moved around a lot more today than in years past," Taussig said.

But with today's advancements in veterinary medicine there is hope for prevention. The main concern is to keep the worm from reaching the adult stage in the animal's system.

This can be prevented if dog owners have their pets tested for heartworms. If the test comes out positive then treatment is given to keep the worm from growing and causing damage.

FOR DOGS WITHOUT heartworm, preventive measures can be taken by pet owners to insure the dog's health. A new drug is on the market that will prevent the larva from growing into the mature stage and causing damage. The drug contains a combination compound named styrylpyridinium chloridediethylcarbamazine.

"If an infected mosquito bites a dog treated with this drug then the larva will die," Taussig said.

However, this drug must not be administered to infected dogs until they have been converted into the negative stage.

For dog owners concerned about the heartworm condition Taussig invites them to attend Thursday's clinic.

According to Taussig the clinic offers a special price to test the dogs. After the test has been administered to the dog, then the result will be mailed to the owner.

"Four percent of the dogs tested have had the heartworm disease," Taussig said.

According to Taussig the primary concern of having the clinic is to prevent an epidemic of heartworm disease from breaking out.

Haunting Phantom Pass remembered to NCAA

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

It may well be remembered as the Phantom Pass. It will haunt Fred Brown, but it lifted the weight of 20 seasons without a national championship off the shoulders of North Carolina Coach Dean Smith.

Brown, a sophomore guard from Georgetown University who had committed three turnovers earlier in the game, was assigned to bring the ball downcourt with 15 seconds left in the NCAA basketball championship game Monday night. North Carolina led by one, 63-62, on a 16-foot jump shot by freshman guard Michael Jordan.

There was a dull roar from the crowd, announced at 61,612, in the Louisiana Superdome. Tar Heels fans, waving blue and white pompons, drew a last, deep breath and braced for Georgetown's final shot.

It never came.

"I saw him (Brown) pick up the ball at the top of the key," North Carolina's James Worthy said. "He was going to throw to someone on the wings. I thought he'd try to lob it over me or throw it away from me."

GEORGETOWN HAD a standard play for the situation, and Coach John Thompson, with the seconds ticking away, chose not to call timeout.

"If I had called timeout, I didn't know what defense Dean would have called, so what play I would have called would not have made any difference," Thompson said.

Eric "Sleepy" Floyd, Georgetown's All-American guard, was waiting near the baseline for the ball. His shooting arm, like a pump, was primed to go. He already had scored 18 points that night.

"I was cutting to the corner, and we had spread out their defense," Floyd said. "We had them at several disadvantages. There were several openings. We had confidence in every player out there that he could shoot the ball and make it."

But no one got that chance. Brown's pass went directly to Worthy on the right side of the key. There was no one else around.

"I was surprised that his pass was right in my chest," Worthy said. Worthy took the ball downcourt, tried to dribble out the clock but was fouled by Eric Smith with two seconds left. Worthy missed both free throws, but there was too little time for Georgetown.

AFTER THE BUZZER sounded, the North Carolina bench erupted in ecstasy. After 21 seasons as Tar Heels coach, Smith finally had won a national championship — a goal sought with determination by the players who admired him so much. Smith had taken North Carolina to 15 previous NCAA tournaments and six times he had been to the Final Four without a title.

Even Smith, who normally shows a stoic exterior, was caught up in the postgame revelry. He was lofted atop his players' shoulders and helped Worthy cut down the Georgetown net.

On the Georgetown bench, there were tears of bitter disappointment. Thompson took time to say a personal word to each of his 14 players.

"I told Freddie that he had won more games for us than he had lost," Thompson said. "I told him not to worry, it was one of those human errors."

IMMEDIATELY AFTER the game, Smith took time to express his gratitude to his players, especially his seniors, for whom he dearly wanted the title.

Later, after he had time to collect his thoughts, he reflected on the years he had been called a choker.

"A bright writer i Charlotte once said the reason I hadn't won a national championship was because of my system," Smith said. "Now, I can finally say that's ridiculous. It's not the system that loses games. You use the talent that you have."

SMith added that this was the only season it would have bothered him to lose "because I truly felt we had the best team. I don't know if we were the best team tonight, but I think we were the luckiest."

The game will be rememdered as an outstanding contest between two great team and two great coaches. It will be remembered as a confrontation of will power and might. It will be remembered for its record-setting crowds at the Superdome.

IT WILL BE remembered for the Phantom Pass and for the coolness under fire of Jordan, a freshman, who scored the winning basket. It will also be remembered for another freshman, Georgetown 7-footer Patrick Ewing, who provided those in attendance and a national television audience with a glimpse of the future.

Not since 1959, when California beat West Virginia 71-70, had there been a national title game decided by one point. Most have been blowouts.

Smith and Thompson are close, personal friends who set aside their relationship to guide their teams in combat for the ultimate prize of their vocation.

"There were double problems in my mind which caused me to be more emotional than I normally would be," Thompson said, "because of my affection for the guy who sitting on the other bench. I made up my mind today that I was not going to be a nice guy."

The battle between Worthy, who scored a career-high 28 points, and Ewing who had 23 points and 11 rebounds, was a toss-up until the end. Giving perhaps the greatest of his career, Ewing was perhaps not beaten, just outnumbered.

And then there was Jordan, who said he had a vision before the game that he would get a chance to win it all in the final seconds.

'Cat teams to play sit-down game

By JOEL TORCZON
Collegian Reporter

Those who believe basketball players such as Ed Nealy and Tammy Romstad and their respective men's and women's teams have already played their last games of the season at Ahearn Field House are in for a surprise.

On April 2, the men and women's basketball teams will take on a new form of basketball — wheelchair.

The game will integrate the K-State players with a team called the Kansas City Purples, and give the fans a last chance to watch the departing seniors such as Nealy, Romstad, Tyrone Adams, and others in action.

Students for Handicapped Concerns (SHC), a campus group under the guidance of Gretchen Holden, assistant director of Services for Physically Limited Students (SPLS), is the sponsor of the game.

"This is our fourth annual wheelchair benefit basketball game," Holden said, "so we hope the game has been established as something of an institution on the K-State campus."

Asked about the purpose of the tournament, Craig Perbeck, freshman in general business, replied, "We need to raise money to keep the shuttle service for handicapped (either permanently or temporarily disabled) students running and to provide other programs for students with physical limitations."

HOLDEN ADDED that "another purpose of the game is to promote awareness on campus and the community of individuals with physical limitations."

Holden continued saying that because many people are uneasy or uncomfortable around people with disabilities, "this may lead people to ignore the handicapped person or treat them differently from other people."

"Wheelchair basketball brings people together in both the planning and the playing of the game and may help to overcome misconceptions people have about people with disabilities," she said.

Perbeck remarked that preparation is necessary for the game to be a success.

"I have been contacting different campus groups and community businesses to help by either donating time or money or both to defray the costs of running the game," he said.

THE RESPONSE of the physically-limited individuals at Lee Annex and Big Lakes has been "overwhelming," Holden said.

As in the past wheelchair basketball games, Willie Wildcat, the pep band and cheeleading squad will be at the game, according to Holden.

Holden termed the Kansas City Purples, who finished with a 17-4 record last year, as a "highly-regarded and competitive team."

The Purples are made up of players who have physical disabilities and are unable to compete at basketball without wheelchairs, Holden said.

"Can you imagine trying to dribble a ball and wheel a wheelchair at the same time?" Holden asked. "These players have developed a high level of skill at this sport."

Holden said the Purples' experience shouldn't scare the Wildcats.

"In the past, the K-State teams have really gotten into the game," she said. "Some of the players have now played in several wheelchair games and they are getting very good."

Tickets for the game, which will start at 7:30 p.m., will be sold at the Union and at the door. The men will play the first half and the women will finish up in the second.

Kelly wins Wade Trophy as finest female athlete

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Pam Kelly, who led Louisiana Tech to two consecutive national basketball titles, Tuesday was named winner of the fifth Wade Trophy, emblematic of the finest female player in the nation.

"I gave Mom something to be happy for," the soft-spoken three-time All-American said. "I only wish she were here (in New York) to see this."

Born in Columbia, La., the 6-foot Kelly led the Lady Techsters to the Final Four for four straight years. Louisiana Tech won the Association of Intercollegiate Athletics for Women (AIAW) crown in 1981 and the inaugural NCAA women's title last week.

"She's battled against taller players her whole career, yet game after game her performance is consistently outstanding," said Lady Techster Coach Sonja Hogg. "Pam has amazed me since her freshman year and we are elated that she has been honored with the Wade Trophy."

Kelly holds the school record for most points in career, most rebounds in career, most points in a season, most games in double figures in career and in a season, and best field goal percentage in a season. She led Louisiana Tech in scoring as a freshman even though she started only three games.

The award is named for the legendary Margaret Wade, the former women's head basketball coach at Delta State University.

With Kelly at center, Louisiana Tech posted a 143-10 record in her four years. She also led Caldwell Parish High school to the Louisiana state championship.

This year, Kelly hit 65 percent from the field as she averaged just over 20 points per game despite playing only 23 minutes a contest.

Three coaches received the 1982 Stayfree Coach of the Year awards. They are C. Vivian Stringer of Cheyney State College in the large college category; Darlene May of Cal PolyPomona in the small college category; and Paul Sanderford of Louisburg, N.C., Junior College in the junior-community college division.

Student Foundation wants to congratulate the new officers for 1982-83.

members) and no one tried to stop him," Ali said.

Then, according to Ali, the "hit man" approached a member of the MSA-PSG in the Union and struck him in the neck. Ali assisted the injured man to the hospital and the man later brought charges against his assailant — the county attorney refused the case.

The man identified by MSA-PSG members said he had no connection with the incident.

THE MSA-PSG also expressed discontent with campus regulation of student activities.

After spring semester classes adjourned last year, the MSA-PSG staged a demonstration in front of the Union.

Alik, MSA-PSG member, related the incident:

"We are marching. It has been going on for at least two hours... Suddenly an opposition group, counter-revolutionaries, started, you know, giving hand-outs and shouting against us... and right at that time the police must stop (it)! Right away. Because they have no right to demonstrate. (MSA-PSG had a demonstration permit and the other group did not.) If we would do it without, we would be in jail right now!"

Alik said also attending the demonstration were "FBI agents between the curtains by the window where the Information Desk is, taking pictures."

Art Stone, director of Security and Traffic, said he and another officer were behind the curtains but were not taking pictures. He added, "the only reason we were there was to avoid a physical confrontation, not to check permits."

The OIS is registered with UAB and has representatives on the International Coordinating Council.

"Regi," an Iranian graduate student, said that although the organization had no stated political stance, members are anti-Khomeini.

During the UAB fall 1981 registration MSA-PSG sought to have the OIS' registration revoked. They said the OIS was not representing "the true Iranian people," and presented a petition against the OIS — signed by about 30 Iranians.

According to three Iranian students, many of those signatures were obtained under the threat that funds from students' families in Iran would be cut off.

AHMED SAID only the MSA-PSG leaders know what is going on in the Iranian government and they misinform members.

Ali said most members of opposing Iranian groups "don't really know what is going on."

Statements of the pro-Khomini and anti-Khomeini factions also conflict in reference to physical attacks.

All anti-Khomeini groups disclaim accusations of violence.

However, after the MSA-PSG demonstration this summer, the rear window of a member's car was smashed, according to the car owner.

"The ISA," said a member who asked to be identified as Mobarez, "is an international group to oppose Khomeini and support democracy." He said although divisions occur among those opposed to Khomeini they are "united in cause."

The members of MSA-PSG are not always from the K-State campus, according to Mobarez, as it is an international organization with chapters on campuses worldwide.

The IMSS is less politically and more religiously oriented than many Iranian groups.

According to Regi, the group has no set political stance, but all members oppose Khomeini's regime.

"Religion is not far from politics. They cannot be kept completely apart," said another member of IMSS.

There are other Iranian groups on campus, but they are smaller or keep a lower profile. None are formally recognized on campus.

Anghi summed up the intensity of the Iranian political feud, saying, "We support it (our political belief) until the last drop of our blood. No matter if it takes our life, our wives, children, our property — I don't care. We stand for it."

ATTENTION

HARMLESS NATIONAL Guard maneuvers turn into a nightmarish, undeclared war fought by amateur, weekend soldiers in Southern Comfort, (Showing Friday and Saturday, March 26 and 27 in Forum Hall), a drama of survival set in the wintry swamps of Louisiana. When the Guardsmen unknowingly invade Cajun poaching lands, then wildly shoot blanks at the natives as a prank, a terrifying ordeal is triggered in which the Cajuns seek deadly revenge. They kill the Guard leader almost immediately, leaving the others lost in a maze of nearly impenetrable marshy bottomlands, bayous and stagnant bogs, without navigation or communication equipment. Survival is all that matters. The disorganized men slowly turn on each other out of fear, while also trying to escape the avenging swamp dwellers. They seem to be doomed. Keith Carradine (The Long Riders) and Powers Boothe (TV's The Guyana Tragedy), in his major motion picture debut, brilliantly head the cast as two strangers who become friends out of mutual respect as much as necessity. Director Walter Hill (The Warriors, The Long Riders) carries the plot of Southern Comfort to its most suspenseful end, utilizing the eerie swamp, the tension of the men, and their desperate, disintegrating civility to elicit a strong, gut reaction from the audience. The film doesn't miss a beat in its jolting effect—your heart will, though. (128)

Thunderbird crash cause is discovered

HAMPTON, Va. (AP) — A jammed shock absorber was blamed Wednesday for a chain-reaction crash which killed the pilots of four Air Force Thunderbird jets in January.

The problem in the lead plane was not apparent to the pilot, Maj. Norman Lowry III, until he tried to pull from the backwards loop, Gen. W.L. Creech, commander of the Tactical Air Command, told a news conference at Langley Air Force Base here.

The other three pilots, flying in close formation and keying on Lowry's aircraft, did not realize what was happening until too late and followed Lowry's plane into the ground, the general said.

The accident occurred Jan. 18 as the precision flight team, flying T-38 Talon jets, practiced at Indian Springs auxiliary airfield, 40 miles from Nellis Air Force Base near Las Vegas, Nev.

The front half of the loop was perfect, Creech said, but on the back side Lowry could not move his horizontal stabilizers to the proper angle because the stabilizers' load relief cylinder — basically a shock absorber — was jammed.

Lowry had both hands on the control stick on impact, apparently trying to move the stabilizers, Creech said. A pilot normally has one hand on the throttle, where the radio button is, also indicating that Lowry lacked time to warn the other pilots, the general said.

With the investigation complete, the search will begin for replacement Thunderbird pilots, Creech said.

The team also will switch to F-16 fighters from the T-38s, and will be ready to deploy with a regular squadron in case of war, Creech said.

Reagan: No nuclear arms freeze

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan said Wednesday night that if a new right-wing government takes over in El Salvador and turns away from social reform, "it would give us great difficulties." But he declined to say what he would do about it.

The president opened his first prime time news conference by rejecting any immediate freeze of nuclear weapons, saying that the Soviet Union has a "definite margin of superiority" that must first be balanced.

Dealing with El Salvador, Reagan put the emphasis on the turnout in national elections there last Sunday. The divided outcome of that balloting has raised the prospect of a rightwing coalition that might repudiate the policies of President Jose Napoleon Duarte.

"We're watching this very carefully," Reagan said. "It would give us great difficulties if the government turned away from the reforms that have been instituted..."

Reagan said the election turnout showed "a real desire for democracy there." So he said he was optimistic and would avoid answering the question of what the United States would do if a new government jettisoned reform.

Concerning his budget faceoff with Congress, Reagan said he is not an inflexible "great stone face" on his high-deficit federal budget and is willing to listen to proposals for compromise.

He said it is possible that some reductions in the defense budget could be achieved without endangering U.S. security, but he offered no specific compromise along those lines.

The president's 1983 budget plan has drawn congressional complaints over a deficit now estimated at $96 billion. Reagan said, "I am listening, and I'm not inflexible and remaining a great stone face."

He said one of the worst signals the administration could send would be "an outright retreat" from major facets of his tax cuts and spending curbs.

"You don't increase taxes in a recession," Reagan said.

He also said the most important thing that can be done to help people suffering due to the economic slump is to continue the drive to reduce federal spending.

Reagan began his televised and broadcast news conference with a statement and an answer rejecting any immediate freeze on U.S. and Soviet nuclear weapons.

As he had before, the president called for a superpower effort to reduce the level of nuclear weaponry.

Explaining, Reagan said: "The truth of the matter is that on balance the Soviet Union does have a definite margin of superiority, enough so that there is a risk..."

"And I think that a freeze would not only be disadvantageous, even dangerous to us."

Local ministers angered by Maranatha, claim ticket promotion plan is misleading

By SCOTT KENYON
Staff Writer

People all over the country are raving about the movie "Chariots of Fire." However, some of the loudest raving has come as a result of the controversy arising from the sale of movie tickets locally. The complaints are coming from area pastors, upset about the local Maranatha assembly selling discount tickets to the movie.

"They (Maranatha) are using something very wholesome and turning it into something cruel," said the Rev. C.J. Conklin, priest at Seven Dolors Catholic Church. He said Maranatha is being deceptive in promoting the film without its own name.

Rod Saunders, campus minister for Ecumenical Christian Ministries explained that the area pastors got involved in the ticket sales when they received an invitation from a group called the "Manhattan Area Films Committee" to a March 3 preview of the movie.

AT THE SCREENING, viewers were handed another letter that contained the names of committee members, three of which Saunders said he knew as members of Maranatha.

Mike Godwin, chairman of the committee, addressed the group after the screening and asked for the help of the pastors in selling the tickets at 50 cents less than the $3 admission price.

"He only made one allusion to the fact that it was a money-making project," Saunders said.

Saunders, who called the actions "intentional deceit," admitted that Godwin identified himself when asked directly.

"None of us were smart enough to know," said Conklin, who took tickets to sell to his congregation.

"I was very embarrassed," he said. He returned his 300 tickets to the assembly house. He said that all of the pastors who also took tickets have returned them to the group, but are not returning the money from tickets already sold. The money will go directly to a group called Inspirational Films.

Biology student arraigned for poisoning try

Sotaro Kotake, graduate in biology, was arraigned Tuesday in Riley County District Court on charges of attempted first degree murder.

According to Capt. Larry Woodyard, commander of criminal investigations division at the Riley County Police Department, charges were brought against Kotake in connection with the alleged attempted cyanide poisoning of his wife, Esterlina, on Thursday.

Woodyard said both Kotake and his wife apparently ingested the poison in soda pop.

Esterlina was released from The Saint Mary Hospital on Friday. Kotake is still hospitalized and reported to be in stable condition.

A preliminary hearing has been set for April 7.

Senate to vote on Ag request for funding

Student Senate will vote on a bill tonight calling for the allocation of $4,342 to the 11 agricultural judging teams.

If passed, the allocated money would pay 49.4 percent of the teams' costs for food and lodging when they travel to competitions. The Agriculture College Council would pay the remaining 50.6 percent.

First reading of another bill providing $1,436 to Student Governing Association for the purchase an electronic memory typewriter will also be heard tonight. Funds for purchasing the typewriter would come from long-range reserves for capital outlay.

Senate will also vote on approval of the six standing committee members.

Geri Greene, senate chairman and junior in journalism and mass communications, said all senators, except graduate and veterinary medicine senators, must serve on a standing committee. Senators apply to serve on the committee of their choice and are chosen by committee chairmen.

Student members of the four University judicial boards and the SGA attorney general have been nominated by Bill Rogenmoser, student body president and senior in secondary science education. The nominations will be reviewed by senate tonight. Sixteen students turned in applications. Members were chosen through interviews.

Senators will also vote to commend Pat Bosco, assistant to the vice president of student affairs, and the Open House Committee, for their work on Open House.

During the open meeting period, Bob Evans, director of student financial assistance, will speak to senate about the current situation of financial aid and the impact it will have on students.

"We are having someone speak every week so that the directors, deans and other people who work with students can talk to senators," Greene said.

Evans is the second official to speak in the open period as a part in this service to senators.

Police arrest man suspected of nude thievery

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — A 26-year-old man was charged Wednesday with second-degree robbery and indecent exposure in connection with a recent series of assaults on women in midtown Kansas City, authorities said.

Alexander D. Russell was arrested outside his Kansas City apartment Tuesday night. He was released on a signature bond after appearing Wednesday in Jackson County Circuit Court on the robbery charge. He posted a $50 bond on the indecent exposure charge.

Two women told police Tuesday night that a man wearing only tennis shoes and a Halloween mask had assaulted them and stolen their purses in separate attacks in a midtown neighborhood.

One of the women said the man asked her for directions as she walked toward her home. She said he then grabbed her purse. She struggled, and the man knocked her to the ground before fleeing with the purse, police said. A witness spotted the man getting into a car, got the license plate number and called police.

Three women told police on March 23 that they had been attacked in the same neighborhood by a nude man wearing facial disguises. Police said the attacker's disguises ranged from the derby and tie to sunglasses and a cap.

Industry fights botulism in largest can recall

SEATTLE — About 26 million cans of Alaskan salmon are being withdrawn in one of the largest botulism-related recalls in history, and the total could reach 40 million half-pound cans, federal officials said Wednesday.

Two canneries on Wednesday joined three others on the recall list. The action follows the botulism death of a man in Belgium in February.

The Food and Drug Administration is negotiating possible recalls by two more canneries, said Chris Smith, an FDA spokesman in Washington, D.C. "And there could be more," he said.

The recall already is the largest in the history of the canned salmon industry. The cans are checked for holes which promote breeding of botulin toxin on the contents.

FDA officials estimate the five canneries will recall about 26 million cans of salmon.

The largest botulism-related recall in FDA history was a 1974 canned mushroom recall involving more than 75 million cans distributed worldwide by more than 50 U.S. firms, Smith said. The FDA dates back to 1906.

Reactions vary on grandparent visitation rights

TOPEKA — A measure which would extend visitation rights to grandparents of children who have been adopted received mixed reviews Wednesday before the Senate Judiciary Committee.

Rep. Marvin Smith (R-Topeka), urged the panel to endorse the House passed bill, saying some grandparents are now being denied the right to see their grandchildren because an adoptive parent won't permit it.

The bill would apply only to grandchildren who have been adopted after the death of one of their natural parents and the surviving parent remarries. Smith said the courts do not now recognize such visitation rights.

No action was taken by the committee, but Harold Munger of Hays testified against the measure.

"Adopted children have three pairs of grandparents," said Munger, who is an adoptive parent.

"Why should one pair have visitation rights that are not granted to the other two?"

The bill would allow a judge to grant the visitation rights, but does not make it mandatory.

Wicked witch blocks Yellow Brick Road issue

TOPEKA — Kansas may promote itself as the Land of Ahs, but senators sensitive about the state's image do not want a Yellow Brick Road.

After a humorous half-hour hearing, a Senate committee refused Wednesday, on a 4-4 tie vote, to endorse a bill designating U.S. 54 in southwestern Kansas as the Yellow Brick Road.

And with that vote, the idea which has attracted so much novelty in the 1982 legislative session will be shelved for this year.

It was the novelty which bothered many committee members.

A Yellow Brick Road might promote tourism, but senators thought it also would just fortify existing sterotypes of Kansas.

Prior to voting, Frey showed senators a greeting card he thought appropriate for the occasion.

It circulated around the committee table, followed by chuckles.

The front of the card said: "Follow the Yellow Brick Road..." and the inside continued "...straight to hell."

After the meeting, Sen. Bill Morris (R-Wichita), who supported the bill rode down the elevator with Frey.

As he got off, he turned and said: "I guess the wicked witch won."

Space knowledge is for peace only

Once again Columbia has done it, accomplishing a feat that — until a year ago — had been science fiction.

The world has a re-usable spaceship.

And while Columbia and the whole shuttle program has gone over budget, man has mastered the technological problems and the stars are ours.

A few more flights and the shuttle will be earning its own way, and even some possibly stiff competition from European-built booster rockets will not dim the accomplishments of the program.

The shuttle has proven its reliability and now can be used as simply another tool in the search for the future.

Of course, the military will push for its space aboard upcoming flights, but the shuttle is not — and should not be viewed as — a military venture.

In fact, it could be a major force for peace, by alleviating some of the conditions which cause problems on earth.

Although the exploration of space may not be of philosophical interest to all, the knowledge gained will eventually be very important to everyone.

The quest for space has been directly or indirectly responsible for everything from Teflon to medical breakthroughs to the material that seals tires when they're flat.

Not all of the contributions have been good, particularly the military technology.

But the answers are there.

We need only ask the right questions.

Drinking license is a feasible idea

Wednesday the Kansas House passed a bill calling for tougher penalties for convicted drunken drivers. The bill states that first offenders will be fined from $100 to $500, their driver's license will be revoked for a minimum of 90 days and the offender will be required to spend two days in jail or give 60 hours in public service.

This quick legislative effort, by Karen Griffiths (R-Newton), came as a surprise move to most House members but similar efforts to battle drunken driving are occuring nation-wide. Griffiths stated, in a Associated Press report, that "this is the year we must make a stand."

Perhaps a more surprising effort, related to alcohol consumption and drunken driving, occurred during a AP reported legislative panel meeting. The panel was seeking ideas to increase revenue through excise taxes paid on liquor by the drink.

Connie Makin, a general manager of the Holiday Inn in Overland Park, suggested that excise taxes not be increased. Instead, all drinkers should be required to puchase a drinking license, just as hunters and drivers must. Makin pointed out that taking a convicted drunken driver's license away only stopped him from driving, not drinking.

The idea is remarkable in its logic and its uniqueness. Would implementation only create additional bureaucracy and paper-pushing or is it a visible curb to a problem that affects every citizen?

It is too late for this legislative session to consider enacting such an idea but it should not be laughed off as unfeasible.

Taking a stand behind the scenes

Everybody loves a controversy but there is never a time when it's perfectly safe to take a stance. As obvious as this may seem, I have found my friends and acquaintances (loyal fans?) almost begging me to write about something controversial. They tell me I'm playing it too safe.

I guess it's been quite some time since I've broached a topic that drew angry letters to the editor. It's been even longer since I tangled with the University residency committee.

I believe much of this comes from being too open-minded for my own good. I like to consider both sides of an issue and thus end up avoiding any kind of solid commitment. I'm this way about abortion.

While I can understand and agree with many of the arguments of anti-abortionists, there are times when I believe that abortion is a viable alternative. By the same token, I don't believe anyone can honestly say that abortion should not be used as a method of birth control. One who is careless and carefree about intercourse must be willing to take on the responsibility that this entails.

I HAVE YET to take a stand on gun control, nuclear arms or the new coliseum. On two out of three of these issues, I know what I believe but don't know that I expect others to agree with me.

Like most people, I also have ethical concerns. I am concerned about the Janet Cooke's of the newspaper profession. I am concerned with the Harrison Williams' in the Senate. And, I am bothered when our nation suffers the embarrassment of Watergate. However, many of these beliefs and concerns are better voiced in the company of friends and not necessarily on the pages of this publication.

Some of the most fascinating classes I've taken are those that deal with ethical considerations and controversial topics in the news.

Is genetic engineering an ethical practice?

How about euthanasia?

IS A MAN dead when his mind stops functioning, or does death only occur when the heart and lungs cease to operate?

Are we all afraid of intellectual death?

How about intellectual birth?

I can't pin down the reason that I hesitate to argue a cause in the newspaper. Perhaps it has something to do with the inability to defend that cause to one who misunderstands my motives or reasoning. I prefer a face-to-face confrontation where I can convince the antagonist that I am right and he is wrong. Or, honestly, so that I may see the error of my ways if the situation demands.

IN MY DAYS as editor of this newspaper, I had my share of controversial arguments. I argued freedom of the press as opposed to freedom of speech with countless foreign students. I took a stance on unsigned letters to the editor. And, I had my share of disagreements with Collegian staff members. All of this was behind the scenes (as it should be).

However, there is nothing as exciting as a good, intelligent argument. I don't mean a fight but rather a meeting of the minds. Where two souls clash, introduce a problem and arise on a higher plane of understanding. It's something that I don't see enough of at K-State.

For example, one of my more-interesting classes this semester deals with literature. What makes it interesting is the thought processes that are stimulated by class discussion. I've seen more in literature in the past two months than I have in 21 years.

IT'S EXCITING. The look of sudden realization or sudden understanding I see on my classmates faces (and no doubt appears on my own). The stance of one who doubts what he's told and yet is willing to give the foreign idea a chance.

Being a writer places me in a responsible position — that of stimulating the thought processes of those who read my words. And, in marketing classes, I am taught to give the public what it wants.

In this, I beg to concede failure. I will keep my private controversies and deny the public the debate it seems to want.

Policy decisions need student input

Student government has no power, at least that is what I have been told. Student concerns and feelings don't matter because students are only here for four years; it is really the administrators and alumni that have a voice in policy-making at K-State. Not true!

Students do have a voice. I refuse to succumb to the reasoning that students aren't around long enough to deserve a voice in molding the future of K-State.

Students have a stake in policy, because it directly affects them. Think for a moment about the policies that affect your daily routine. As students we are obliged to obey the traffic and parking regulations, library policies, fulfill graduation requirements and abide by enrollment and drop-add rules. These and many more policies, set by "others," dictate student behavior and therefore, demand student input in their shaping.

K-STATE students are lucky. We have always been involved in policy-making. Student input on the Union Governing Board has been instrumental in making it a student's Union. In years past student input was influential enough to afford students the front parking lot closest to the Union.

Construction of the Recreation Complex is the result of active student voices committed to fulfilling the students' needs.

Student government this year, as in the past, is dedicated to providing student input on policies and happenings that affect students at K-State.

However, without the support of individual student voices we cannot fulfill our potential effectiveness. It is one thing for the Student Senate to take a stand on an issue, but it is clearly another for the voice of united students to sound. Student Senate is eager to make a difference this year in the policy-making that affects us as students, but we need each and every student's support to be effective.

YOU AS STUDENTS can express your opinion about policies by addressing Student Senate, talking with your senator, writing a letter to administrators or signing a petition. Bill Rogenmoser and I are available in the Student Government Services office to help you find the avenue to best allow your views to be heard.

Last week the traffic and parking regulations for next year were available for public display. Such a display can be equated with soliciting criticism. We've had the public display, now it is our turn to offer student opinion. On their face the new regulations are almost identical to the current regulations. However, within them there is an important change.

IF PASSED by the Board of Regents, these new regulations will allow freshmen students to park on campus. What are the consequences of this change? It would allow for more than a 25 percent increase in the number of students eligible to purchase parking permits. This would increase the number of students competing for the same number of parking stalls.

Under the current policy freshmen students may request special parking privileges by appealing to the Traffic and Parking Council. Admittedly, allowing all freshmen to park on campus would make it easier for all freshmen to get permits. Do the advantages of allowing all freshmen to obtain a parking permit outweigh the disadvantages. What change would this inflict upon our already overcrowded parking lots?

We need your opinion to effectively communicate the feeling of students to the administration. There will be a table in the Union Thursday, Friday, and Monday to give students an opportunity to vocalize their concern.

Make your opinion known and your voice heard.

Right to life is basic natural law

Editor,

It would be my suggestion to Kelly Blair to think over the suggestions made in her editorial concerning abortion. Western society has always tried to place a high premium on all life. There have been, of course, grotesque deviations from this norm (Nazi Germany), but if one is familiar with the great works of Western civilization, he or she will find that we are a people who believe that all people have the right to the most basic of natural laws.

Life is the first of these rights. It is the people who support abortion who seek to change this basic tenet of our value system. Yesterday it was the Jew. Today it is the unborn. Who will be deemed "unfit" and "undesirable" tomorrow? Journalists?

Ms. Blair should look into some socio-economic statistics. As a nation, the United States contains a minority of the world's population yet consumes the majority of the world's resources. It would be hard to blame this on the unborn. Would Ms. Blair, or anyone else who expounds abortion in the name of "conservation" be willing to accept a decrease in her own standard of living in order to alleviate the hardships she is so concerned with in South Africa? I think not.

I agree that it is easy to point the finger at the innocent and much more difficult to look beyond simplistic solutions to the root of the problem with which we are faced. But we must not use the unborn as a scapegoat for the current crisis in which the loss of our human ideals plays so great a part. And please remember that this world has enough to satisfy our needs but not enough to satisfy our greed. We must be consistent with our pro-life heritage or be forced to face the fate of other civilizations and societies which have not.

Basketball quality increases pride

Editor,

As I watched the end of the NCAA Championship game Monday night, I was reminded of my spring break. I spent it traveling with the Pep Band and our men's basketball team. My heart ached when they showed the Georgetown players, the same way it ached the night we lost.

But I would like the players and everyone to know how proud I was to be there representing K-State and cheering on the team. What can be said that hasn't been said? Our guys are great and I'm sure I speak for everyone when I say that our Wildcats are number one with us, no matter who won the tournament.

We should also be very proud of our women's basketball team. They not only finished in the final eight of the women's NCAA, they knocked off the third-ranked team to get there.

The quality of basketball at our university is one of the reasons I'm very happy to tell people I go to K-State.

Faculty salaries suffer due to weak economy

Editor's note: This is the second in a two-part series.

By DOUG WARD
Collegian Reporter

Tight resources, increasing unemployment and a slacking economy all spell trouble for faculty at Kansas universities.

Because of these problems, faculty members are "taking it on the chin" when it comes to salary allocations, according to Sen. Paul Hess (R-Wichita), chairman of the Senate Ways and Means Committee.

Sen. Merrill Werts (R-Junction City) said that because of needs in other areas, Kansas taxpayers don't want more money allocated to faculty salaries.

Werts said he has visited with farmers who have lost money and with unemployed individuals. Both groups asked why more money should be given to the universities, he said.

"You might say the economy is having a direct effect on faculty salaries," Werts said.

Even though resources are tight, Hess said he is sympathetic toward the need to pay faculty well.

"No doubt faculty members feel they need and deserve more money," Hess said. "All state faculty salaries should be high priority."

BUT HESS pointed out that as the economy dwindles, legislative resources are tight.

"A university is not an island and must recognize that it must operate in the economy," he said. "At least there are not any of them (faculty members) losing jobs."

Heinz Bulmahn, president of Faculty Senate, said the economy is not sufficient justification to shortchange universities.

"We have had the same scenario for the past 10 years," Bulmahn said. "The legislature cannot continue to make excuses and expect to continue the kind of service that Kansas deserves and wants.

"We are in a semi-crisis situation in terms of retaining faculty members," he continued. "This is directly related to salaries and the support faculty receive in the area of equipment."

JEROME FRIEMAN, associate professor of psychology and chairman of the Faculty Senate Subcommittee on Faculty Salaries and Fringe Benefits, said although state revenue has been steadily going up for the past 10 years, faculty purchasing power has been going down.

In 1970, according to Frieman, higher education received 25 percent of the state general fund, but in 1981 that amount dropped to 18 percent.

"They (legislators) have elected to spread this money thinner," Frieman said. "While the general fund was rising rapidly they were letting us (universities) shrink."

Bulmahn said the legislature was using the economy as an excuse for not raising faculty salaries even when things were "robust."

"When farmers were receiving 30 percent more for their goods, we didn't get 30 percent more for our services," Bulmahn said.

According to Frieman, farm income has been "zipping up and down" for the last 10 years. Some years it was tremendously high, he said, while other years it was down.

"On an average over the past 10 years they (farmers) have done better than we have," Frieman said. "From 1970 to 1980, everybody did better than faculty."

IN RESPONSE to Hess's statement about none of the faculty being out of work, Frieman said that with enrollment continuing to maintain or rise, there is no need to fire any faculty members.

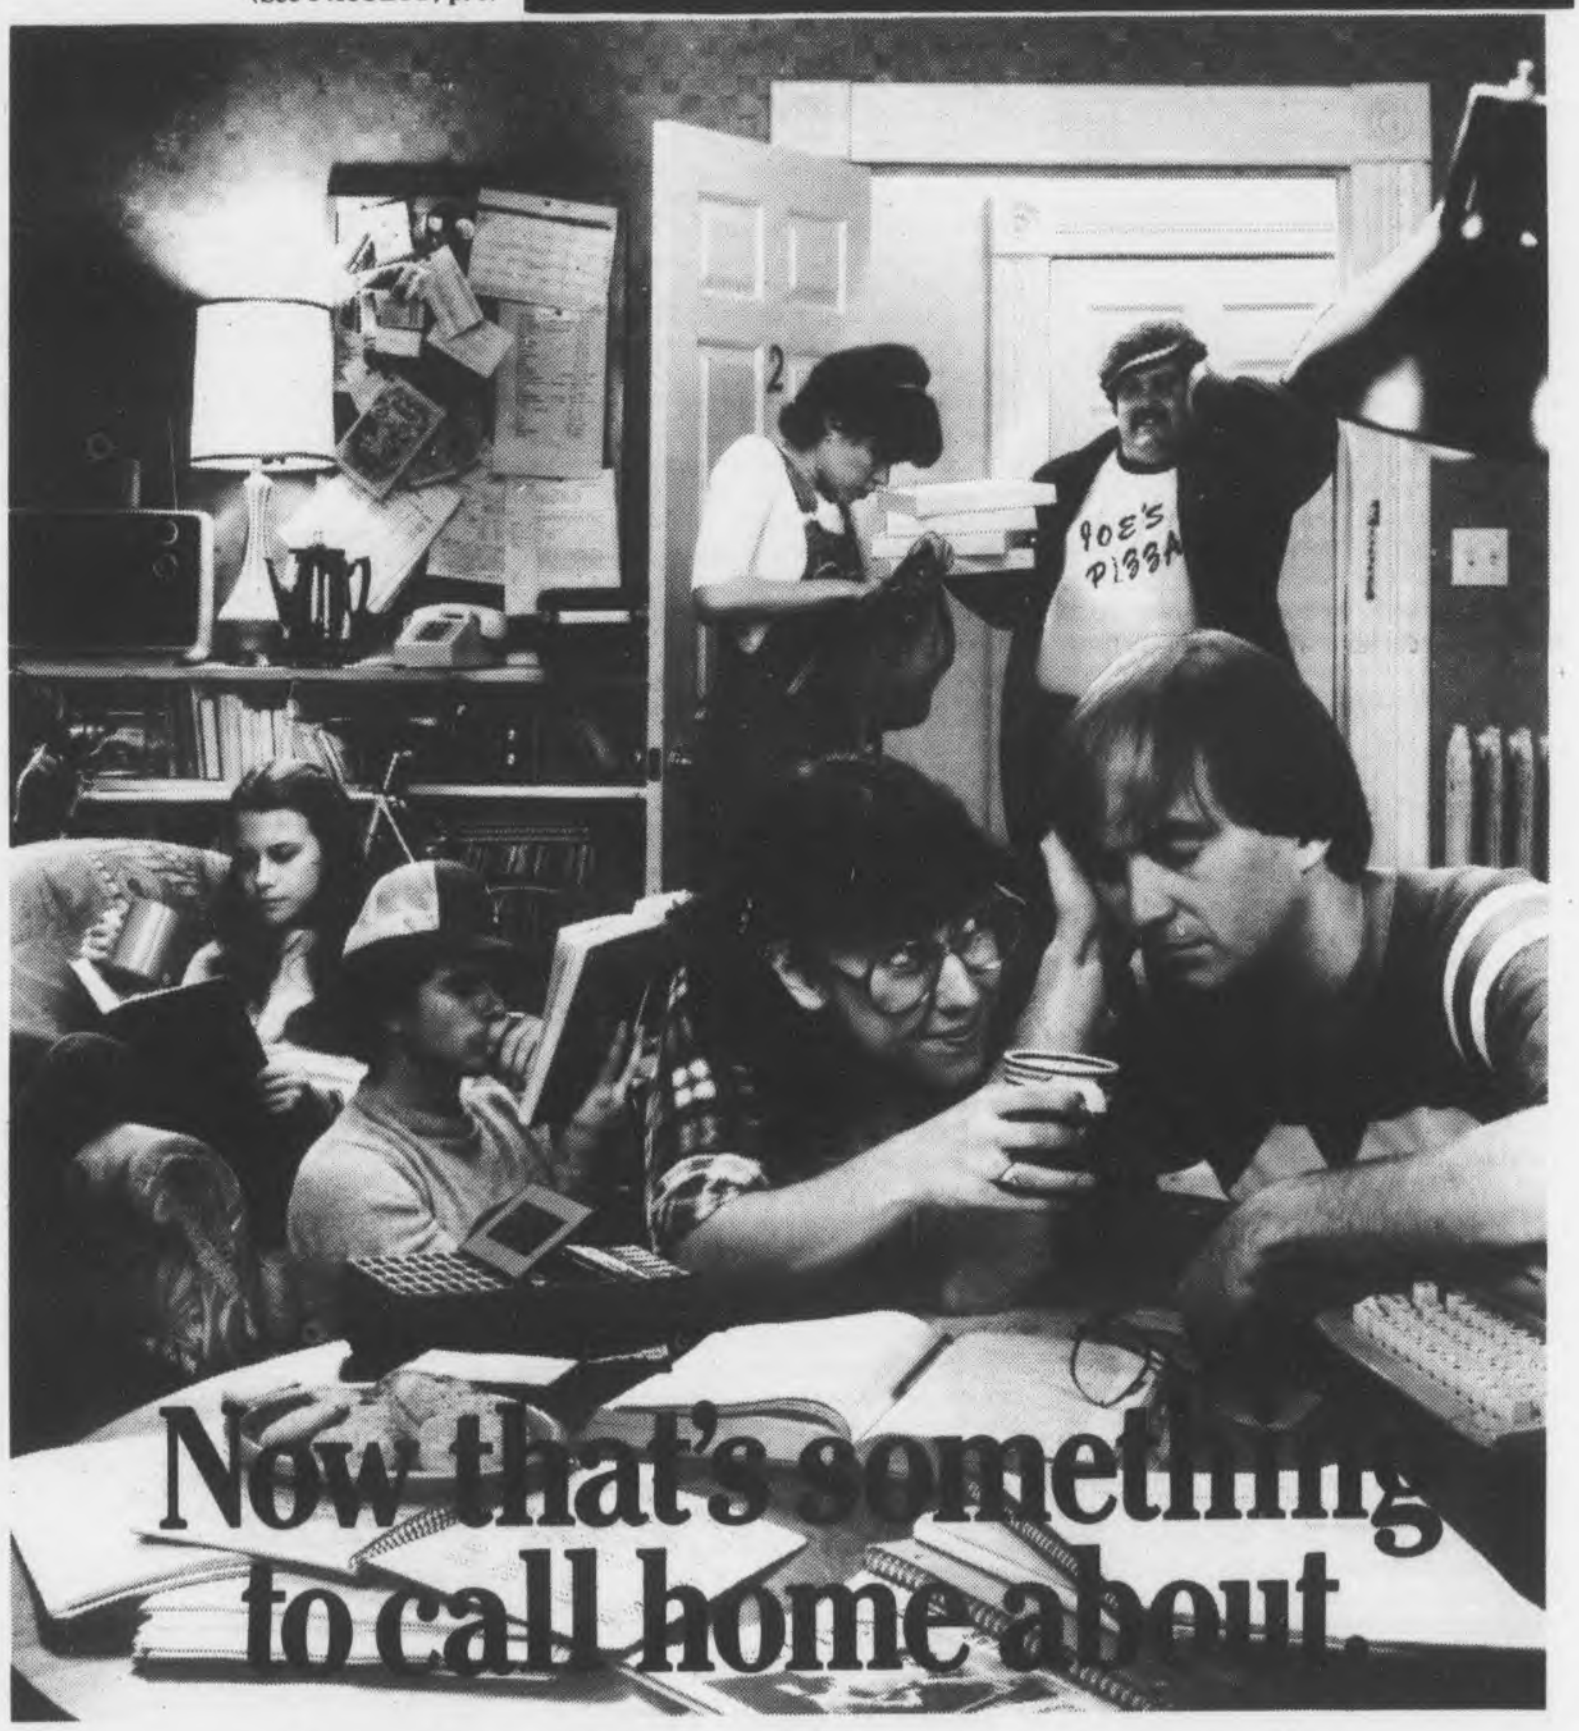
"If enrollment were going down, you can bet he (Hess) would be looking for heads to roll," Frieman said. "Our demand is up. That's the reason why no one has been fired."

One problem arises when raising faculty salaries is finding the necessary resources, according to Sen. Jerry Karr, (D-Emporia).

"We have been having drift and short fall and a shortage of funds — particularly in the last couple of years," Karr said.

The legislature is cautious not to increase taxes above what can be handled by the people of Kansas, he added.

"If (tax increase) is not popular and not politically workable," he said. "This makes attempts to improve and enrich faculty salaries very difficult to do."



SEN. ROSS DOYEN (R-Concordia), senate president, said he doesn't think faculty have been neglected and that faculty are well-compensated in most areas.

Health Fair attendance shatters old records

Many K-Staters are interested in their health. This was exemplified by the turnout at the Health Fair Wednesday in the Union Ballroom.

A record number of 650 people participated in the free Health Fair, far more than Cindy Culver, health educator at Lafene Student Health Center and Health Fair coordinator, said she had hoped or planned would.

"Originally we had hoped for a turnout of 300 to 400 people. We had 380 packets and test result forms. We had given out 225 after the first hour and all 380 after two hours. We ran off about 300 more copies of the test result forms just so that we could have a record of how many participated," Culver said.

Students, faculty and staff visited the 29 stations which included health screening tests, health education, safety and counseling.

One of the busier stations was height and weight screening. Body frame size was determined by taking a measurement of the wrist and then height and weight were measured and analyzed. According to a volunteer working at the station, few of the 600 people that visited that station were dangerously overweight — that being defined as being 20 percent more than normal for their height and frame size.

Another busy station was blood pressure measurement and analysis. There were a few cases of high blood pressure, most being among faculty and staff members, according to workers at that station.

One health screening test that caused a few people to look away was the finger prick blood test for anemia. Most of the people tested were not anemic, according to Culver.

The vision testing station, to determine near or farsightedness, was one that remained busy after the fair closed down. Testing for glaucoma was also available.

The Department of Health, Physical Education and Recreation's testing of cardiovascular fitness also proved to be a popular station. Participants rode a stationary bicycle for a few minutes and then heartrate was measured.

Most participants that wanted to know more about a specific subject dealing with drugs or health education could get information from the Med-Lins computer.

Guy Coffee, assistant professor in veterinary medicine, programmed the computer which gave a listing of articles from medical journals pertaining to the subject of questions asked about.

Information about legal and illegal drugs, acne treatment, hypoglycemia, high blood pressure and cancer were the most-asked-about subjects, according to Coffee.

The last screening station was review and referral. If a participant was abnormal in any of the tests he could be referred to a physician, Culver said. He said that due to the fair's success, organizers plan to have another one next year.

Salvadorian centrist party struggles to keep power

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — President Jose Napoleon Duarte's Christian Democrat Party, struggling to keep a share of power in war-torn El Salvador, told five rightist parties Wednesday that a government that excludes it will be unable to function.

Incomplete returns from Sunday's election showed that a rightist coalition could win 36 of the 60 seats in the constituent assembly, and that Duarte's centrist party would hold 24.

"We are the first political force in El Salvador and it has been shown that a Christian Democratic presence is an indispensable element in the solution of the country's problems," the party said in a two-page advertisement that appeared in local newspapers.

"The Salvadoran people has voted massively against violence and in favor of democracy, reforms and peace, granting a mandate to the (party) to continue direction of the process."

The advertisement appeared as leaders of the rightist parties were talking about forming a coalition to oust the Christian Democrats from power, which they currently share with the military in the junta that has been ruling the country for the past 29 months.

The Christian Democrats got a plurality of votes in Sunday's constituent assembly elections, according to incomplete unofficial returns.

Leftists boycotted Sunday's election, calling it a farce engineered by the Reagan administration, and guerrillas tried to disrupt the voting with concerted attacks here and in other cities. An estimated 33,000 people have been killed so far in the Salvadoran civil war.

However, voters went to the polls Sunday in unexpectedly high numbers, often casting ballots within earshot of gunfights.

The latest, still incomplete ballot-count showed a turnout of almost 1.2 million in a country of 4.8 million people.

The latest tally of 3,900 out of 4,556 ballot boxes showed the Christian Democrats leading with 429,247 votes or 40.7 percent.

Cashiered Maj. Roberto d'Aubuisson's ultra-rightist ARENA had 306,662 votes or 29.1 percent and a possible 19 seats, and National Conciliation, which ruled this country from 1961 until a coup put the junta in power in 1979, 193,582 or 18.4 percent and a possible 14 seats.

Democratic Action may get two seats, Popular Salvadoran Party one, and Popular Orientation none.

The assembly is to name a new interim president and government and write a constitution.

In a letter to the junta made public in Washington on Wednesday, President Reagan said the large voter turnout in the elections showed Salvadorans "clearly repudiated violence and voiced their commitment to a democratic future."

U.S. officials here and in Washington have said the administration will work with whatever group comes to power but that support for U.S. aid would be more difficult in Congress for a rightist government in El Salvador.

Astronauts enter debriefing; shuttle in 'terrific condition'

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) — Columbia's two astronauts, back from eight days in space, started two weeks of debriefings Wednesday as technicans at the New Mexico landing site battled blowing sand to ready the space shuttle for its return to Florida.

Jack Lousma and C. Gordon Fullerton, exhausted from Tuesday's return to Earth, were permitted to sleep late at their homes Wednesday but came to the office in the afternoon to start a 15-day debriefing.

Space agency doctors who examined the astronauts said they were in excellent health and had recovered well from the motion sickness both suffered during the first two days of their mission.

At White Sands Missile Range in New Mexico, where the astronauts landed Columbia on Tuesday, officials said the craft appeared to have suffered less damage than on its first two flights.

"The vehicle appears in terrific condition," said George Page, director of shuttle operations.

A close inspection found that at least one more heat-resistant tile was lost during the mission, but like the 37 reported lost early in the flight, it was not in a critical locaton.

Page said that as many as 1,200 of the shuttle's more than 30,000 tiles will be removed and treated to tighten their grip on the space craft's aluminum skin before the

Leavenworth wants Nixon library

City officials hope to lure tourists

LEAVENWORTH (AP) — The Leavenworth City Commission may hold the key to ending the 12-year search for a home for the Richard M. Nixon Library.

The commission agreed Tuesday night to investigate the possibility of locating the proposed Nixon library in Leavenworth. The city's tourism and convention committee will look into the proposal made by Mayor Pro Tem Clyde Graeber.

"He (Nixon) may be infamous, but he was still president of the United States," Graeber said. "We're constantly looking for ways to bring tourists into Leavenworth, and this would certainly do it."

However, Commissioner Lee Farnsworth expressed tongue-in-cheek reservations about the plan, saying that in the Leavenworth area, which has two state prisons, a federal penitentiary and a military prison, Nixon would "feel right at home, surrounded by prisons." Nixon never was charged with a crime.

Mayor Robert Dougherty echoed Farnsworth's reservations, saying, "I'd like to see a presidential library in Leavenworth, but I wish it didn't have to be his."

Nixon's lawyer, Stan Mortenson, said he had not been contacted by Leavenworth officials. But he said that since a proposal to put the library in Independence, Mo., was defeated, he has had a flurry of inquiries, mostly from Missouri, Oklahoma and Kansas.

"There's been literally a call or a letter every day," he said. "I've developed almost a form letter response to them."

William Zanders, executive director of the Leavenworth Chamber of Commerce, said Nixon's notoriety could make the Nixon library a bigger attraction than the nearby Dwight D. Eisenhower and Harry S. Truman libraries. The Nixon library, if located in Leavenworth, would be within 150 miles of the Eisenhower library in Abilene, and within 50 miles of the Truman library in Independence, Mo. Graeber said having the three libraries in the same area would be convenient for tourists.

Plans were under way in early 1970 to build the library in Whittier, Calif., Nixon's hometown. Whittier planned to offer 120 acres of land for the library, and the nonprofit foundation established to build the library boasted a net worth of almost $105,000.

Twelve years later, the lingering shadow of the Watergate scandal that forced Nixon to resign as president in 1974 has made the library an institution without a home.

Like officials in Independence, Duke University in Durham, N.C., recently rejected plans to accept the Nixon library.

Duke, Nixon's law school alma mater, cited economic reasons for scuttling a proposal in February to become the library's home. The school's faculty council also had voted to reject plans for a Nixon museum on the campus.

A proposal by Independence City Manager Keith Wilson Jr. to bring the library to Independence died when the City Council voted March 19 not to pursue the acquisition. Opponents of the plan said that a Nixon library in the late Truman's hometown would be an insult to Truman, who had publicly expressed his dislike for Nixon.

fourth test flight scheduled for late June or early July.

"It'll be a challenge (to meet the June date) but we haven't ruled it out yet, said Page.

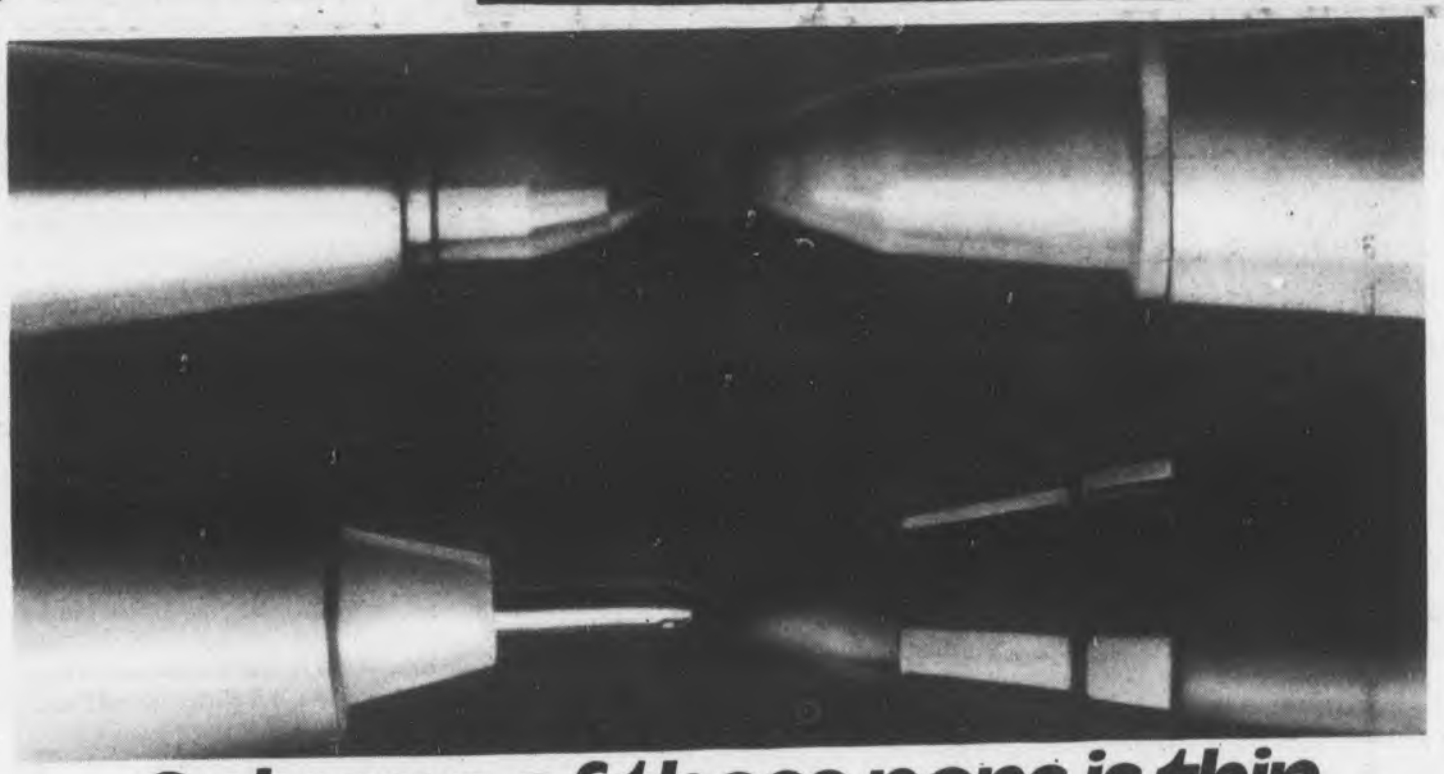
Blowing sand posed some problems after the spacecraft landed, but technicians quickly put covers over engines and other exposed fixtures. As a precaution, the workers vacuumed areas on the spacecraft where the sand could collect, Page said.

Workers also were draining surplus fuel and disengaging devices that activate propellants aboard the craft.

Page said Columbia would be mounted atop a jumbo jet by April 6 and then flown to the Kennedy Space Center at Cape Canaveral. The craft will make a refueling stop en route, probably in Louisiana, and arrive at the Florida space port April 7.

After the fourth mission, the reusable spacecraft, which is launched like a rocket and lands like an airplane, will be ready to fly payloads for paying customers.

The third mission blasted off from the Kennedy Space Center on March 22 and was to have landed Monday. A sandstorm at White Sands delayed the landing by one day until Tuesday.



The astronauts now face a mountain of paperwork. They must undergo intensive questions from engineers, space agency management personnel, medical officers, flight directors, and, perhaps toughest of all, from fellow astronauts. Lousma and Fullerton will spend long days speaking into tape recorders answering long lists of questions.

It's the extra-fine rolling ball of Pilot's remarkable new Precise Ball Liner Pen. (If you haven't guessed which one it is, look at the top photo again. It's the trim beauty on the bottom left.)

But unlike the others, the real beauty of Pilot's Precise Ball Liner is the extra-fine line it puts on paper. Ag judging teams seek food, lodging expenses

By JANE RAMSBOTTOM
Collegian Reporter

A decision is expected to be made tonight on whether or not student government will provide partial funding for the agricultural judging teams for food and lodging expenses during traveling to competitive events.

According to Dave Anderson, junior in agricultural economics and agriculture student senator, Ag Council can only fulfill 50.6 percent ($4,396.92) of the judging teams' total ($8,739) request for the next year's food and lodging. In addition to the Ag Council funds and $4,342.08 requested from senate, there is an estimated $16,823 for the individual team members to provide, Anderson said.

"Judging teams help with the recruitment of out-of-state students through publicity. In addition, alumni judgers have close ties with K-State and specific ties proven through the Ag Alumni Association," Anderson said.

ANDERSON CONTINUED, "Members, faculty and alumni of the College of Agriculture have proven the importance of their specific college through active involvement in nationwide, and campuswide activities and have demonstrated the importance of their college. The K-State judging teams represent K-State and the College of Agriculture wherever they go," he said.

When asked how many of the estimated 80 judges were out-of-state or non-agiculture students, Anderson said, those numbers were being researched, but weren't available.

When asked why the same request wasn't made last year, Anderson replied that the deadlines had passed by time the new senators could organize a request.

The controversy lies in whether the funding for judging teams is a priority right now. Esther Hagen, senate finance chairman and senior in home economics said, "They (judging teams) represent the University and serve an important function.

"As to the overall University, I would like to wait until final allocations in the fall. Then they can make additional requests above their line item (allotted amount per student). All college councils can be considered at the same time," she said.

"I'm not against any group coming for funds, but it's my responsibility to keep a University-wide perspective," Hagen said. "It's hard to say at this point whether they will get full request unless radical things happen during tentative allocations," Hagen added.

ACCORDING TO Anderson, "The decision on this bill should be based on the validity of the request and the importance of the team to K-State and their students.

"It should be brought to a decision now by considering that postponement of the decision would jeopordize the recruitment of members. And would be considering the same dollars on the same issue regardless of when it was decided, thus leaving no advantage to putting off the decision," Anderson said.

There is no reason to wait for a decision and acceptance of the request will make a difference if a couple of students join teams, Anderson added.

According to Hagen, the majority of the judging teams travel only minimally such as the floral judging teams which only competes at one national contest each year.

Traveling to one contest for many judges should not create insurmountable obstacles for an individual, she said.

Faculty

"I think the legislature has been very generous and has done quite well for them (faculty)," Doyen said.

He added that the legislature is giving faculty a 7.5 percent raise which is "more than every position in the state." Doyen continued saying that if a faculty member were looking for work it would be nice to see him line up at Boeing or some other place that has been hit with unemployment.

"We must look at the overall situation and we must judge our action accordingly," Doyen said.

Frieman said that even when the state was doing well, faculty purchasing power was decreasing.

"Now the state isn't doing so good and we're told we'll have to suffer with everything else," Frieman said. "Where was the money when things were good?"

"The point is," Bulmahn said, "the legislature continually thinks it can cut fat at the university level. Universities have been neglected for too long."

HESS SAID it is unfortunate that faculty members don't receive more money but he said he is "in touch and in tune to their needs."

"I'm not sitting isolation," he said. "Faculty doesn't always appreciate what the legislature does."

With 200 agencies and more than 100 programs to consider, Hess said he tries to be fair to all.

"I wish we had more money to give to faculty members and at the end of the session there will hopefully be extra money to put back into universities," he said.

"We are getting impacted from several directions at a time when higher education can't be overlooked," Karr said. "In the most critical areas it is important that we have the enrichment fund. Hopefully this will be a positive contribution to areas that are being hit hard."

President Duane Acker said the legislature is indeed demonstrating sensitivity in dealing with the need of higher education.

"I don't think there has been a year when they have listened more carefully," Acker said. "They have invested a lot of time and have carefully analyzed our needs."

Verlyn Richard, head of Department of Finance and member of the Faculty Senate Subcommittee on Salaries and Fringe Benefits said,"We try to convince the legislature of our needs, but we recognize their practices and limitations."

Group holds 'game shows' for students

By KIM REHM
Collegian Reporter

It was good, clean fun. It was comedy at its best. It was game show night with students as contestants.

It was the first running of the Kansas State University Association of Residence Hall (KSUARH) Game Night, Wednesday in Umberger Hall.

According to Kim Hefley, junior in consumer affairs and co-chairman of the show, the main purpose of the game night was to "have something at no cost to the residents."

"This is a hectic time of the school year and students are under a lot of pressure," she said. "This (game night) lets students go crazy for an evening and come away with some good prizes."

Some of the prizes donated by area merchants included a radio, meals from local restaurants, T-shirts, donuts, ice cream and free admission passes to local bars.

"There was also some clunkers (prizes) thrown in," Hefley said.

"Clunker" prizes included a box of 500 plastic glasses from the 1980 KSUARH Spring Fling, a used ski rental ticket, residence hall toilet paper, worn out articles of clothing and used athletic equipment.

"Everyone who plays the games will get something, even if it's a gag (prize)," Hefley said.

Staff/Scott Williams

Let's make a deal... Martha Higbee, junior in electrical engineering, accepts her prize from Derek Orndorff, freshman in journalism and mass communications and business adminstration, a host for the Kansas State University Association of Residence Hall's game night in Umberger Hall Wednesday.

THE GAMES INCLUDED "The Price is Right," "Let's Make a Deal" and "Family Feud."

"Let's Make a Deal" master of ceremonies was Derek Orndorff, freshman in journalism and mass communications and business administration. Orndorff portrayed Monte Hall, emcee of the television game show "Let's Make a Deal," and made quick deals with contestant Martha Higbee, junior in electrical engineering.

Higbee, dressed for the occasion in a solid pink costume, was chosen from the audience to make a deal. To begin the trading Higbee received two free dinners which she traded away for a pair of T-shirts. Orndorff went on dealing and Higbee traded again to end up with a box containing a worn out tennis shoe, and a broken handball raquet.

Hosting the game "The Price is Right" was Scott Nyhart, sophomore in electrical engineering. Nyhart started the game by selecting four contestants from the audience to estimate the cost of a used laundry basket. Other items which contestants were required to bid on included two ice cream cones, six donuts and breakfast for two.

Dave Mueller, junior in agricultural economics served as emcee for the "Family Feud." Mueller selected two, five-member "families," the Hallies and the Froggies, to feud. The families were required to answer questions such as the "five most popular names of dogs," "four constellations" and "five things women carry in purses."

GAME NIGHT emcee was Jim Cunningham, freshman in general. Cunningham's main responsibility to the show was to introduce commercials which provided entertainment between the games.

Commercials were the original ideas of members of the residence halls. Some of these commercials advertised "rent-a preppy," "Gold Punks from Ripco Records," "Kenny Ford Glamour and Make-up Lesson." Swannie from "Swannie's Donuts" also provided a commercial in the form of a song and dance routine.

According to Cunningham "overall the evening went really well. There were probably around 150 residents hall people that attended."

Higbee said, "I wish there would have been more residence hall people here because it was a lot of fun."

According to Hefley the game show night was "experimental."

"We (KSUARH) tried this year to bring out some new programs and ideas," Hefley said. "We don't like to do the same things year after year."

Alcohol poses problems for students

By LISA KESSLER
Collegian Reporter

Solids turned into liquids when preparation for the meal began. The menu was to contain chicken and potatoes but instead became a smooth-flowing diet of a fifth of scotch, one half bottle of bourbon and two six-packs of beer.

Brian's fluid dinner lasted about three hours.

Stumbling to his car, Brian's drinking binge was on day number 14. Anticipating the arrival of a girlfriend, he sat on her front step. He soon became sick.

Time passed and Brian's patience grew thin. As he prepared to leave, Brian realized he had a problem. For the first time he realized if he did not quit drinking he would die.

After talking with his mother for several hours, the only thing he remembered she said was, "there is a way you can stop."

The next evening Brian attended an Alcoholics Anonymous (AA) meeting.

FOR MANY, alcohol is life's main concern. If not getting drunk or suffering a hangover, planning the next drunk becomes one's life ambition.

'I was getting concerned about my drinking, so I quit for a whole week.'

According to the 1978 report to Congress by the Health Education and Welfare Department, 90 percent of students in college have had a drink or at least drink occasionally.

"Teachers should be outlawed for having tests on Fridays because 3-fers at Aggie Station are more of an intellectual development than most classes. The drinks deal with life not fiction," Marvin Chance, senior in finance, said.

Chance said he is not an alcoholic because he can go one day a week without a drink. The other six nights of the week he goes to Kites and drinks about five pitchers of beer or Aggie Station and has an average of 10 drinks.

"I was getting concerned about my drinking, so I quit for a whole week," he added.

Laura King, director of Alcohol Abuse Prevention, said, "In college years the number of problem drinkers increases quickly. There is a higher risk in college than any other time in life to become an alcoholic."

Stress, pressure may be causes

FACTS SHOW that stress is high among college students and they are under a great deal of pressure. According to Steve Kuhn, manager of Mr. K's, going out for a beer is a good tension release.

"We are not pushing beer," he said, "we're pushing a good time."

And, according to Dan Cook, junior in marketing, if the close location of Aggieville doesn't lure students to drink, then peer pressure will.

"There is more pressure toward drinking at Kansas State than other schools due to Aggieville," he said. "It is a central location for drinking and there is a great deal of peer pressure."

Cook, who works at Dark Horse Tavern, said he drinks less now because "I know what a fool I looked like (while drunk) — it turns me off to be drunk."

WHETHER STUDENTS get drunk everytime they go to Aggieville is difficult to prove, but the fact that many bars are crowded every night might indicate that "Aggieville is the place to be," Terry Cordova, junior in engineering technology, said.

"It (Aggieville) lets people get away from school and relax," she said.

Jan Galitzer, administrative assistant to the Fort Riley Council on Alcoholism and Drug Education, said, "Society has a problem now. They don't know how to drink effectively and responsibly. Aggieville does not contribute to the problem. It's a symptom."

"Aggieville is great. You do not have to drive to another bar, you can walk. It keeps people off the road at least 'till midnight," Dave Sharp, junior in journalism and mass communications and business marketing, said.

'We are not pushing beer; we're pushing a good time.'

AGGIEVILLE DOESN'T contribute to the drinking problem at K-State, according to Pat Hamilton, director of Fort Riley Counsel on Alcoholism and Drug Education. "People can always find a place to drink," he said.

"I think Kansas State has a drinking problem. It seems like everytime you ask someone on Monday if they had a good weekend, it is judged on whether they went out drinking or not," Tracy Eckes, junior in fashion marketing, said.

Students don't know how to have fun without beer because of peer pressure, Galitzer said.

Mike Love, senior in milling science and management, said "People don't consider alcohol as a drug, but it affects you mentally and physically like any other drug."

There is a general pattern an alcoholic follows. Alcoholics usually develop the problem before they realize it.

"The first time I drank, it did something. Every time after that I tried to find that something. I either drank too much or not enough and lost control," Brian said.

When he attended the AA meeting, Brian was told there was a chance of his condition not getting worse, but he had to "keep the plug in the jug" and keep coming back to AA meetings.

ALCOHOLISM IS a disease which has no cure.

Brian said, "Social life at the University is centered around drinking. Problems with drinking are a result of the demand of the K-State campus."

One indicator of alcoholism is black-outs. Another symptom of chronic alcoholism is lack of control.

Students can test themselves to discover alcoholic tendencies. AA suggests consuming two drinks each day in a two-day period. If one can consume only two and leave it alone, no problem is indicated.

According to literature put out by AA, "if you repeatedly drink more than you intend or want to, or if you get into trouble, if you have memory lapses when you drink, you may be an alcoholic. Only you can decide. No one in AA will tell you whether you are or not."

By definition, AA is a fellowship of men and women who have lost the ability to control their drinking and have found themselves in various kinds of trouble as a result of drinking. They attempt — most of them successfully — to create a satisfying way of life without alcohol. For this they find they need the help and support of other alcoholics.

'Social life at the University is centered around drinking. Problems with drinking are a result of the demand of the K-State campus.'

Those who are concerned that they, or someone they know, may be an alcoholic, may seek help. In conjunction with the Alcohol Abuse Prevention, the Pawnee Comprehensive Mental Health Center offers free counseling to any student. The counseling is conducted in the basement of Lafene Student Health Center on Monday and Friday mornings.

According to Brian, there are two ways to arrest the disease.

"You can't cure it," he said. "Either you quit drinking and stay sober or you die."

Tickets

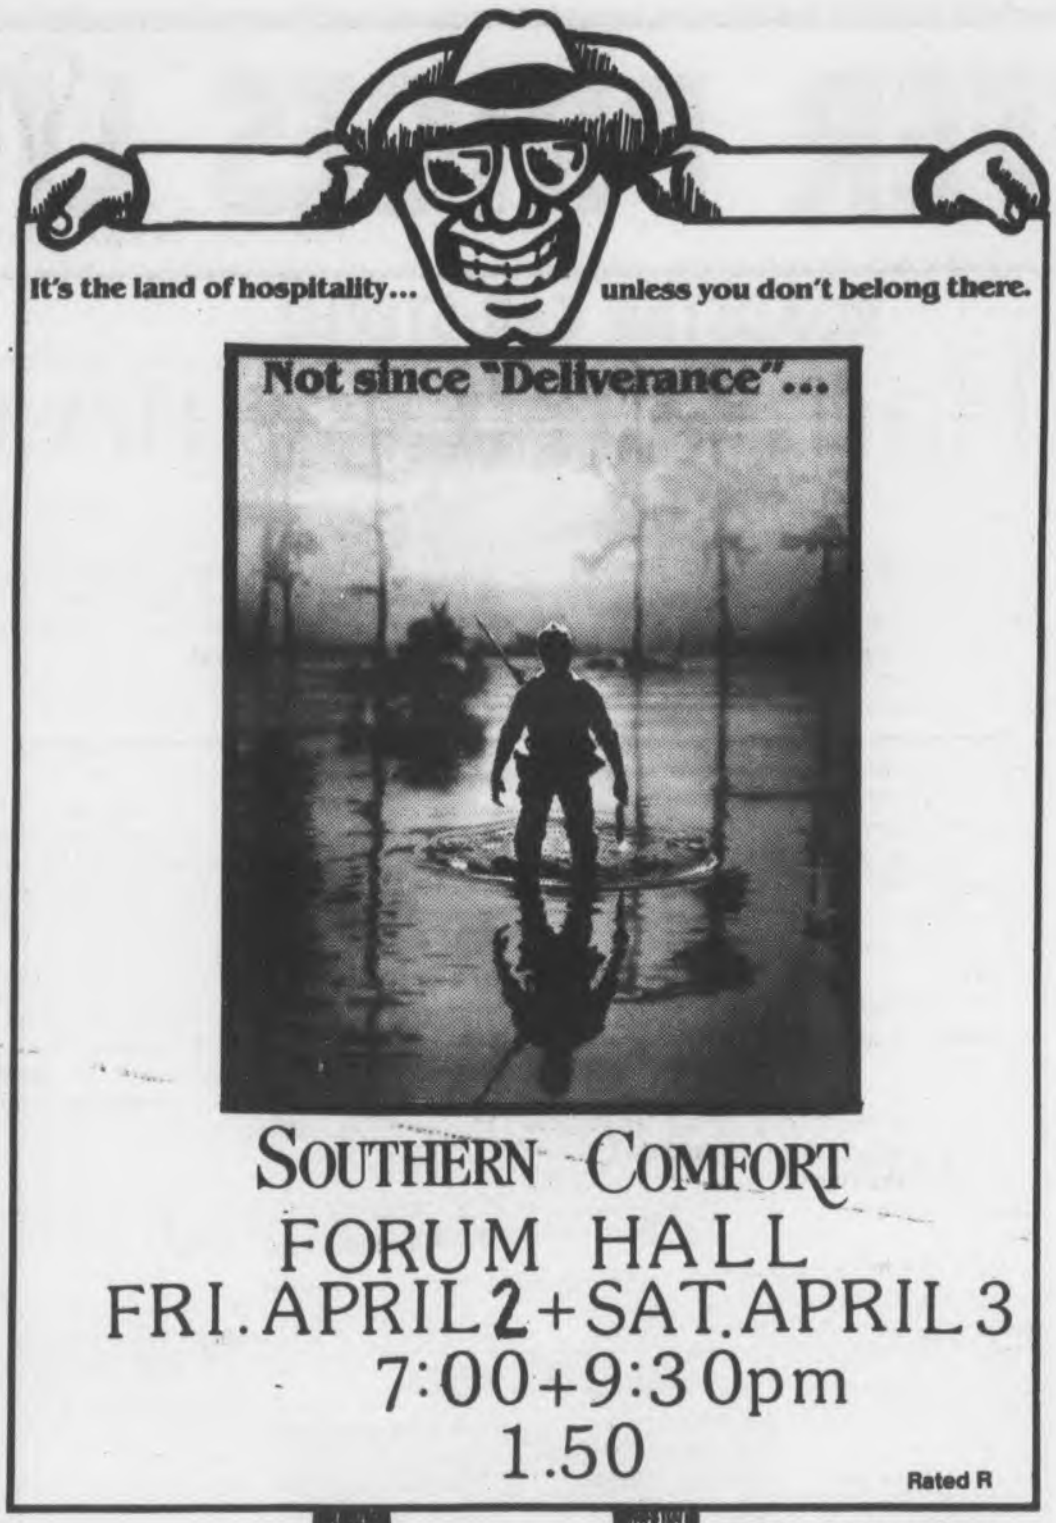
"Inspirational Films called me long distance... and made a business deal with me," Godwin said. He said that the group makes 50 cents on each ticket sold. Maranatha representatives act solely as the distributor of the tickets for Inspirational Films.

"Nobody has been able to check out who Inspirational Films is," Saunders said.

HE SAID INSPIRATIONAL FILMS asked Maranatha to distribute tickets because groups in Lawrence — and other communities (where the group is better accepted) — have worked for the company before.

"We wanted the movie to be a sucess. That was the motive of the Inspirational Films people," Godwin said. "We warned them that our association with it could hinder the promotion of the film, but they didn't have time to search out others."



According to Eric Nelson, Maranatha member who was selling the discount tickets at a table in the Union Wednesday and sophomore in horticulture, the Manhattan Area Film Committee was a group that was formed by the Maranatha Organization to organize ticket sales.

"There needs to be understanding that our hearts were pure, we weren't trying to cover up or hide. Our sole attempt was to promote the film," Nelson said. "It is not our film, we can't put our name on it."

Godwin said that profits from the sales will go to defray the costs of an upcoming trip for himself and two other Maranatha members to ttend an event called "Washington for Jesus." As one-half million people did in 1979, people will gather in Washington to ask the nation to repent, he said.

"They are not doing this (selling tickets) for the right reason, they are using religion for their own self-serving purposes," Conklin said.

"We want the film to do well," Godwin said. "I'm all for films of this type. They can pay $3 or they can pay $2.50. It's their 50 cents."

Hartman turns down Arizona bid

By LISA KESSLER
Collegian Reporter

A coaching genius on the court — a true supporter of the game off the basketball court — Jack Hartman.

"I have great feeling and pride for the people in our program," Head Coach Jack Hartman said.

Throughout his career, a smile has sometimes been his only show of emotion. Hartman is conservative in his manner. His dressing room is void of signs and banners encouraging his team to improve performances. His matter-of-fact approach to fame is one reason why K-State has not had a peak and valley performances during his tenure.

Although quiet, Hartman is intense and expresses a great interest in his players' well-being on and off the court. Thus, he is selective in the caliber of athlete he recruits. He delights in seeing his players gain recognition as citizens and students, as well as on the court. Currently seven of the players have better than a 3.0 grade point average.

Hartman has earned the reputation as an outstanding coach and is considered a prime candidate for many coaching positions.

He was recently considered by the Univerity of Arizona, Texas University and Stanford University.

"I visited with the University of Arizona people about their basketball situation. I listened to what they had to say," Hartman said. "Obviously, nothing developed."

During the time Hartman was considering the Arizona offer, he remained unavailable for comment.

Hartman said he feared his decision to delay the announcement might be viewed as "just a way to get my name in the paper."

"I didn't want that," he said. "My ego is ego served in the pride of the team and their success" not through the media.

Hartman has a basketball mastermind, he never brags — he produces. Most of his admirers come from those who deal with him all year.

EVEN WHEN HE doesn't have the talent he puts out a good representative team. He looks at his talent and figures out a system that will fit it best. He is a technical coach.

Hartman's decision to remain at K-State was based on his allegiance, "I have a great feeling and pride for our people and program.

"Kansas State basketball fans are the greatest in the country," he said. "And the program has been successful."

Likewise, K-State fans are fortunate that Hartman has decided to stay in Manhattan, Dick Towers, athletic director, said.

"Coach Hartman is the quality of person who is going to be considered by many schools for their positions, that's understood. But we're fortunate that Jack believes Kansas State University and Manhattan is where he wants to be," Towers said.

DURING HARTMAN'S first season at K-State, he guided a depleted squad of nine players to a respectable 11-15 record and a fifth place finish in the Big Eight Conference.

In his 12 seasons at K-State, he has raised his record to 237-209 a .687 percentage. He has suffered through only one losing season, 1970-71, in 27 years of juco and major college coaching. Hartman's K-State teams have posted an overall 9-6 record in six NCAA appearances. He owns a glamorous 115-53 record in Big Eight regular season play over the past 12 campaigns.

Hartman has prepared the Wildcats for NCAA post-season play seven times — 1972-73, 1975, 1977, 1980-82 — and the NIT in 1976.

After seven years at K-State, Hartman was offered a similar position at Oklahoma State University, his alma mater. Though he had decided to sign with Oklahoma, he decided to remain.

HARTMAN'S TEAMS have won 381 games and lost 174, a winning percent of .689. That is only a sample of what Hartman has accomplished. He has won Coach-of-the-Year recognition at every level, and has upped his overall collegiate mark to 381-174 — a .689 percentage in 20 campaigns.

This year Hartman coached in his 11th post-season tournament. His ninth at K-State. He has chalked up his 11th 20-win season in his illustrious college career.

Prior to K-State, Hartman coached at Southern Illinois in 1962-63 and in eight seasons led the Salukis to four NCAA college division tournament berths, finishing twice second and twice finishing second and placing fourth on another occasion. He has an eight-year record of 144 victories and 64 defeats.

In 1955, he took over at Coffeyville Junior College for seven seasons. During that time, Hartman's teams won 150, lost 46 for a .765 percentage. Coffeyville wound up in the national tournament four times and his 1961-62 team, which had a perfect 32-0 record, became the first undefeated junior college team ever to capture the national meet.

A native of Shindlre, Okla., Hartman enrolled at Oklahoma State in 1943. He earned varsity letters in football and basketball, but was encouraged to concentrate on one sport rather than both. Hartman chose football and went on to earn all-Missouri Valley Conference first-team honors as quarterback. Following graduation, he played one year of professional football in Canada where he won league honors.

He began coaching at Plaineville. He also directed the football and basketball programs at Shidler and Wagoner, Okla.

After a short period of time Hartman returned to Oklahoma State to work as a graduate assistant under his lifetime idol, Henry Iba (former Oklahoma State coach), and to work on his masters degree.

Arizona picks Lindsey

TUCSON, Ariz. (AP) — At 7:45 a.m. Wednesday, Head Coach Jack Hartman stopped demurring and said no thanks. Within moments, another man in Kansas, Arizonan Ben Lindsey, became the University of Arizona's 11th head coach.

Lindsey, 42, whose Grand Canyon College teams won two NAIA basketball championships, said the "opportunity to do something for our state" is "a dream come true."

Athletic Director David Strack called Hartman "one of the top coaches in America" and said "he gave us great consideration."

But, he added, "I am extremely happy that Ben Lindsey has accepted the position. There have been a lot of great second choices — including myself."

Lindsey earlier had been named head coach at Fort Hays State University with the understanding that he could apply for the Arizona job. He succeeds Fred Snowden, who announced his resignation in mid-season and officially stepped down after this past season, his 10th at Arizona.

"You've got yourself a helluva man," said John MacLeod, coach of the Phoenix Suns of the National Basketball Association. "It's phenomenal what he's done. He's a good, solid basketball man who will do you proud."

Lindsey's teams at Grand Canyon in Phoenix compiled a 317-137 won-lost record over 16 seasons, winning National Association of Intercollegiate Athletics titles in 1975 and 1978, and five other district championships. His record in the last eight years was 200-42. He spent the past season coaching the national Philippines team while on leave from Grand Canyon.

Wildcats drop a pair to Oral Roberts Titans

K-State's baseball team dropped a doubleheader to Oral Roberts University Wednesday in Tulsa, Okla.

Oral Roberts now stands at 20-3 and is ranked 4th in the nation. The Wildcats, off to their best start in K-State history, dropped to 19-8-1. After the first 28 games last year, the 'Cats were 19-9.

In the first game, the Titans put together a decisive six-run fifth inning enroute to a 9-2 victory. In that tragic fifth, K-State had two errors. All of Oral Roberts' runs were unearned.

The losing pitcher was Louie Trujillo, who went the distance for K-State. He gave up eight hits, but only three earned runs. Trujillo struck out five Titan batters, and walked two. His record is now 3-3.

This time, the second inning was the big one for the Titans, as they tallied five runs on four hits, taking advantage of two Wildcat errors.

Mickey Fleeman went the distance in a losing effort. All seven runs were earned. Fleeman struck out three with as many walks. Fleeman's record dropped to 4-2 with the loss.

The Wildcats will take on the Titans for a nine-inning match today. Mark Gomez will be on the mound pitching for K-State. The senior right hander will put his 3-0 record on the line.

Schmidt pulls no punches; Phillies player likes changes

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Philadelphia Phillies third baseman Mike Schmidt is the kind of person who pulls no punches. He says what he thinks even if it's not popular with people, including his bosses.

So, when Schmidt, the National League's Most Valuable Player the past two seasons, says he thinks the team has been improved by some trades, which have been unpopular with many fans, it's worth listening to his opinion.

The deals involved young outfielder Lonnie Smith, catcher Keith Moreland and veteran shortstop Larry Bowa.

Smith made a lot of fundamental mistakes, but he could hit, run like a deer and always seemed to make things happen. He finished the season with a 23-game hitting streak. He went in the three-way deal with Cleveland and St. Louis that netted the Phillies catcher Bo Diaz.

Moreland, a young catcher with an effective bat, but short in some areas on defense, was dealt to the Chicago Cubs in an exchange that brought pitcher Mike Krukow to Philadelphia.

Bowa, the Philadelphia shortstop for 12 years and the best statistically at his position in the majors over a long period, had contract difficulties, feuded through the newspapers with the front office over the problem, and probably was shipped more because of the personality conflict than just player consideration.

The club's other catcher, veteran Bob Boone, was sold to California of the American League because the Phillies felt he had lost the knack of throwing out runners and his bat has been comparatively silent the last few seasons.

Kassebaum sees 'heartfelt desire' to bring peace

WASHINGTON (AP) — While it is too early to say what sort of government will emerge in El Salvador, Sunday's elections expressed an overwhelming desire of its citizens for peace, the leader of a group of U.S. observers said Wednesday.

"We saw an overwhelming, heartfelt expression of the people of El Salvador for an end to conflict and violence in the country," said Sen. Nancy Kassebaum (R-Kan).

She also called the large voter turnout — estimated at some 80 percent of eligible voters, despite leftist efforts to discourage voting — "an overwhelming demonstration of the beginnings of a democratic process."

Kassebaum returned from the civil war-torn Central American country late Monday and gave a briefing on the trip to President Reagan Wednesday at the White House. Afterward she and members of the observing delegation held a brief news conference.

Reports from El Salvador have noted an emerging coalition of several right-wing parties which could assemble the votes to take power. That coalition could exclude the Christian Democratic party of President Jose Napoleon Duarte, even though Duarte's group polled the largest number of votes. The United States had pinned its hopes on a victory for Duarte's moderate party.

"We don't know yet what type of a coalition will be put together," Kassebaum said. But she noted that the United States will continue to support land reform and a continuation of improvement in human rights in El Salvador.

"I think we have to take the positive aspect of what has happened, and work with that first," she said, referring to the high voter turnout. "We haven't seen any sign one way or the other yet."

She said during the trip she had visited with people standing in lines waiting to vote, and found "an unsophisticated opinion, a heartfelt desire to vote for peace and an end to violence."

ISLAMIC REPUBLIC DAY

Three years ago today, millions of Iranian people went to the polls to choose for the first time their own type of government. Even after the centuries of hardships and oppression they had been subjected to, Iranians indicated their desired type of government during their struggle to bring down the puppet regime by slogans such as "Freedom, Independence, Islamic government."

Still, it seemed like a good idea for people to go to the ballot boxes and, for the record, give their opinions. This was the first truly democratic election in which Iranians had ever participated. Any Iranian citizen over the age of 16 could vote, regardless of sex, race, religion, or any such differences. The turnout was extremely heavy. About 98.2% of the over 22 million voters had indicated Islamic republic as their choice, even though they could select any type of government they wished.

From the beginning, because of the tremendous support the Islamic republic had among people, and because of its great outcomes and bright future, its enemies, frightened to death, united in an open campaign to attempt to weaken or bring down the regime. Directly, and through their beneficiaries, they killed and maimed thousands of people and destroyed everything they possibly could. Also through campaigns of rumors and fabrications they tried to give a false impression to the world about the revolution and government. The nonsense talks about "Imprisonment, torture and execution of innocent political opponents" and raves that the present regime is unpopular, weak, and would not last more than a few days, weeks or months have been going on for about two years, and are examples of such thoughtless attempts.

The Islamic Republic of Iran, on the other hand, has been very effective in doing its job. Not only have the enemies of the country and its Islamic revolution been defeated in many different manners, but the developments and improvements have been enormous in many areas. In many cases the changes made during the last three years have been several times higher than those made during the period of more than fifty years of the Pahlavi dynasty. These were done despite sanctions and embargoes of food, medicine, equipment and other necessities imposed upon Iran by the U.S. and many other countries, and also imposition of other troubles such as the Iraq-Iran War. Speaking of the war, thanks to God with his help, and efforts of the Iranian people and their government, many unbelievable victories have been made which the Western media did not even dare to reflect on. Obviously these victories are to their displeasure and must be censored. But the fact is that this three-year-old country has not only been able to stand firm against the aggressor, but now has control over the situation and is going to gain the final victory. During the last several days, forces of Islam through their final offensive attack called "the clear victory" have made great advances resulting in the loss of about twenty-five thousand Iraqi soldiers and officers, and the capture of more than fifteen thousand prisoners of war. On several occasions Iraqi soldiers have voluntarily surrendered themselves in groups of hundreds to the forces of Islam. In a few other cases, brigades and battalions were surrounded and captured along with all their equipment and ammunition. Also about two dozen fighter planes have been downed and countless numbers of vehicles, tanks, artillery and ammunition storages have been destroyed, and hundreds taken by the Islamic forces. Most of these were in perfect or usable condition, and finally more than two thousand square kilometers of land has been reclaimed.

Now imagine all these victories having been achieved in less than a week, despite all kinds of support that Saddam, the Iraqi president, is getting from the U.S. through its allies and puppets such as France, Jordan, Egypt, Saudi Arabia, Kuwait, etc., and you will see if Iran is "unstable" and "weak"(!). You can also see why this country and its Islamic revolution have such enemies as the U.S. government. Iran is a threat to their "interests." The now inevitable fall of Saddam in the near future and other puppets in the region means foreign powers would no longer be able to plunder the wealth of nations, use their country for their own goals and suppress them through puppet regimes.

God willing, before the next anniversary of the Islamic Republic in Iran, there will be referendums in our brother nations for them to choose their desired government, Islamic Republic.

Long live Imam Khomeini the leader of Islamic revolution and the oppressed. Long live the Islamic Republic of Iran. Down with East and West Imperialism, International Zionism and their puppets.

'Cats to get new house

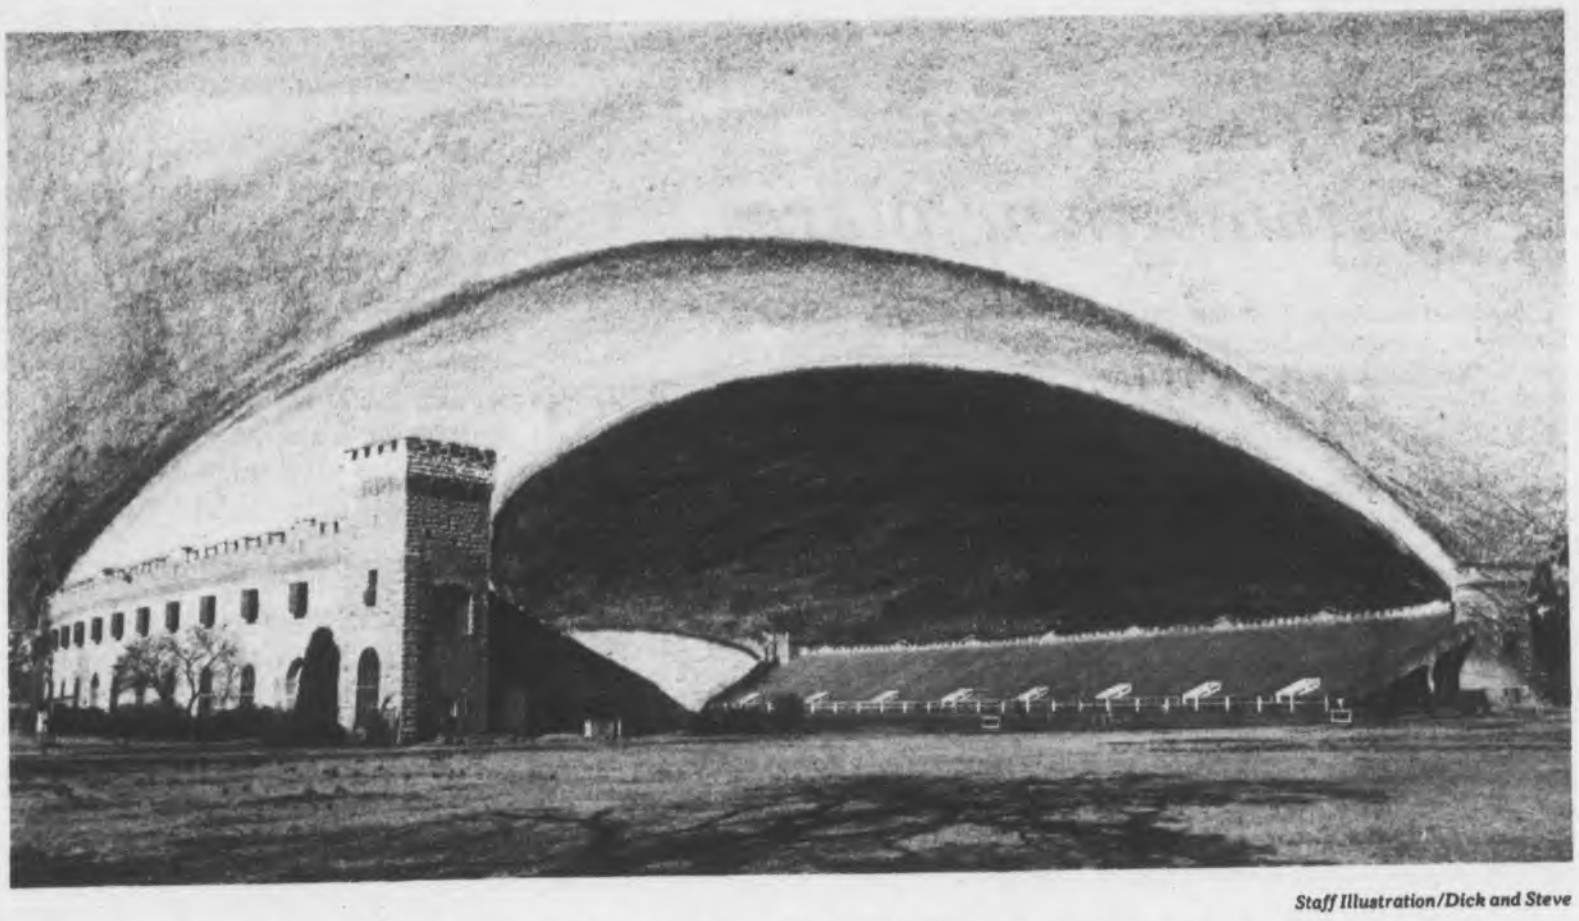
By RICHARD N. MILHOUS
Staff Writer

The Wildcats will play basketball in a new-old stadium next year, according to a proposal by President Duane Acker.

During a Tuesday afternoon press conference, Acker proposed a dome be constructed over the top of Memorial Stadium and that the basketball court be moved there.

"This would solve many problems," Acker said. "It would provide plenty of seating for basketball, it would provide a use for the stadium so it won't have to be torn down, and it will be done cheaply."

The dome, similar to one built across the Silverdome at Pontiac, Mich., and other new football stadiums, would be made of fabric and kept aloft by fans.



"Yeah, I figure the basketball fans might get a little tired after three quarters of keeping that roof up, but maybe we'll give 'em a break on the tickets," he said.

Acker said the College of Home Economics could cut out and sew the dome together, although he noted "they're going to have trouble finding a pattern." He also suggested using purple cloth.

Acker said he would start a fund drive among alumni to raise money for the fabric and said Student Senate had started a drive to provide student funds.

Bill Roggermoggerdozzer, president of senate, said he was enthusiastic about the proposal.

"I am enthusiastic about the proposal," he said.

Staff Illustration/Dick and Steve

Lots of fans in here... This is an artist's conception of President Duane Acker's proposed dome to be constructed over the top of Memorial Stadium. The stadium would by used as a basketball arena and made of fabric and kept aloft by fans.

However, he said he would have to study the proposal more.

"However, I will have to study the proposal more," Roggermoggerdozzer said.

Acker said the plan was the cheapest one he had come across yet.

"I figure the whole shootin' match could be done for about $400," Acker said. "The only cheaper thing to do would be put up baskets in the Union parking lot."

He said the stadium would seat 12,000 in both sides of the stadium and would seat another 5,000 in the end zones, which would make it big enough for NCAA tournament play.

Acker said Ahearn Field House could be razed and used for a parking lot.

"I've always wanted to raze an old basketball stadium for a parking lot," he said.

Memorial Stadium, adjacent to the Union, was used for football games until KSU Stadium was build in 1965, according to an Administration crossed by unexpected stance

By CARLOTTA FEES
Staff Writer

In an unprecedented confrontation Tuesday, Gene Cross, vice president of University Facilities, spoke out against the 200 percent increase in student parking fees; while students rallied in favor of the proposal.

"I think it's about time that students started paying their way around this University," Jeff Ford, graduate in general and chairman of the Parking Fees and Assessment Committee.

"There's no reason a student can't pay $22.50 for the opportunity to cruise the Union parking lot," Doe said. "Besides, perhaps the high costs will deter some students — those who live close to campus and are too lazy to walk — from purchasing permits."

Cross, however, disagreed with Doe.

"I don't think students should have to put out any more money than they already do," Cross said. "If the University needs money to maintain parking lots, it can simply cut down on other expenditures.

"Students carry enough of a financial burden as it is," he added.

Art Stone, director of Traffic and Security, said he favors a compromise to the parking dilemma. Rather than instituting a 200 percent increase to simply maintain the parking lots currently available, he said he supports the building of a high-rise parking garage to be erected where the Union lot currently stands.

"It would be a lot more work for the students who have to write tickets," he said, in that they will have to walk a lot more, "but it seems worth the sacrifice."

Stone indicated that his office might ask Student Senate to conduct an unbiased survey for the purpose of gauging student opinion on the parking lot issue.

The discussion became heated at President Duane Acker's first news conference of the semester.

Members of the press — expecting an announcement dealing with the gift of Anderson Hall to Jack Hartman, in an effort to entice the head basketball coach into remaining with the University — were shocked by Cross' announcement. For the first time since Arizona began courting Hartman, basketball took a back seat to breaking news.

"I firmly believe that if a 200 percent increase in parking fees is what the students want, it's what they should have," Acker said. "I've always tried to be an advocate of student and faculty needs and desires."

Heinz Bulmahn, president of Faculty Senate and associate professor of modern languages, said that faculty/staff parking fees will not be affected under the proposal.

"I think it is a sign of maturity that the students are willing to takeon the full burden of parking increases," he said. "If they're willing to pay the piper in the area of parking, perhaps they will learn when and when not to drop a class."

Though no agreement was reached at Wednesday's conference, Acker agreed to set up a committee to study the issue. A solution is expected to be arrived at in two or three years.

Senate to meet at Brother's because of nice ambience

Student Senate will hear budget requests from individual senators tonight at Brother's Tavern. Billy Roggermoggerdozzer, student body president, said the new meeting location was chosen because of its "relaxed atmosphere."

Johnny Kohlerroller, ASK campus director, is requesting $580 from senate. He plans to use $80 to buy swinging bar doors for his office and the remaining $500 for a life-size wax figure of Ronald Reagan.

"When you mess with small minds, it's hard to get things done," Kohlerroller said when expressing his views of finance committee. He was concerned that his request might be cut.

Esther Hagennoffer, finance committee chairman, is requesting a $219.52 salary increase (beyond her current $75 per month salary) for services rendered to Student Senate.

"As finance chair, I can give myself as much money as I want," Hagennoffer said. "And as for the services rendered by me, I think I'm worth it."

Dave Andersonian, aggie senator, is requesting $1,100. He said he plans to give this money to the Ag College Council to be distributed evenly among the 11 poverty-stricken judging teams.

Roggermoggerdozzer is requesting $113.89 for disco clothes which he needs to "disco down in" during after hours in the SGS office.

Geri Greenejeans, student senate chairman, is pleading for $267. "I need this

Acker cuts big cheese deal benefiting students, faculty

President Duane Acker made a suprise announcement Wednesday that tuition and fees will not be collected from students for the 1982§83 school year.

"We simply came up with the money elsewhere," he said. "We have been bothering the legislature for the longest time for extra money, so this year we asked them what else they could give us."

Considering this request, a senator remembered that there was quite a lot of surplus cheese getting moldy in the refrigerator at Cedarcrest. They offered this to the University, and Acker quickly accepted.

"We had the dairy science people wrap it up real nice, then gave it to the faculty in place of salary increases," Acker said. "There was a bunch of cheese left over, so we consulted the Girl Scouts to help us develop a plan to market it."

The Girl Scouts added the cheese to their annual assortment of cookies, and the sales were phenomenal, Acker said. "It seems like after sitting around eating Thin Mints for a while, most people want to cut the cheese."

The tuition payments that students have traditionally paid will be taken from the profits of the cheese sales, said Bob Evans, director of financial aid and no relation to Linda Evans, star of TV's Dynasty. For more information of who he is related to, Evans suggested that students check with the Office of University Relations.

Students have expressed a mixed reaction to the lack of tuition payments.

"I will miss standing in line as long," Edna Crutch, senior in horticulture, said. "It was very social, you know."

"I bought 27 packages of cheese, it is only fair that they don't charge me tuition," Hubert Filth, junior in physical education, said.

Evans plans to put the excess money from financial aid, now unneeded by many students, to good work for the University.

"After my trip around the world, I think

True preppies know their place

I just don't understand all this gabbing about which is better, Izod or Polo? I myself could not possibly think of going out with a date from one of the best houses on campus wearing a tacky Polo shirt. I would just D-I-E, die!

Hun, some of those lower-class C-A-T houses may accept just anyone but we have a very strict prep standard. Polo people are just simply N-O-K-D, not our kind deary.

Despite the mass marketing of our beloved symbol we can still pick a true prep. With a trained eye and properly angled nose a true prep can determine if the alligator arrived via an L.L. Bean catalog or if its just a G-A-G, gaggy Macy's version.

And anyone who knows anything can tell you that Ralph Lauren and his T-A-C-K-Y, taaaaacky Dolly Parton look-alike western wear is stricty a fad for kiddies. How passe'.

NOW A TRUE preppie knows where their roots lie and where they're exclusive. Izod shows true prep class and tradition. I believe this right down to my matching ladybug skirt and shoes, treasured gifts from Mummy when I pledged as a legacy to her sorority.

This is a family tradition, the prep clothing indoctrination, dating back to my beloved grandmummy in Cambridge, Mass. When Mummy joined the Daughters of the American Revolution, she too passed through to the strict and safe ethics of prep. Why we haven't had to think for years, we're already trained to handle any situation using proper preppy codes.

Prep is not a way of dress, baby cakes. It is a way of life.

Chip Livingston-Farnsworth

Polo symbolizes the rugged man

Muffy, you ignorant trollop.

As president of my fraternity, a sorority house boy, second-string baseball waterboy and a student senator, I feel qualified to present a rebuttal to Muffy's silly but cute argument concerning the Polo and Izod names.

The facts and figures are compiling, but, I'm afraid Muffy dear, they are compiling all in favor of the rugged Polo symbol. Wearing a lizard on your chest holds little esteem compared to the symbol of the exclusive sport of the upwardly mobile. Izods are simply out.

I have spent as much as twenty minutes, out of a twenty-five minute Student Governing Association committee meeting concerning minority affairs, trying to convince the wayward Izods to see the light of designers. In a tight but triumphant vote the tally totaled Polos-5, Izods-3. The battle has just begun.

The West is already ours and we have made great strides in the East, particularly in New England. We have made steady gains at Harvard's Law School and Princeton.

For men, Polo is the only respectable designer-wear allowed. Ralph is not one of those squeaky-voiced, faggot designers. He is someone a true American male can look up to and give their dollars to.

And of course, all my wenches wear Polo.

Polo is for the individual who will climb the corporate ladder, not by squash and men's club friendships but with determination, embezzlement and back-stabbing.

We Polo wearers are a conservative group of individuals seeking to mark new pahs in prep wear. We can easily be swayed by large salaries, expense accounts and status. And what preppie college graduate would wear an Izod with cowboy boots? If you're still wearing Docksider's minus socks then you must be a friend of the Pharaoh.

This is the '80s and pure prep is dead. Chic prep is the word from now on, so don't be a naive mid-westerner. Go Polo.

(Editor's note: Chip Livingston-Farnsworth is despised by all his fraternity brothers and is a graduate in business administration).

Cowlegian is a newspaper pit...

Editor,

It is obvious after reading the Cowlegian that it is a real rag. I despise its so much that I feel it's necessary to carry to all my classes. After all, entertainment sure doesn't come from the instructor.

Oh, I admit I really like working the crosswords. But I can't believe the clues you give. Putting together a crossword can't be that tough, can it? What is wrong with you people?

The reporters write like amateurs. Can't you hire competent people or would that ruin your image?

Its only saving grace is that it is free. It would be impossible to charge people to receive such a farce under the name of a newspaper.

By the way, I called in last week to tell you I would be sunbathing at Tuttle. Where was the photographer?

Editor,

I think the K-Straight Cowlegian is the best paper I have ever read (with the help of my nurse).

The articles are in-depth, timely and the pictures are beautiful. It really beats the other paper we carry in the hospital library.

The editorials are my favorite part. They are really simple and I can understand them (with the help of my nurse).

Keep up the hard work.

Scientists find intelligent life on Venus

JET PROPULSION LABORATORIES, CAL. — Scientists here discovered today that there is life on Venus. According to a JPL spokesman, contact has been made with the Venerians.

"It seems they've been hiding from us," said Matt D. Matishin, JPL public information consultant on matters relating to possible widespread panic.

According to Matishin, the Venerians have had civilization for nearly 20,000 years but have disdained contact with Earth. In fact, Matishin said they have had space travel for well over 16,000 years, but have avoided Earth for most of that time.

Although there have been no official visits to Earth in about 12,000 years, a spokesbeing for the planet said he had a possible explanation for some of the UFO sightings that have been reported through the ages.

"It's the kids," he said. "On weekends, one of their favorite pasttimes is cruising Earth."

Matishin said early computer checks reveal there is some correlation between flurries of UFO sightings and the weekends on Venus.

New selective weapon is 'a real doozy'

WASHINGTON, D.C. — According to CIA sources here, Lichtenstein has acquired a bomb that will shame all of the other superweapons of man.

The source said the news was received by an escapee from the Alpine paradise.

Apparently the Lichtenstinians have produced a bomb similar to the neutron weapon, which reportedly would only destroy people and not buildings. The new bomb is a combination of that and secret chemical components which will also annihilate selectively.

According to the source, the bomb will only kill those who do not have Lichtenstinian blood, or who are not married to a native of the country.

"It sounds like a real doozy, bomb-wise," said the Secretary of State.

Panda panel pressures for procreation

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The two giant pandas at the National Zoo are still having trouble getting together and making some new pandas.

But the ever resourceful U.S. government has found what it believes to be a remedy.

Before their next attempt at mating, The Joy of Sex, The Sensuous Panda and The PlayPanda Adviser will be required reading, according to Raunchy Van Squidny, the president's special assistant for panda procreation.

Also suggested by a special panel on panda procreation was the inclusion of certain rituals — such as candles, flowers and a bottle of Mumm's.

Rejected by the panel were suggestions for the use of rhinoceros horn, Spanish fly or cocaine.

Nuclear arms control to hurt secret agents

Animals replace Econ instructors

The College of Agriculture will find out if the "grass is really greener" in other departments during Switch-A-Roo Day Friday.

"It's intended to be an academic "chinese-fire drill. But it's a matter we've put a lot of thought into and we want to come away with an appreciation for each others' jobs," Larry Erpoldeeng, assistant director of resident instruction, said.

The drill will involve five College of Agriculture departments and two College of Veterinary Medicine (vet med) departments, Erpoldeeng explained.

Friday's Switch-A-Roo will be the first of its kind and will entail the involved departments occupying each others' facilities, he said.

Asked what sparked the experiment, Erpoldeeng said that last month, at a national agricultural educators conference, while administrators were talking amongst themselves, Donald Totters, dean of vet med, suggested they switch seminars and presentations.

Credited with promoting the idea are Brian Shirells, assistant professor of economics, and Charles Deeooh, director of the grain science department, many sources said.

The grain science students and faculty will switch places with vet med's Department of Surgery and Medicine, Deeooh said.

"We'd like to see what takes them so long to teach up there," he said. "There also might be a baking or milling technique we could put into practice in their labs," Deeooh added.

The economics department will be switching places with the animal science, according to Shirells.

Worried that animal science personel would eye the economic department's graph and computer paper as fancy butcher paper, Shirells said the paper has been locked away for the day.

The ag engineering and vet med laboratory medicine departments have been assigned to switch, according to G.E. Flairblanks, acting ag engineering department head.

"We have devised a few experiments we want to take advantage being in their labs with," Flairblanks said.

Depending on how the experiment goes, other colleges may try something similar, according to a source close to Erpoldeeng. "In fact, whole colleges may switch classrooms for a day," the source said. "The first to switch may be between the College of Arts and Sciences and the Home Economics Department," the source said, although this could not be confirmed.

He has been hit hard this spring — 1-3 with a 7.80 ERA — and has thrown no faster than 84 miles an hour. But neither he nor the Royals appear too concerned.

Carlin runs for office with clown

By ARTU DETU
Collegian Reporter

Governor John Carlin shocked Kansas Democrats when he dumped Tom Docking as his Lt. Governor running mate and chose a 68-year-old professional clown.

Whizzo the clown, who refused to give his real name, said he was also surprised at the announcement.

"I grew up watching this great man and I think most others did too," Carlin said in his announcement. "I have come to know him intimately and find him to be a man of rare intelligence and foresight."

However, Whizzo said he had never talked to Carlin and had seen him only once, during an performance when "I made a doggy out of balloons and gave it to his missus," he said.

Whizzo said he had no position on the severance tax, New Federalism or U.S. relations with El Salvador. "Shucks," he said, "I'm just a clown dressed in crazy, mixed-up clothes from his head down to his toes."

Whizzo said his campaign theme would be "When you're sad, I'll make you glad, the very best friend you ever had, Whizzo the clown, that's who."

The announcement was greated with cheers by Kansas democrats. "Who could be better?" asked one democrat, who did not want his name used. "Who can say anything bad about a clown?"

Also during his press conference, Carlin announced he would try and made "I Love Rock and Roll" by Joan Jett and the Bluehearts the new state song.

"I think it is a wonderful song filled with meaning for the state," Carlin

House approves severance tax bill

TOPEKA (AP) — The Kansas House tentatively approved its severance tax bill for the second time Thursday, moving within one step of laying the hottest issue of the 1982 session on the Senate's doorstep once again.

The preliminary vote, advancing it to a final roll call on Friday, was 68-53.

However, the key votes ahead of that were to uphold a ruling of Rep. Timothy O'Sullivan (D-Hutchinson), who presided over the debate, that the severance tax provisions were germaine to the Senate-passed oil and gas bill into which they were amended, and on the amendment itself, which was offered by House Democratic Leader Fred Weaver.

O'Sullivan's decision that it was a proper amendment was sustained, 68-51.

Weaver's amendment was adopted, 66-52.

EIGHT OTHER amendments, all offered by severance tax opponents in an effort to erode support for the bill, failed.

The House is expected Friday to send the measure to the Senate, where an attempt will be made to get it debated by the full body.

However, Senate President Ross Doyen, who strongly opposes the tax, is expected to declare it a new bill — totally changed from what the Senate approved — and send it to the Senate Ways and Means Committee where it probably would be killed again.

Supporters of the severance tax hope to maneuver the bill so they can get a vote by the full Senate on it before it is shunted off to committee.

Weaver, of Baxter Springs, succeeded in amending into the Senate bill all the provisions of the previous severance tax bill passed by the House, 70-54.

PLUS, HE tacked on an additional provision which commits all the revenue from the tax to school finance, except for a 5 percent rebate to counties for the erosion of their property tax bases and a dedication of 20 percent of the revenue to a trust fund to maintain state balances once oil and gas revenue starts diminishing.

That amendment is critical to attracting the votes of some senators, most notably Sen. Don Montgomery (R-Sabetha), who put it onto the other House bill when the Senate Assessment and Taxation Committee endorsed it.

The first House severance tax bill was killed by the Senate Ways and Means Committee, on which Doyen sits, 7-4.

The other eight amendments, all aimed at causing the measure to lose support, were offered by foes who carried the debate on the bill for nearly three hours.

ONLY ONE came close to being adopted, and it lost on a vote of 57 60.

That amendment, offered by Rep. Harold Guldner (R-Syracuse), would have increased the rebate from 5 percent to 15 percent and would have dedicated all the other revenue to the Local Ad Valorem Tax Reduction Fund to reduce property taxes.

The amendment drew as much support as it did, because it was the first one offered after Weaver's was adopted and drew the support of most lawmakers from oil and gas counties eager to gain that kind of revenue.

The most votes any of the other seven amendments attracted were 53, and that was 53, and that was on an attempt to make the rebate 10 percent.

Bar owners cite overhead costs

K-Staters complain, but still pay for Aggie beer

By TANYA BRANSON
Staff Writer

Aggieville. Although practically guaranteed to always be the student hangout, complaints against beer prices, secretly made or openly voiced, are not uncommon.

On the average, the Aggieville-goer pays 75 cents for a draw and $2.75 for a pitcher on a weekend night.

"It's pretty expensive on regular nights," Dave Farris, freshman in general, said. "But people go down there and buy beer anyway so they might as well make a killing on us."

"It's way too high," Mark Roessler, senior in industrial engineering, said. "I do all my drinking before I go down and then just get one drink and socialize."

"Everyone goes down there to socialize," Jean Exline, sophomore in elementary education, said. "You know you'll see your friends. You put your money down without realizing what you're paying."

BAR OWNERS IN Aggieville agree that students don't know what they are paying for, and what they are paying for is the reason Aggieville prices are higher.

"A lot of people think the only cost incurred is the cost of what you're selling," Charles Busch, owner of Brother's Tavern, said. There are other costs such as rent, utilities and advertising, he explained.

Aggieville tavern owners pay "an exorbitant amount of rent" and with the additional factors of minimum wage and higher overhead, the costs add to the price of beer, according to Don Ramey, owner of Dark Horse Tavern.

Terry Ray, owner of three of the seven 3.2 bars in Aggieville, said the interiors are nicer and the upkeep is better than bars outside of Aggieville and this adds to the price of beer.

Aggieville beer prices are 75 cents a draw for 12 to 14 ounces except at Aggie Lounge where it is 55 cents a draw for 10 ounces. Pitchers are $2.75 at all the bars. This does not include specials which average $2.12 a pitcher and 59 cents a draw. Lower prices are used during happy hours and week night specials.

THE GROSS PROFIT on a keg of beer is around $50. A keg of Coors can be bought from a distributor for about $30, according to John Hedden, salesman for Ball Retail Liquor. The price per ounce is 1.5 cents. The profit per ounce is 4.2 cents figured on an average price of 5.7 cents per ounce. The total return is 67 percent on the dollar.

The $50 is gross profit and does not include a 3.5 percent sales tax, rent and labor costs, Ray said. He makes about a 5 percent profit on the dollar, he said.

The average price of Aggieville beer is more than the averages at Wichita State University (WSU) and the University of Kansas (KU). K-State averages 67 cents a draw while WSU averages 50 cents and KU averages 60 cents.

According to Calvin Wilfon, manager of The College Inn, Wichita, beer is 50 cents a draw and $2.50 for a pitcher. Happy hour special is $1.50 a pitcher. These prices are comparable to the other 3.2 bars around Wichita, he said.

K-State prices may be higher, he said, because "K-State's a drinking town with more students and you've got Aggieville up there and can charge higher prices."

IN LAWRENCE, the draws average about 60 cents and the pitchers, $2.25, according to Jay Simpson, co-owner of Bottom's Up tavern. Bottom's Up specials are quarter draws on week nights.

"We're trying to go on volume sales and so have some of the cheapest beer in town," Simpson said. "There is also more competition, no one has interest in more than one bar here."

Eddie Deck, manager of The Wagon Wheel in Lawrence, attributes KU's cheaper prices to the fact that "there are no monopolies here.

"Someone owns all the taverns in K-State," Deck said. "Prices are going to be more than anybody who owns just one bar. I'm sure he could get by with lower prices."

Compared to the University of Missouri (MU), on the average beer prices are lower at K-State. Pitchers are around $3 and draws are 75 cents at MU.

Prices are nearly the same at the University of Oklahoma where they average 75 cents a draw and $2.75 a pitcher.

Senate denies judging team funds, delays issue until final allocations

By BETH TURNER
Collegian Reporter

After nearly two hours of discussion, Student Senate defeated a bill requesting $4,342 for Agriculture College Council to allocate to the 11 agricultural teams. The main cause of the bill's defeat was due to its timing.

"Finance committee recommends that we not fund this bill at this time," said Esther Hagen, chairman of the committee and senior in home economics. "Our primary reason is that we would like to wait until final allocations (in Sept. of 1982), which is the proper time that college councils can increase their funding."

Hagen said, "It is in our policy that college councils' special allocations should be considered during final allocations."

"When all college council budget requests are presented during final allocations, each council will have an equal opportunity at an equal slice of the pie," Hagen said.

The requested allocations would have affected 76 members on the eleven agriculture judging teams. Each member is allowed to attended seven days of competition, and the requested funds would benefit each of the members by the amount of $35, Hagen said.

Sixteen thousand dollars comes from the agricultural judging teams' pockets and, according to Dave Anderson, junior in agricultural economics, the extra $35 could break the camel's back and keep students from being able to participate in the judging contests. The funds requested would not have been spent until the 1982-83 fiscal year, therefore the requests can be represented during final allocations.

Approval of the judicial boards' student members and Student Governing Association (SGA) attorney general appointments were passed after discussing credentials of the chancellor of Tribunal.

Layton Smith, senior in marketing, addressed senate during the open period. He referred to a letter he had sent to all senators, which told of his dissatisfaction in the choosing of Tribunal Chancellor by Bill Rogenmoser, student body president, and his selection committee. He said Rogenmoser's "lack of experience" caused him to make an inadequate choice for Tribunal Chancellor."

Rogenmoser said he appointed the judicial board members on their qualifications of willingness to work, learn and improve the system. He said he was confident that he and his committee had made the right decision concerning Tribunal Chancellor.

Rogenmoser reported that pre-enrollment will be conducted by the last four digits of the student's ID number, instead of by class standing. The change was made to avoid adviser workload build-ups during the final weeks of pre-enrollment.

"A few classes may have problems, but concessions will be made for seniors if the class is needed for graduation," he said.

A bill commending Pat Bosco, assistant dean of student development, and the All-University Open House Committee was moved special orders and passed.

El Salvador parties fail to form coalition

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador — Rightist parties and centrist Christian Democrats remained deadlocked Thursday on formation of a coalition to lead a representative assembly and name an interim president.

Jose Napoleon Duarte, president of the ruling junta and a Christian Democrat, left open the possibility he might step aside.

"I've never personally sought any position. I've always obeyed the dictates of my party... I will obey any decision my party takes," Duarte said at a news conference Thursday in response to a questions.

On Wednesday, Duarte said he planned to remain at the helm and insisted that his party had to be included in any viable government.

The Reagan administration, which has supported the Christian Democrats, but said before last Sunday's elections it would work with whichever party won, stepped up pressure against a right-wing government.

Bill supports Reagan's embargo proposal

WASHINGTON — A group of congressmen Thursday introduced a resolution echoing President Reagan's statement 10 days ago that the government should not embargo food exports except in extreme foreign policy emergencies.

Sen. Bob Dole (R-Kan.) and House Majority Whip Rep. Tom Foley (D-Wash.), the bill's primary sponsors, said passage of such a congressional policy statement should alleviate fears among grain traders that such an embargo still could be imposed despite Reagan's assurances.

The resolution pointed to nine years of "stop-and-go export actions of the United States government" that have threatened America's reputation as a reliable food supplier to other countries.

The embargoes have been ineffective and underscore the need for a consistent policy, the resolution said.

Embargoes should be imposed only when the United States has the "unified support of the free world community, including the active cooperation of the major trading nations of the world needed to make any such embargo effective," the resolution said.

Search for avalanche victims continues

SQUAW VALLEY, Calif. — Rescue workers on skis searched snow drifts and debris at a ski resort Thursday for up to eight people reported missing after a pair of avalanches that killed three people.

Four people were rescued after 12 feet of new snow triggered the avalanches Wednesday. One of those rescued, John Riley, 74, said avalanches "had come down many times in the past, but not as bad as this."

After early morning dynamite blasts shook down loose snow that could cause more avalanches, 75 rescuers headed for the Alpine Meadows ski resort aboard snow tractors.

They were forced off the slopes Wednesday night by blizzard conditions and the threat of more avalanches, but skies were clear and sunny Thursday morning. Lifts were running at nearby ski resorts, and Squaw Valley USA, site of the 1960 Winter Olympics, prepared for a weekend ski championship.

The Alpine Meadows resort, about three miles south of Squaw Valley at 7,000 feet in the Sierra, was closed by heavy snow Wednesday. But up to 13 employees, and possibly some vacationers, were there when disaster struck shortly after 4 p.m., officials said.

Police confiscate drugs, stolen property

JUNCTION CITY — A Junction City couple was being held Thursday following a raid on their residence in which officers confiscated drugs, cash and stolen property.

Thomas McGehee, 28, and Kay Osbourn, 24, were held in the Geary County Jail under $25,000 bonds on charges of possession of marijuana with intent to sell and possession of stolen property. The arrests were Wednesday.

Police Capt. Fred Uhrig said officers seized two pounds of marijuana valued at $1,350 and one pound of hashish estimated in value at $800. Authorities would not discuss the stolen property.

Mistaken identity leads to prisoner's release

TOPEKA — A man who was released inadvertently from the Shawnee County Jail Thursday was arrested without incident a few hours later, authorities said.

Shawnee County Corrections Director Dick Mills said the man's release was a case of mistaken identity.

Mills said that about noon officers released J.C. Davis, 21, of Topeka, who was locked up on a parole violation charge. They were supposed to release David L. Davis, 21, of Lawrence, who was being held on a charge of criminal damage to property.

Officers realized the wrong man had been set free when David L. Davis began asking about his release, authorities said.

Sheriff's officers and Topeka police began a search for J.C. Davis.

Ceremonial acts need supervision

As the legislative session winds to an end an acceptable school finance package has yet to be fully approved and the severence tax foes have not accepted defeat.

Yet some Kansas legislators have spent great amounts of time and effort deciding whether the square dance should become the state song, the catfish the state fish, if "Home on the Range" should be replaced as the state song and if a Kansas highway, U.S. 54, should be designated as a "Yellow Brick Road."

All this fervent activity to document the heritage and cultural identification of Kansans brings to mind some interesting study results.

Jack McIver Weatherford spent time studying the rituals of the Swahilis in Kenya; the residents of Kahl, a village in Bavaria and the citizens of La Jolla, Calif. His work was compiled in a book, "Tribes on the Hill."

In his study he found that in all three cultures women "do the brute work. Men are the ones with excess time to devote to status games." He therefore believe that "men, left to themselves are going to engage in almost endless ceremonial acts."

Actions in the Kansas legislature tend to verify his beliefs. In other words, legislators should be not be left to themselves. Perhaps an increase in supervision or female legislators is needed?

Editor,

Many have criticized the new city ordinance and fee proposal which allows freshman to park on campus. Yet, my main concern is the prejudice against freshman.

We take advantage of their naive nature. While they're struggling to adjust to college life, the adjustment is made more difficult by not allowing them to park on campus. Now that the city ordinance has been passed freshman have four options: a $7.50 fine for parking on campus, a $15 fine for parking is a restricted residental area, walk two or more miles to class or dump their cars.

Freshmen comprise approximately 20 percent of the student population. Many live in dorms and really don't need a car. But there are some freshmen who do.

For instance, local residents living 2 or more miles off campus and those from surrounding areas such as Junction City or Wamego definitely need a place to park their essential means of transportation, their car.

Parking should be based on where you live and work, not on class rank. I live just off campus, within walking distance but yet I'm allowed to park on campus. Those people living in the 9th Street area are allowed to park there or on campus. It should be one or the other.

I would appreciate it if we could focus our attention in this direction instead of taking advantage of the freshman.

Western Kansas is a frame of mind

There's something to be said for Western Kansas. Beauty is in the land that "God has forsaken" yet I-70 travelers curse the scenery from boredom as they speed toward Colorado. Somewhere past Salina, almost to Russell, a change takes place in Kansas. No longer do the Flint Hills form the slow rolling mounds of eastern Kansas farmland. The land irons itself out.

It is boring, they say. There is nothing but vast acres of flat land, they complain. But if one looks into nothing, he will discover more.

This nothingness consists of tumbleweeds that race down the road until they meet the finish line of a barbed wire fence. Nothing continues with a fence stretching endless miles to surround endless acres of land and sky. Land unabused with excess billboards, towns and people.

A LAZY HAWK sweeps through the sky with its broom of feathers, pushing the wind round and round. It swoops down, but not near enough to give the looker a glimpse into its independent eyes.

A mass of sunflowers create an ornament near a fence with a maze of yellow petals and coal black centers. They don't grow in straight rows in an immaculate garden but spring wildly and wirey from brown Kansas soil.

Not uncommon is a pheasant finding shade in the tall brown grasses near the highway. Even more common is the song of the grasshopper accompanied by the locust during hot sweaty July nights.

WESTERN KANSAS is a place sewn together by roads. Not the city streets or turnpikes connecting town to town, but dirt and gravel roads forming communities from farm to farm. A road that leads into an expanse of blue sky sprinkled with clouds and bordered on either side by brown splinter stakes held together with wire. Every road ends in the same place — a wide horizon.

Western Kansas stretches from one horizon to the other with only wheat fields and pastures in between. The immensity of the sky ahead of you never stops and circling around with only short interruptions by a lone tree or queue of telephone poles.

They say the wind never stops blowing in Kansas. There are no tall buildings to block it, only an occasional white grain bin growing from the ground to provide signposts for the weary traveler.

THE WIND is either from the South or the North — never predictable from one day to the next. The South wind brings all the shimmering heat of Texas and the dirt of Oklahoma as it swirls around and bakes everything like a convection oven. The North wind slices through walls and rattles windows. It whistles around the house with the eerie howl of a lonesome animal.

What kind of people live in a place where the wind never stops blowing and the horizon is ever unchanging?

People who know the peace of a solitary walk in the early morning half-light, the blink of a shooting star in a sky lite with a million shining candles, the excitement of a harvest well-done and the anticipation of kegs and tall talk at the after-harvest festival.

THESE PEOPLE know the stomping of a German wedding dance and the silent rustling of leaves in an old churchyard beside a somber house of prayer. They know the disappointment of a hailstorm's arrival just before wheat cutting and the wonder of fresh green-tinged brown fields are familiar to them. They know the reward at the end of a day when the sun sets fire to the sky and wraps the beholder in a daze of pinks, purples and golds finger-painted on the clouds.

Western Kansas is a frame of mind. A secret between you and the land which fills you with the peaceful, bustling of life. The expanse fills your heart and you know one can never be lonely on the wide plains — only in a hemmed-in city too busy to find the world.

Committee bill to entice business

TOPEKA (AP) — Willing to give the idea a try, a Senate committee Thursday approved a bill which allow the creation of "enterprise zones" within Kansas communities.

Many of the major provisions of the bill were agreed to at the last minute by the Senate Local Government Committeee which had to act on the bill before a Friday deadline.

As amended, the bill relaxes eligibility requirements cities would have to meet to be designated as an enterprise zone.

The concept behind enterprise zones is to grant tax concessions and relax government regulations in economically distressed areas as an inducement for private business to locate there.

"It may work and it may not work," said Sen. Norman Gaar (R-Westwood), the committee chairman.

Gaar said the bill is only a model and, if adopted, subsequent legislative sessions would probably have to make some changes.

The bill, as passed in the House, had eligibility criteria for designation which Kansas City, and perhaps Lawrence could have meet. The Senate committee relaxed those requirements so possibly more cities could qualify.

By ordinance a city would submit an application designating a portion of the community as enterprise zone to the Kansas Department of Economic Development for approval.

The small zones are suppose to be pockets of high unemployment, low-income, poor housing or an area where property tax is not being paid.

The House required an area to have an unemployment rate one and a half times the national average over the previous 18 months to become an enterprise zone. The Senate committee changed it to one and a half times the state average, a substantially lower figure.

Enterprise zones must be contiguous and have a minimum population of 4,000 in cities of 50,000 or more or at least 2,500 in smaller cities.

The major inducements offered to private business within an enterprise zone are:

— A $350 state income tax credit for each new employee hired or a $500 credit if the employee hired lives within the enterprise zone.

— A $350 state income tax credit for each $100,000 in new business construction or expansion.

— No sales tax would have to be paid on goods and services used in constructing, maintaining or enlarging a business located within the enterprise zone. The business would claim the sales tax refund from the Department of Revenue.

Aside from what Kansas does, President Reagan has asked Congress to create 75 federal enterprise zones over the next three years. However, the probabilty of a Kansas community being designated a federal enterprise zone is small.

'Klunks' fill U.S. posts, ambassador says

WASHINGTON (AP) — Former ambassador Malcolm Toon says the ranks of U.S. diplomats overseas are so overloaded with politically appointed and professionally unqualified "Mr. Klunks," that the conduct of American foreign policy is threatened.

Toon, who was serving as ambassador to the Soviet Union when he retired, says nearly 50 percent of the 100 U.S. ambassadors appointed by President Reagan got their jobs for political considerations and not because of any professional qualifications.

His criticism of the system was accompanied by stinging comments on some ambassadors, including actor John Gavin in Mexico and former Federal Reserve Board chairman Arthur Burns in West Germany.

He said the solution may be for some top-level career Foreign Service officers to "resign with a bang, slam the door."

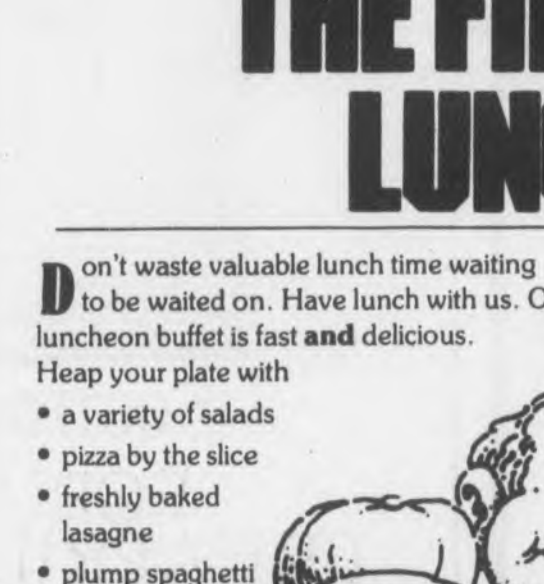
"Obviously we disagree," said State Department spokesman Dean Fischer. "If the president did not think his ambassadors were qualified, he would not have appointed them in the first place."

In the interview in the April issue of the Foreign Service Journal, published by the American Foreign Service Association, Toon said the Reagan administration has been more concerned with satisfying the demands of congressional conservatives, notably Sen. Jesse Helms (R-N.C.), than in placing qualified diplomats in sensitve slots.

Toon, who served as U.S. ambassador to Czechoslovakia, Yugoslavia and Israel, retired from the career Foreign Service in 1979 while serving as ambassador to the Soviet Union.

He is reported to have been angry that his replacement was Thomas Watson, a former board chairman of IBM, and not a career Foreign Service officer.

He complained that some of the most sensitive U.S. posts abroad have been filled by non professionals. He singled out:



—Mexico: "We have a Hollywood actor and a not very good one at that." Gavin, a Spanish-speaking actor, is a friend of Reagan.

—Great Britain: "We have a man in London who owes his place in life to the fact that his parents founded a furniture polish dynasty. His only qualification for the job is that he speaks English." The U.S. ambassador in London is John Louis Jr. whose family is linked to the Johnson Wax Co.

—France: "We have a man in Paris, a highly proficient banker, whose main qualification for the job is that he speaks French and is a friend of Giscard d'Estaing — who is out of power and is considered the arch enemy of the man (Socialist President Francois Mitterrand) who is running the country." The U.S. ambassador to France is Connecticut financier Evan Griffin Galbraith.

'Shooting to kill' policy drops city's crime rate

TERRE HAUTE, Ind. (AP) — In the year since Terre Haute Police Chief Gerald Loudermilk adopted a "shoot to kill" policy, the city's crime rate has dropped more than 12 percent — without a single shot fired by a police officer.

"We hope we never have to use our guns, but if there's ever a need we want the criminals to know we won't hesitate," Loudermilk said in a recent interview.

In the 1950s, Terre Haute was known as Sin City, a border town where a tangle of truck routes brought a large transient population easy access to vice.

In 1979, comedian Steve Martin dubbed it "the most nowhere place in America," a place where fast food franchises were considered haute cuisine and even the mayor drove a used car.

LAST YEAR this city of 80,000 gained another image, cultivated by Loudermilk and reinforced by police: a tough town for criminals.

Loudermilk is quick to point out that the policy merely underlines Indiana law, which provides for police use of deadly force.

"Indiana state law says a police officer can shoot a fleeing felon," he said. "We didn't want them to wonder if the department would back them up if they did it."

Terre Haute received national media attention after the policy went into effect in January 1981. Department crime statistics for the first year of the policy show an overall drop in crime of 12.6 percent, with a 49 percent decrease in robberies and an 18 percent drop in burglaries. But five people were murdered in 1981, up from four the previous year.

SPEAKING FROM his city hall office, where a miniature electric chair sits on his desk, Loudermilk said the policy had two purposes: to threaten criminals and to give the 125-member force more confidence to use their guns.

"To me it just clarified things," said Sgt. Larry Akers, a 15-year veteran with the department. "Before, you had a doubt whether you had a right to use deadly force or whether you didn't...

"Since this policy went into effect, no officer has fired a gun. You could pack 10 guns, but if the criminal knows you're not going to use them, that's nothing," Akers said.

"There is no uniqueness about any of it," said Mayor Pete Chalos. "Every police officer across the country has the same policy. I think we just verbalized ours."

IN NEW YORK, for example, Police Commissioner Robert McGuire said last year that a "shoot first and shoot to kill" order for policemen who believed their lives were in danger has been in effect since 1972.

Patrolman Harold Seifers, who has been with the Terre Haute force for six years, says the policy is especially useful during robberies in progress. "Criminals don't like it, but normal people do," Seifers said.

Loudermilk has a cabinet full of letters from around the country who like the policy.

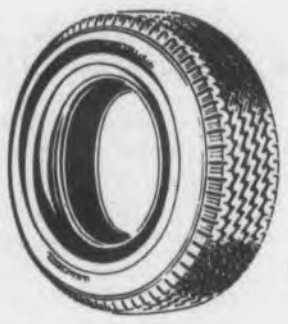
"I'll bet if we had that here, we wouldn't have one-tenth of the crime we do now," wrote Bob Miellowski of Chicago. "Also if you ever want to run for office in Chicago, you have my vote and I'm sure many others."

CHALOS SAYS the shoot-to-kill policy is not solely responsible for the drop in crime.

"I'm not going to give all the credit to our deadly force policy," the mayor said. "We're doing good police investigative work. We want them doing the basics the best to apprehend as many criminals as they can."

One Terre Haute resident, Gretta Clendenen, wrote to Loudermilk, "The statement you made to the policemen about using guns if necessary should be made by every police chief in the United States."

She added that her 8-year-old daughter was learning to shoot and "that guns are to be respected, not played with."



"Local response has been generally positive because he draws the line," said Ed Grosskopf, a professor of criminology at Indiana State University who served as a Chicago policeman for 10 years.

Not everyone agrees with the policy, however.

"I sympathize with the situation and remedies are not easy," said Sylvia Brehm, a microbiologist who serves on the board of the West Central Indiana Civil Liberties Union. But she opposes the policy. "I don't think the police should be judge and jury all in one, all on the spur of the moment."

Bowser:

The entertaining parrot

TOP LEFT: Bowser watches Terry Campbell, veterinary college resident in clinical pathology. ABOVE: Candy Layton, temporary instructor of surgical medicine shoulders Bowser the parrot.

For breakfast he had corn, lima beans, dog food, dark leafy vegetables and seed mixture. He is solid gray with a red tail and sleeps standing up in a cage.

He is Bowser, a one-pound, 15-inch long, African gray parrot who resides at the College of Veterinary Medicine's aviary.

Bowser was given to the veterinary college three years ago by Shanan Schultz, a 1978 K-State graduate.

"I loved having Bowser, but I wasn't home enough to give him the attention he needed," Schultz said.

Bowser is being well taken care of and has plenty of attention, according to Terry Campbell, veterinary college resident in clinical pathology.

"We have an aviary and the veterinary students take care of the birds. Whoever is assigned for the week has the responsibility of taking care of Bowser," Campbell said.

BEFORE BOWSER was donated to the veterinary college, Schultz has a niece who was responsible for Bowser.

"I kept Bowser for about a year," Elizabeth McGhee, senior in veterinary medicine, said.

McGhee tells of some of the adventures of owning a parrot.

"Bowser has a deep male-sounding voice," McGhee said. "When the phone rang, he would say 'hello' and then start talking as if he were involved in a telephone conversation.

"If someone was in my house and heard Bowser talking, they would think that there was another person in the house," she added.

Bowser is also known to talk in the middle of the night.

"I would wake up and hear Bowser talking and it would sound like a man was in my living room," McGhee said.

One of the attractions of having a parrot is teaching it to talk. According to Campbell, parrots are easy to train.

"He (Bowser) picks up things pretty fast," Campbell said. "Parrots are funny, though. You can try to teach them certain phrases until you're blue in the face. If they like it, they'll pick it up.

"I remember the first day we had Bowser and we didn't know he said anything. I was working late in the aviary with the nest boxes and all of the sudden I heard this male voice say, 'hello, fella.'

"Bowser says 'Bowser' and 'bad bird' because those are things people say to him a lot," Campbell said.

BOWSER NOT ONLY talks but mimics sounds.

"I was across the hall in a meeting and heard what sounded like someone moving the ladder in the aviary," Campbell said. "I knew no one was in there so I went in and finally figured out Bowser had picked up the noise and was mimicking the sound."

However, there are a few things that Bowser will not say.

"We've been trying to teach him things like 'bad birds go to the necropsy' and he won't say it," Campbell said. Necropsy is the same as an autopsy for birds, he added.

According to Campbell, there are several tricks to training a parrot.

When training a parrot to talk it needs to be separated from other birds because each bird has its own kind of song used to communicate with among its species, Campbell said.

"Otherwise they'll pick up all the other birds' chatter."

"Bowser picked them all up," Campbell added. "Every once in a while Bowser will sound like a cockatoo or a lovebird."

Bowser does not continually talk.

"Bowser is usually a pretty quiet bird," Campbell said. "Unless you have him out around a crowd of people and the people are talking and halfway ignoring him. If Bowser's on someone's shoulder he'll start laughing and join in on the conversation.

"Bowser's favorite perch is on your shoulder," he added.

IF BOWSER is male or female is unknown.

"We don't know what sex Bowser is," Campbell said. "Many parrots are monomorphic, which means the males and females look physically alike."

"The only way to tell Bowser's sex is by a surgical technique. There are some non-surgical techniques, but they're not as

Hot checks burn area businessmen

Offenders often young, students

By Darcy Lindstrom
Collegian Reporter

It's the end of the semester. You're short on money. Maybe you're expecting a check, maybe not. You need gas, cash or groceries. You go to the Union, the bar or the store and write a "hot check," hoping you'll beat it to the bank with the needed funds to cover it, or maybe you won't even try. No big deal. It's done all the time. Right?

Right. In fact, check fraud is a significant problem in Riley County, according to Robert Socolofsky, county attorney.

Check fraud is not limited to passing checks on accounts with insufficient funds, but also includes checks written on closed accounts, forgeries and the large scale kiting of checks, said Dan Richards, operations officer at Union National Bank.

"The most common type of check fraud is the writing of checks on accounts with insufficient funds or closed accounts," Richards said.

RICHARDS SAID between 50 and 100 checks are returned by his department each day. Not all checks with insufficient funds are returned, he added. Some checks are paid, allowing an overdraft.

Although bad checks are a significant problem to the banks, it is the merchant who bears the largest loss. This has led a few merchants to review their check cashing policies. Varney's Book Store is such a business.

During the first week of December, Varney's changed its check-cashing policy from a $35 limit over the amount of purchase to a $10 one.

"We had a significant number of insufficient fund checks coming back and an increase in the number of checks that had to be turned over to the county attorney for collection," Jon Levin, co-owner of Varney's Bookstore, said.

According to Levin, the number of bad checks they now receive has dropped slightly since the new policy has been in effect and the total dollar amount has decreased sharply.

"We would rather not have the limit, but we felt it was necessary," Levin said.

THE UNION'S dollar value of the number of bad checks it receives is less than 1 percent, Jack Thoman, Union accountant, said.

If a check cannot be collected by the merchant, the bank or business can then either turn the check over to a collection agency or the county attorney's office.

Socolofsky said his office handles between 5,000 and 6,000 checks each year involving an estimated 1,000 or 2,000 people. Approximately 500 to 600 people are formally charged with giving a worthless check.

"Typically the checks we receive are from young people below the age of 30 or 35. I'd very roughly guess that 25 percent of them are K-State students," Socolofsky said.

He added he received more checks from college students near the end of each semester.

"College students will write a worthless check before leaving town at the end of the semester, knowing it will take a week or two to clear the banks," he explained.

COLLEGE STUDENTS are fairly easy to find, according to Socolofsky. The police have many ways to track people down.

A few of the places the police can go to locate a student are Security and Traffic, utility companies, phone companies and a student's University records — all of which usually have the student's home address.

In order to be convicted of the crime of giving a worthless check, you must issue that check (or any form of bank draft), have an intent to defraud, and know that at the time the check was delivered you did not have the money in the bank to cover it.

"The most important of the three is the intent to defraud," Socolofsky said. "Intent is a state of mind and is inferred by the person's actions.

"Sometimes a person can't add and subtract, but sometimes a person knows damn well they don't have the money in the bank and that is an intent to defraud," he said.

PASSING A worthless check under $50 is a misdemeanor and is punishable by a maximum of one year in the county jail andhor a fine up to $2,500. A bad check written for over $50 is a felony and is punishable by a maximum of five years in the state penal system and/or a fine up to $5,000.

According to Socolofsky, the practice in Riley County can depend on the amount of the check, the number of prior arrests and the willingness to pay the check.

The penalty for a first-time offender is usually a fine, payment of the court costs and restitution of the check to the merchant.

For the second offense a larger fine is imposed, he said. A third conviction usually leads to a jail sentence with immediate probation.

"With check cases, jail is kind of a last resort," Socolofsky said.

The penalty for checks over $50 can also depend on the circumstances, according to Patrick Caffey, assistant county attorney. If it is a first offense and the offender is willing to pay the check, the charge may be reduced to a misdemeanor and the offender sentenced to a jail term with immediate probation.

AS A RESULT of prosecution and the threat of prosecution, the attorney's office collects approximately $100,000 a year in bad checks and returns it to the merchants, Socolofsky said.

Forgery, although not as common as insufficient fund checks, is also a problem in Riley County.

According to Thoman, there has been an increase in forged checks being passed in the Union.

Levin concurred that forgeries have recently increased at Varney's.

Both Thoman and Levin attribute some of the problem to the absence of pictures on K-State identification cards and the small tape strip provided for the student's signature.

"The strip is so narrow and doesn't accomodate some of the student's signatures. This makes the signature hard for the cashiers to check," Thoman said.

Verification of signatures is difficult even for banks, according to Richards.

"We handle so many checks in one day

Aggieville

OUTSIDE OF Aggieville in Manhattan, prices are lower. They range from $2 to $2.50 a pitcher and 40 cents for an 11-ounce draw to 80 cents for an 18-ounce draw. Specials average 60 cents for a draw that averages 13 ounces and $1.87 for pitchers.

Roger Walls, manager of Roger's Tavern at 217 Poyntz, said his prices are low because he goes for a larger volume and tries to appeal to all types, not just college students. The fact that Mel's Tavern is cheaper and not in Aggieville is a drawing card for students, according to Jill Humphrey, manager.

"We have an advantage that we're cheaper on prices because we're not in Aggieville and we draw a lot of business that way. But we also draw people who want to get away from Aggieville," Humphrey said. "On the other hand, people who go down to Aggieville don't leave for cheaper beer."

Students leaving Aggieville for cheaper bars outside is a potential threat, according to Ramey. Aggieville is not losing a lot of business, but it "needs to be stalling prices and be more competitive.

"One thing about Aggieville in general is that any place hasn't sold as much beer as last year," Ramey said. This may be due to inflation, rising costs and possibly competition outside of Aggieville, he said.

AS FAR AS beer prices going up next year, Ray, Lechner and Busch said maybe, depending upon operating costs; Ramey said a definite no.

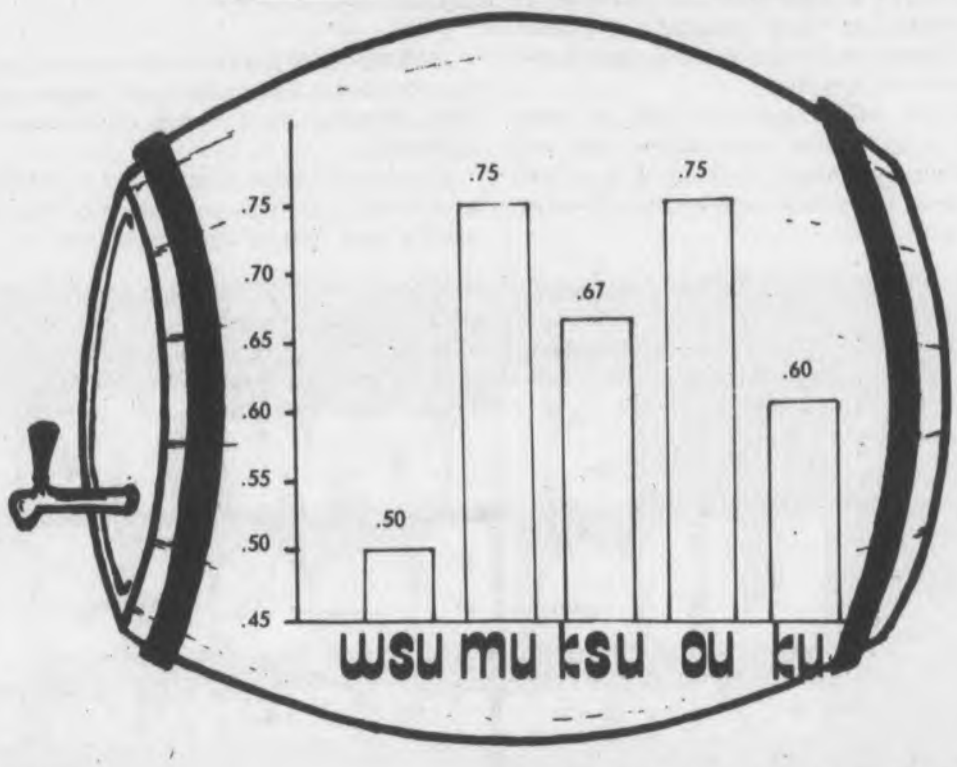
A lot of the blame from students for higher prices in Aggieville has fallen to Ray who owns five of the 10 business establishments in Aggieville that serve alcohol. This includes his recent purchase of Last Chance Pizza Mill which he bought from Steve Benz, Riley, according to Mike Larmore, manager of Last Chance.

However, other bar owners feel he has an "unfair amount of criticism," according to Busch.

"Maybe he is a little more aggressively hungry than the rest of us, but I don't think he does anything any of the others don't do," Busch said.

Ray discounts setting prices in Aggieville.

"The only way to control the prices is if there were no alternatives. I feel we're in a very competitive market," Ray said. "We might have an impact, but capacity-wise we have no edge and we're not in a position to control anything."



BUSCH AGREES that the competition is stiff and does have an effect on prices. This is because of the cost of advertising needed to stay competitive.

However, Lechner and Ramey said the competition is good but not too tough.

"Compared to eight years ago there were the same amount of bars and only 10,000 students, now there are 19,000," Ramey said.

The number of bars in Aggieville will stay the same, unless built on the outskirts of Aggieville. A law was passed in 1977 saying that drinking establishmets could only be within 200 feet of each other, except those already in Aggieville which are protected under a "grandfather clause," according to Mayor Russell Reitz.

Aggieville is expensive, but students will keep on going there, Exline said.

"It would take a really big hike (in prices) for people to leave Aggieville," Exline said.

Poll indicates Reagan's rating falls to new low

NEW YORK (AP) — President Reagan's standing with the public, both for the job he is doing in the White House and for his personal appeal, has dropped to the lowest point of his presidency in the latest Associated Press-NBC News poll.

The nationwide telephone poll, of 1,603 adults in a scientific random sampling on Monday and Tuesday, found that 43 percent think Reagan is doing a good or excellent job as president — down from 47 percent in January and down 20 percentage points from last August.

Reagan's popularity in the poll has declined in the recession, with Americans showing less enthusiasm for his economic programs as high unemployment, federal budget deficits and high interest rates persist.

Thirty-four percent said he is doing good or excellent on the economy, compared with 37 percent in January and 52 percent in August. A narrow plurality, 45 percent to 42 percent, agrees with Reagan's statements that the economic problems would be worse today if his economic plan had not been adopted. In January, 54 percent said they agreed with that position.

Twenty-five percent said their families are worse off financially today than a year ago, while 20 percent said their families are better off, 54 percent said their families are about as well off and 1 percent were not sure. Such divided sentiment is consistent with AP-NBC News poll results over the past four months.

For a poll based on about 1,600 interviews, the results are subject to an error margin of 3 percentage points either way because of chance variations. That is, if one could have talked this past week to all Americans with telephones, there is only 1 chance in 20 that the findings would vary by more than 3 percentage points.

Differences in the exact wording of questions, differences in when the interviews were conducted and different methods of interviewing could also cause variations.

Shuttle flight shocks plants

SPACE CENTER, Houston (AP) — Plants grown in space for eight days aboard space shuttle Columbia never could decide which way was up, two scientists say.

A variety of plants in two miniature gardens in the sky returned to earth Tuesday healthy and vigorous, but scientists conducting the experiments said many were distorted in shape and obviously confused by the lack of gravity in orbit.

Dr. Joe R. Cowles, a Unversity of Houston biologist, said his preliminary findings show it is possible to grow plants in orbit, "but it's not as simple as a lot of people thought."

Cowles' experiment used pine, oat and Chinese mung bean as specimens and all three had difficulty adapting to the weightlessness of space.

"The mung bean seemed to be the most confused," said Cowles. The plant, which is often eaten as bean sprouts, twisted and turned in several directions instead of growing toward the light.

Checks

that it is virtually impossible to verify every check that goes through. Once in a while a forged check slips by," he said.

ACCORDING TO Richards, the bank is liable for the amount of the forged check.

The penalty for forgery, a felony, is a minimum of one to three years in jail and a maximum of five to 10 years, andhor a fine of $5,000.

Taking a worthless check to the county attorney's office is not the only way for a merchant to collect bad checks. There are a number of agencies in the area that collect checks for a fee.

According to Karen Hasza, manager of Executive Management Services, check fraud is a real problem in the Manhattan area.

"Businesses are going out of business every day and no one feels sorry for them. They just feel sorry for the person with the debt collector knocking at the door," Hasza said.

Students are writing more bad checks now than in the past, according to Hasza. Students who are older and raising families are going to school, incurring large debts, writing bad checks and then running off, she said.

FINDING THESE people is only a small part of Executive Management Services' job, Hasza said. Making them pay is another.

"A merchant would rather have the money than the merchandise. Even if it takes a while to get it," she said.

Check-rite is another alternative to the county attorney's office.

According to Dale Thierolf, manager of the Manhattan Credit Bureau and Check-rite, Check-rite is both a preventative and recovery organization.

Thierolf said Check-rite does not keep track of the number of checks written and returned by college students, but agreed that most bad checks are written by young people.

"It's not necessarily people who are out of money. It's usually people in the middle- to upper classes who are trying to live just slightly above their means," Thierolf explained.

The last type of check fraud, though the most uncommon, is usually the most costly to the merchant. It is the large scale kiting of checks.

According to Richards, there have been two large scale check frauds this year.

Ramon Martinez, a freshman at K-State, was sentenced for theft by deception in January. He is now serving time in the state penitentiary.

MARTINEZ WROTE $10,000 worth of bad checks, using three different names and four different area banks, according to Socolofsky.

A woman, whose name is not available, opened a local bank account, received 300 checks and within three days was up to check number 257, Thierolf said. The dollar amount of this action is not yet known.

It is very doubtful, Socolofsky said, that any of the money these people took from merchants will ever be recovered.

Check fraud, whether it is passing an insufficient fund check, forgery or large scale kiting, is a serious offense and one with lasting consequences.

Socolofsky pointed out that a conviction of any of these crimes becomes a permanent part of a person's police record.

Another consequence to consider is the risk taken by a previous offender of not having his "good" check accepted by any merchants in town.

According to Thierolf, a conviction by the county attorney's office will place the offender's name permanently on a Check-rite bulletin.

Socolofsky said most students make their big mistake by thinking that as long as they have a check, they have money.

Annual Telefund drive solicits alumni pledges

By LAUREEN MOORE
Collegian Reporter

More than $36,000 has been pledged to the College of Agriculture during the first four nights of the 1982 Telefund Drive.

Telefund is sponsored by the KSU Foundation and the Kansas State Student Foundation. It will run from March 28 to May 3, except on Friday and Saturday nights. The Foundation's goal is to raise $140,000 in this session of the Telefund.

"A majority of the money pledged will go toward establishing new scholarships. The exact dollar amounts are up to the particular colleges and what their needs may be," said Mary Wiklander, KSU Foundation's assistant director of annual giving.

"With the recent cutbacks in federal loan and grant programs it will be more difficult than ever for many students to attend college. Establishing these new scholarships will help a few more students to finance college," Wiklander said.

ALL OF THE Telefund calling will be done by student volunteers who are contacted through their departments and departmental clubs. Each night there are about 30 volunteer students doing the calling, according to Wiklander.

"Some of the students enjoyed calling so much that they wanted to come back and work the next night. The callers compete with each other to see who can come up with the most pledges," Wiklander said.

The student volunteers contact alumni from their own colleges to seek pledges. One man, a 1929 graduate, indicated that he had never donated to the University before. However, as a result of a student's telephone conversation with him, he is now interested in planning a scholarship for an agriculture student, according to Mark Moore, director of annual giving, KSU Foundation.

"The Telefund is a combined effort by dedicated students, faculty and alumni who recognize the importance of raising needed funds for their colleges. The first two Telefunds in 1980 and 1981 were huge successes and I feel confident that we'll be able to continue that trend," Moore said.

IN 1980, $138,000 was raised through Telefund. In 1981, $140,000 was raised.

Two years ago the College of Agriculture raised $47,000 and its goal for this year is $50,000. Faculty, alumni and students were involved in making decisions as to where the money would go, according to Dave Mugler, associate dean of the College of Agriculture.

"The money comes in two different categories, designated and undesignated dollars. Some of the pledges are for specific purposes such as scholarships or livestock judging teams," Mugler said.

A majority of the funds are undesignated. These funds are allocated in the following ways: 50 percent of the money goes to scholarships for agriculture students, 40 percent to special projects and 10 percent to student enrichment activities.

The College of Agriculture will do the calling until Sunday. Volunteers representing the College of Engineering will call their alumni Tuesday through April 18. Arts and Sciences alumni will be contacted from April 20 to May 3.

A Telefund will be conducted in the fall on behalf of the colleges of Home Economics, Business Administration, Architecture and Design, and Education.

Leavenworth man offers acreage for Nixon library

LEAVENWORTH (AP) — A Leavenworth man has offered to donate land for a proposed Richard M. Nixon Library in this northeast Kansas community.

The Leavenworth City Commission is studying a proposal by Mayor Pro Tem Clyde Graeber to locate the library in Leavenworth, about 25 miles northwest of Kansas City.

Shannon Wiley, owner of a local meat packing plant, said Thursday he's willing to donate 10 or more acres of a 100-acre tract of land he owns on a Leavenworth hill called Pilot Knob.

"I'm no politician," said Wiley. "I don't care if he was Republican or Democrat. He'd have to be pretty ornery before I wouldn't donate the land."

Nixon, the nation's 37th president, resigned in 1974 in the wake of the Watergate break-in scandal.

Wiley said he has owned the land for 40 years and it wasn't doing him any good.

"I might as well give it to the city if it will help them out," he said.

The city commission agreed Tuesday night to consider Graeber's proposal, which he claims would help bring more tourists into Leavenworth, which has a population of about 34,000.

William Zanders, executive director of the Leavenworth Chamber of Commerce, said he had not had an opportunity to discuss the proposal with Nixon's attorney, Stan Mortenson.

"The important thing is to convince the Nixon people that Leavenworth would be a good place for the library," said Zanders. "As far as I can tell, the issue is still open and I think Leavenworth has a good shot."

Zanders said 80,000 people already visit the Missouri River city each year to tour historic Fort Leavenworth, and a Nixon library could increase that total.

"The fact is the library would bring in jobs and new dollars," he said. "The impact on Leavenworth could be tremendous. More jobs for young people, more revenue for the economic community."

Graeber has said having a Nixon library within 50 miles of the Harry S. Truman Library in Independence, Mo., and within 150 miles of the Dwight D. Eisenhower Museum in Abilene would be convenient for tourists.

Teams keep a tradition alive

Crew: a sport of precision, grace

By JOE SASENICK
Collegian Reporter

They curl up in a ball, push with their legs and pull with their arms, causing the oars to pull the shell through the water.

"Stay relaxed," the coach yells. "Don't hesitate to release. Try to match your power."

He yells instructions and suggestions to the oarsmen as they glide over the waters of Tuttle Creek Reservoir, working to be the best and to keep a college tradition alive.

Rowing is the oldest collegiate sport. It began in 1852 with a race between Harvard and Yale.

Rowing was not introduced at K-State until the fall of 1963. At that time, K-State was the only Big Eight school to have a rowing team, so it was forced to compete against schools in Wisconsin, Indiana and Minnesota, said Don Rose, founder of the K-State crew and head coach of the novice teams.

THE WOMEN'S CREW did not start competing until 1975, said Allison McKim, president of the Kansas State Rowing Association (KSRA).

McKim, along with Joel Anderson, the vice-president, are the team captains and members of the executive board.

"The executive board helps the operation of the association to run smoothly," Anderson explained.

Other members of the board include the coaches, a secretary and treasurer.

However, this board is only one part of the organization. Crew is composed of men and women's varsity and novice teams, Head Coach Pete Hamma said. The novice team is all first-year members.

Hamma rowed for five years at K-State and was assistant coach for two years before becoming head coach this year.

THE TEAM TOOK to the water early last fall under Hamma's guidance. They started training two weeks after the fall semester started, Anderson said, and rowed until around Thanksgiving.

Because of the weather conditions, crew concentrated on weight lifting and running during the off season, he said.

"It's a necessity to get your legs strengthed and your body in top physical shape so that you can compete at an intense level."

They began their on-the-water training during spring break with their annual trip to Austin, Texas, Anderson said. "Practice time in the water enabled us to improve techniques prior to this season."

EACH MEMBER paid their own way to Austin, according to McKim. The total cost was $75 a person which covered gas, food and the campground fee, she said. The team camped on Lake Austin.

After they returned from Austin, crew began rowing on the lake again. Practices are held at 5 a.m. for the men and women's varsity eight-man crews and in the afternoon for the novices. The four- and two-man teams also practice in the afternoon. This means that some people are practicing two times a day.

"The people that are out here are dedicated," McKim said. "During the season it's pretty time consuming — March 27 to May 1 we have a meet every weekend," she said.

K-State's first regatta will be this weekend in Omaha, Neb.

"It's going to be our first test," Hamma said. "Right now our varsity looks pretty good. They still need to work on their technique and power."

IT TAKES A lot of strength to be a member of crew, McKim said. "It takes all the muscles in your body. You don't have to have a lot of strength in one area."

However, "everyone is on a equal level," she said. Most people have not participated in the sport before the college level.

High schools do not offer the sport, so everyone is getting their first try at rowing in college, McKim said.

But practicing is not the only thing members of the rowing association are involved in. They take part in fund-raising for the association, Hamma said.

"We work football games and basketball games parking cars. We worked a Royals playoff game also," he said.

"We went to Esbon, Kan., for their Octoberfest to show the people what we are doing and to get some donations," he added.

There were also benefits held at local bars to raise money, he said.

THE MONEY RAISED goes to pay for two damaged shells, McKim said. These shells were damaged a couple of years ago in an automobile accident while on the way to a meet.

"They were our two best racing shells," Anderson said. "The front ends of the racing shells were smashed."

These shells have been fixed; however, it cost $2,500, McKim said. But before the shells can be used, they will need to be equipped with new seats and other items, she added.

Because of this, the rowing association needs more money to survive.

"We need it to maintain the shells," she said. "We haven't had a new shell since 1971."

THE TEAM was hoping for money from Student Senate, Anderson said. But senate voted down a sports bill that would have aided all sport clubs this semester.

"I was really upset when I was at Student Senate," he said. "I got the impression that these people against the sports bill really didn't have any idea of the difficulty sports groups have in raising funds."

Anderson feels the association deserves money because it represents K-State.

"We're just barely surviving," he said. "With the type of program we have a sponsorship would not be appropriate. Sponsors want more advertisement than we can possibly give."

So with no sponsorship and no funds from the University crew members end up spending a lot of money out of their own pockets, he said.

Most of the money spent by crew members goes toward traveling expenses, Anderson said.

Golfers begin season in Park College tourney

By MACK McCLURE
Collegian Reporter

Four freshmen and one senior make up the nucleus of the men's golf team which opened its spring 1982 campaign Thursday in the Park College Tournament at Kansas City's Windbrook Country Club. Second round action began this morning.

Last spring, the Wildcats placed 10th in the Park College Tournament.

"We're ging to be inexperienced and it's going to be a matter of working hard in order for us to be competitive," Head Coach Ray Wauthier said.

The four rookies on the team include Topekans Kevin Crow and Allen French; Bob Sedorcek, of Sumner Academy, Kansas City, Kan., and Mark Small, a graduate of suburban Chicago's Flossmoor High School.

Sedorcek and Crow are both on athletic scholarships.

THE LONE upperclassman is Brad Johnson, a senior from Salina. Johnson, also the only returning letterman, shot the lowest average on the squad last year. In the 10 rounds played, his average was 79.1 per 18 holes.

Johnson, a Salina Central graduate, said, "We'll be young and that can be an advantage for us." He explained that the team's youthfulness will reflect how anxious the golfers are to prove themselves on the course.

Johnson will play the role of teacher as well as competitor on the team.

"My role is to help the freshmen adjust from high school golf to college golf," Johnson said. College golf differs from high school competition in that the fifth golfer from each team goes out on the course first, then the fourth golfer follows, then the third and so on, he said.

In high school competition, the golfer with the best score goes first.

"I'm usually the last or second to last golfer for K-State to go out, so I watch a lot of others tee off ahead of me," Johnson said. A player cannot be awed by the other golfers shooting ahead of him, or he will psych himself out, he added.

WAUTHIER, IN HIS third year of coaching the golf team which has existed at K-State since 1935, notes that this year's squad will be inexperienced. But "when I look at my kids thus far, we should do better than we did last year," he said.

"A big factor last year was that we never had help by all five players," Johnson said. He said that the top four scores from each team are recorded in the meets, and the Wildcats had only four effective golfers.

"After a while, it seemed our team was playing with only four golfers and all the other teams had five players," Johnson said.

Last year's top achievements in meets were a victory over Fort Hays State University in a state dual meet and a pair of third-place finishes in the Baker and Bethany invitationals.

(See, GOLF p. 13)

'Cats drop third to Titans

It would be April Fool's to say that K-State's baseball team rallied in the ninth inning to defeat Oral Roberts University Thursday afternoon. But in reality, three runs in the ninth were not enough to top the Titans, who won the nine-inning battle, 8-5, at Tulsa, Okla.

Down 8-2, the Wildcats' DeWayne Belcher started off the ninth with a double and scored on Jay Kvasnicka's single. Then Mark Teague walked to place runners on first and second. Glynn Perry doubled, bringing Kvasnicka and Teague around to score.

Reliever Mike Knox of the Titans ended K-State's chances by getting the final out.

ORU's Paul Haley picked up the pitching win. He holds a perfect 4-0 mark on mound this season. K-State's Mark Gomez was pinned with his first loss this season, now 3-1.

Perry and Kvasnicka swung big bats for the 'Cats. Perry clubbed two hits in four trips to the plate, collecting three RBIs. Kvasnicka also had two hits. He batted three times, driving in one and scoring twice.

For the Titans, Ron Henika went two for two and had two RBIs.

ORU is now 21-3 on the season, good enough for a No. 4 ranking in the country. K-State comes back to Manhattan after its brief 3-game road trip with a 19-9-1 record so far this season.

Golf

This spring's quintet should be ready for today's second round as most of the golfers have put in a lot of time on working on their game at Brandeberry Complex, the indoor facility that is used by such varsity teams as football, baseball, track and softball during inclement weather.

Johnson shot some rounds of golf while vacationing in Galveston, Texas, over spring break. He hopes his average will be under 80 during play this season.

Tee-off time was 9 a.m. today. The field of 21 includes four Big Eight schools, including K-State. The other three conference teams are the University of Missouri, the University of Kansas and Iowa State University.

There are also a number of small Missouri colleges competing, some schools represented from Iowa and three NAIA schools from Kansas, including Emporia State University, Fort Hays State University and Marymount College.

Play consists of 18 holes per day, 36 holes for the tournament.

As the bill goes to the Senate for the second time, it would impose a 3½ percent tax on oil and gas production and 2½ percent tax on processed natural gas liquids. It contains no tax on coal.

IT EXEMPTS royalty interests from the tax, and exempts small stripper oil and gas wells.

The taxes would generate an estimated $77.4 million new revenue in the fiscal year starting July 1 and $103.2 million the following year. The difference is because the tax would be collected only nine months in the first year.

It would rebate 5 percent of the oil and gas revenue to counties and school districts to compensate them for lost property taxes. That would amount to $3.3 million the first year and $4.4 million the second year.

It also would commit 20 percent to the trust fund, or $15.5 million the first year and $20.6 million the second.

The rest of the revenue, or $58.6 million the first year and $78.2 million after that, would be dedicated to school finance. That would include any increases the Legislature would vote in state aid, plus property tax reduction at the local level.

MONTGOMERY AND others have insisted that if the severance tax is to be passed it must go totally for enrichment of public education and reduction of school property taxes.

Guldner and Rep. Denny Burgess (R-Wamego), who tried the 10 percent rebate amendment, said all the revenue after the rebate should go into the Ad Valorem Tax Reduction Fund, because the public believes property taxes are going to go down if a severance tax is enacted.

reliable," he said.

According to Campbell, Bowser seems to respond to female birds.

"Bowser can recognize female from male," Campbell said. "Sometimes a female (bird) will come into the aviary and Bowser will start bobbing his head in a courtship-type gesture."

Campbell added that he someday hopes to breed Bowser.

WHEN BOWSER FIRST arrived at the aviary he was kept in quarantine and put on a preventative antibiotic.

According to Campbell, these actions were due to diseases that birds can transmit to man. Campbell added that Bowser was "probably never exposed to the diseases because he was bought from someone who raised him in this country."

Parrots are known for getting into things.

"If you have them out, you have to constantly watch them," Campbell said.

"Once I had Bowser out on the desk and left some slides out on the table and went into the other room for just a few seconds," Campbell said. "When I came back Bowser had the slides in his mouth. Just about the time I yelled at him, he yelled 'Bowser.' He has a great sense of timing."

Bowser is a relatively tame parrot.

"Anytime a bird will let you touch their beak, they're pretty tame," he said. "Every once in a while, he'll let you scratch his head."

African gray parrots are relatively expensive birds, costing in the area of $1,500, according to McGhee.

Carlin vetoes Onaga Lake project, deletes reservoir from water plan

By LESLIE FROST
Arts and Entertainment Editor

They came in 1936, men from the Corps of Engineers invited by the state. They dug samples of land in the Onaga Valley of Pottawatomie County.

The men were surveying to decide the feasibility of damming the valley.

They never left.

Residents of the valley who have grown accustomed to the threat of imminent flooding of their homes and land were given a respite Tuesday when Gov. John Carlin signed legislation to remove the proposed $100 million Onaga Lake project from the Kansas water plan.

"My reaction is jubilation," said Neil Schanker, Manhattan resident and president of the Kansas chapter of Friends of the Earth.

"I think it's a fairly serious death blow (for the project)," said Mike Wolfender, writer and editor at the Corps of Engineers Planning Office in Kansas City, Mo.

"It's Congress who makes the final decisions. However, the governor's veto is significant and Congress will consider that," said Frank Funk, park manager of Tuttle Creek Reservoir.

ALTHOUGH CONGRESS MUST de-authorize the project for it to be killed, the elimination of the project from the state water plan is "extremely helpful" for federal de-authorization, according to Maurie Wenzinger, press secretary for Rep. Jim Jeffries (R-Atchison).

Jeffries introduced two bills in February to de-authorize the project and to allow water from other reservoirs to be allocated for water supply use.

No one has said he wants the Onaga Dam water so the project is not needed now, James Koelliker, associate professor of civil engineering, said.

"We haven't said that there'll never be a dam," he added. "The same act could put it back in. People come and go but the valley remains."

THE DAM WAS probably removed from the state water plan because a lack of need for water supply in relationship to the cost of the dam, according to Koelliker.

"You don't build a new building and think in five years you might abandon it. If you could see 20 years you might go ahead and build it," he said.

The question facing the state was, "How far in advance to buy?" Koelliker said.

No one came forward requesting the water for supply, so there was no need for the state to fund it now, he said.

"I'm a little surprised it was resolved so quickly but all the political conditions were right," Koelliker said.

Recent studies completed by the Corps show that without use of the proposed Onaga lake for water supply, the project would not be economically feasible, Wolfender said.

THE STATE CANNOT buy the water storage for resale to industries, municipalities and rural water districts because Carlin's signature removed it from the Kansas water plan.

"If the project is not in the state water plan, the state cannot include the project in the state water marketing program," Alan Lochner, head of the Kansas Water Office, said.

The only way the water could be used for water supply, and thus be economically feasible, he said, would be for a group other than the state to come forward and buy the water storage.

"I don't know of any industries, municipalities or rural water districts that would come forward and enter into an agreement with the Corps of Engineers to buy the water supply capacity," he said.

One K-State professor has been following the dam controversy because of the effect the water would have on what lies underneath the soil.

Patricia O'Brien, professor of sociology and anthropology, said more than 1,000 archeological sites would be destroyed if the lake were built.

House votes on finances

By LESLIE PHELPS
Government Affairs Editor

TOPEKA — Debate over appropriations for state universities and other regents' institutions for fiscal year 1983 dominated the House of Representatives Friday.

Rep. Joe Knopp (R-Manhattan), amended the proposed 7.5 percent faculty salary increase to 8.5 percent. The 1 percent increase called for an additional allocation of $1.8 million.

"You can't see the decay in faculty salaries as you can in roads or buildings," but it's still there, Knopp said. The trend is that people who compete for faculty salaries are coming from countries that are willing to work for less, he said, speaking in support of the amended increase.

"I leave it to the direction of this body as to which direction higher education should take," Knopp said. "It depends on what quality of education we want to have." His amendment failed 62-51.

Following this vote, Rep. Mike Meacham (R-Wichita) put forth an amendment increasing the proposed faculty salary increase .5 percent ($900,000). This amendment also failed, 60-55.

The most vocal opponent of the amendments was Rep. Mike Hayden (R-Atwood), chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee.

Hayden said that "fiscal responsibility" made him oppose the amendments. "It would be nice to give these people this increase — they deserve it," he said, but called for fiscal responsibility.

"You can't put everything into salaries," Hayden said. He pointed out that wages should be considered along with working conditions. The state government launched

Senate to decide severance tax today

Carlin looking for 21 ayes

TOPEKA (AP) — The battle for Senate votes to pass the severance tax headed to the wire Sunday, with some supporters claiming they would win it, others saying it was too close to call and opponents still confident they had it blocked.

A 20-20 tie vote, which would kill the bill the House has passed twice this session, appeared entirely possible.

However, Gov. John Carlin and members of his staff remained optimistic a 21st senator could be persuaded to vote for it.

It would impose a 3½ percent tax on the production of oil and gas and a 2½ percent tax on processed natural gas liquids.

Royalty owners would be exempt from the tax, and so would oil taken from small stripper wells.

It would take effect July 1 and would generate an estimated $68 million in Fiscal Year 1983 and $99 million in Fiscal Year 1984, presuming the price of oil remains around $30 a barrel.

The revenue would be committed this way:

— Five percent to be rebated to oil and gas producing counties to compensate them for the erosion of their property tax bases.

— Twenty percent to a state trust fund to build a financial reserve for funding public education once oil and gas supplies start running out several years in the future.

— The remaining 75 percent to the school equalization program for distribution among the state's 306 local school districts.

It appeared the key votes were held by four senators: Democrat Richard Gannon of Goodland and Republicans Ed Reilly of Leavenworth, Joe Harder of Moundridge, and Don Montgomery of Sabetha.

Statehouse sources said severance tax supporters were reasonably sure they had the votes of Gannon and Reilly, leaving the issue apparently to be decided by Harder and Montgomery.

Counting Gannon, Reilly and Sen. Gus Bogina (R-Lenexa) for the severance tax gave supporters 20 votes. Bogina told constituents in Johnson County on Saturday that he would vote for the severance tax.

Senate President Ross Doyen, the chief opponent of the tax, said Friday he thought there were at least 20 "no" votes, and perhaps as many as 23.

Doctors skeptical of actual benefit gained by athletes' use of steroids

Editor's note: This is the first of a two-part series on athletes' use of steroids. The second part will deal with the physical and legal consequences of steroid use.

By JOY CULVER
Collegian Reporter

Wheaties cereal is most often thought of when a "Breakfast of Champions" is mentioned. But around gymnasiums and weight rooms the phrase has a different meaning. For athletes pumping weights, the real "Breakfast of Champions" is that of steroids used by many competitors.

Becoming a champion in sports requiring strength — such as power lifting, body building, shotput and discus — may require more than a vigorous training program and balanced diet. Many athletes use steroids as a training aid to boost their weightlifting potential — despite the fact that the use of them is illegal without a prescription from a doctor.

"Everybody wants to look good," John (not his real name), a steroid user, said. "If it helps their performance, they'll try them."

Steroids accelerate the growth of the muscle. It is possible to reach the same size naturally, but it would take more than twice the length of time, according to John.

A pyramid effect is usually experienced once an athlete begins using the drugs. First he experiences a big jump in the amount of weight lifted — usually within three to four days. After that the athlete will make progressive gains. When he goes off a cycle, there is still a small rise in gains and then a drastic, sudden drop. Once his body begins producing hormones, the lifter's body begins gaining again.

Many types of steroids are manufactured, but two — anabolic and androgenic — are common types used by athletes.

Androgenic steroids add more male hormones while anabolic steroids are build muscle mass. Most athletes try to get a balance of the two. Because steroids consist of male hormones, an athlete who ingests them may cause his or her system to stop production of those hormones.

Male athletes are the primary steroid users but many female competitors have recently begun using steroids to achieve the accelerated gains. Females face problems of developing masculine characteristics — deepening of the voice and facial hair — from steroid use.

STEROIDS ARE used primarily by competing athletes. On the national level, steroid usage is so widespread it is hard to place in an event without them, according to many users.

Russ Reiderer, football strength and conditioning coach, estimated 80 to 90 percent of national competitors use steroids. On the state level, he said about 50 percent use them.

Reiderer said that many football programs are thought to use steroids with their athletes, but K-State football greatly discourages it. Reiderer said if he suspects one of his players of being on the drugs, he will have a talk with him and explain how bad the steroids can be on the body. Usually a talk gets the athlete off the drugs, he said. If he still suspects steroids are being used, the athlete is sent to the team trainer to be tested. Reiderer said they have never had to go that far with any football player.

Blarney reigns in debate contest with mix of informal quips, slams

By ASHLEY PETERSON
Collegian Reporter

K-State experienced a bit of the blarney Friday, as a debate team from Ireland concluded its tour of 11 colleges in the Midwest and West.

According to Wendy Schiappa of the Manhattan Chamber of Commerce, and moderator for the debate, the three visiting debaters are winners of The Irish Times' national debate competitions. Coors Brewing Company sponsored the three men "to promote cultural togetherness on an academic level," Schiappa said.

The Irish team members are: Michael Byrne, graduate in scientific statistics, Gerry Foley, economics student, and Liam Plant, student in medicine. Doug Dodds, senior in political science and economics; and Chris Wheatley, senior in speech and member of the K-State Debate team, made up K-State's team. The debate topic was "The U.S. Judicial System Over-Emphasizes the Rights of the Accused."

THE TWO TEAMS used different styles of debate — the Irish team used informal, parliamentary style with emphasis on delivery and audience participation; K-State relied on fast, evidence-oriented debate methods.

During Schiappa's introduction the Irish team traded quips among themselves about their debate abilities.

Byrne then started his 10-minute delivery with a joke about Winston Churchill and Lady Astor. The joke drew laughter from the audience and his teammates. Yet, his transition smoothly into the debate topic drew the audience in unaware. Using slams against the United States and K-State during his speech, causing Dodds and Wheatley to produce a small American flag and K-State pom-pons, Byrne pointed out differences in the two countries' legal and constitutional doctrines.

"Ireland has no divorce, contraception or abortion facilities, while they are common in the U.S.," Byrne said, pointing out that stricter Irish laws provide better control.

At the end of his speech Byrne directed a double-edged put-down at his teammates and the United States.

"Gerry is to debate, what Haig is to detente," he said.

K-State, not to be outdone, directed barbs at the visitors about Irish drinking and contraception vending machines in restrooms. However, the team's serious side was logical, filled with statistics and not as audience-oriented.

When Byrne's teammates rebutted K-State's remarks they used his style in keeping the attention of the audience.

After the debate, a reception was held in the Union, allowing the audience to meet and talk to the Irishmen. When the reception ended the debate teams toured Aggieville bars.

Byrne explained Irish debating: "In Ireland we don't have a formal training in speech and debate like here, we just debate, and usually on only three topics: politics, religion and sex, in that order."

Foley added "We use humor in everything in Ireland — we have to."

'Wash out' controls chemical plant blaze

FALLS CITY, Neb. — A chemical plant fire that forced evacuation of from 1,000 to 1,300 persons was declared under control Sunday night, 12 hours after flames sent clouds of fumes over an area of southeastern Nebraska and northeastern Kansas.

Richardson County Sheriff D.L. Hogue credited a "wash out" procedure with bringing the stubborn blaze under control about 12 hours after it erupted.

The sheriff said the smoldering blaze still poured fumes into the air and a decision would not be made until this morning on when the evacuated people could return to their homes.

Hogue said dikes were erected around the Sur-Gro Fertilizer Plant to contain water required to bring the fire under control. The Falls City Fire Department and a rural department took water from the town's 2-million gallon standpipe to pour into the plant and bring the flames under control.

The sheriff said evacuees were told to stay out of the area because inhalation of a large amount of the herbicide, insecticide and fertilizer chemical fumes released in the fire could cause suffocation.

Navy locates wreckage of missing plane

NORFOLK, Va. — A Navy cargo-passenger plane missing on a flight over the Mediterranean Sea was found Sunday crashed on a mountainside on the island of Crete, a Navy spokesman said.

Lt. Cmdr. Tom Connor, a spokesman for the Atlantic Fleet Naval Air Headquarters here, said there was no information on whether any of the 11 people aboard the C1A Trader aircraft may have survived the crash.

The plane, assigned to the aircraft carrier Dwight D. Eisenhower, based in Norfolk, had been missing since Friday.

Connor said the wreckage was found about six miles north of Souda Bay, Crete, scattered between the elevations of a mountain. The wreckage was spotted by a Navy search plane.

"Due to darkness and terrain, a Navy casualty assistance team from the Eisenhower will not be able to get to the scene until first light" today, Connor said.

Grease, lost traction causes two-train collision

CHICAGO — Sheets of greasy tar paper blown onto a track apparently caused a collision of two Chicago Transit Authority trains that injured more than 40 people, authorities said.

No one was seriously hurt in the crash Saturday night, according to spokesmen for five hospitals. Most of the injured suffered minor cuts and bruises, and none required hospitalization, officials said.

CTA spokesman William Baxa said the accident occured about 8:45 p.m. when a two-car train stalled on an incline near a South Side station was struck from behind by another two-car train.

The first train stalled when it ran over tar paper blown onto the tracks from the roofs of surrounding buildings, Baxa said. Oil from the paper apparently greased the tracks and the wheels of the train, causing a loss of traction, he said.

While the train was stalled, a second train running behind it hit the slick tracks and was unable to stop as it approached the first train, Baxa said.

Bishop says nuns subject to higher authority

HAMPTON, N.H. — Four nuns who sued their bishop to save their teaching jobs say they're standing up for justice, but the church says the bishop's authority comes from Jesus Christ and can't be challenged in civil court.

The four sisters filed suit in Rockingham County Superior Court, charging that Bishop Odore Gendron, the Diocese of Manchester and the Sacred Heart School violated their contracts and their constitutional rights by firing them without a hearing.

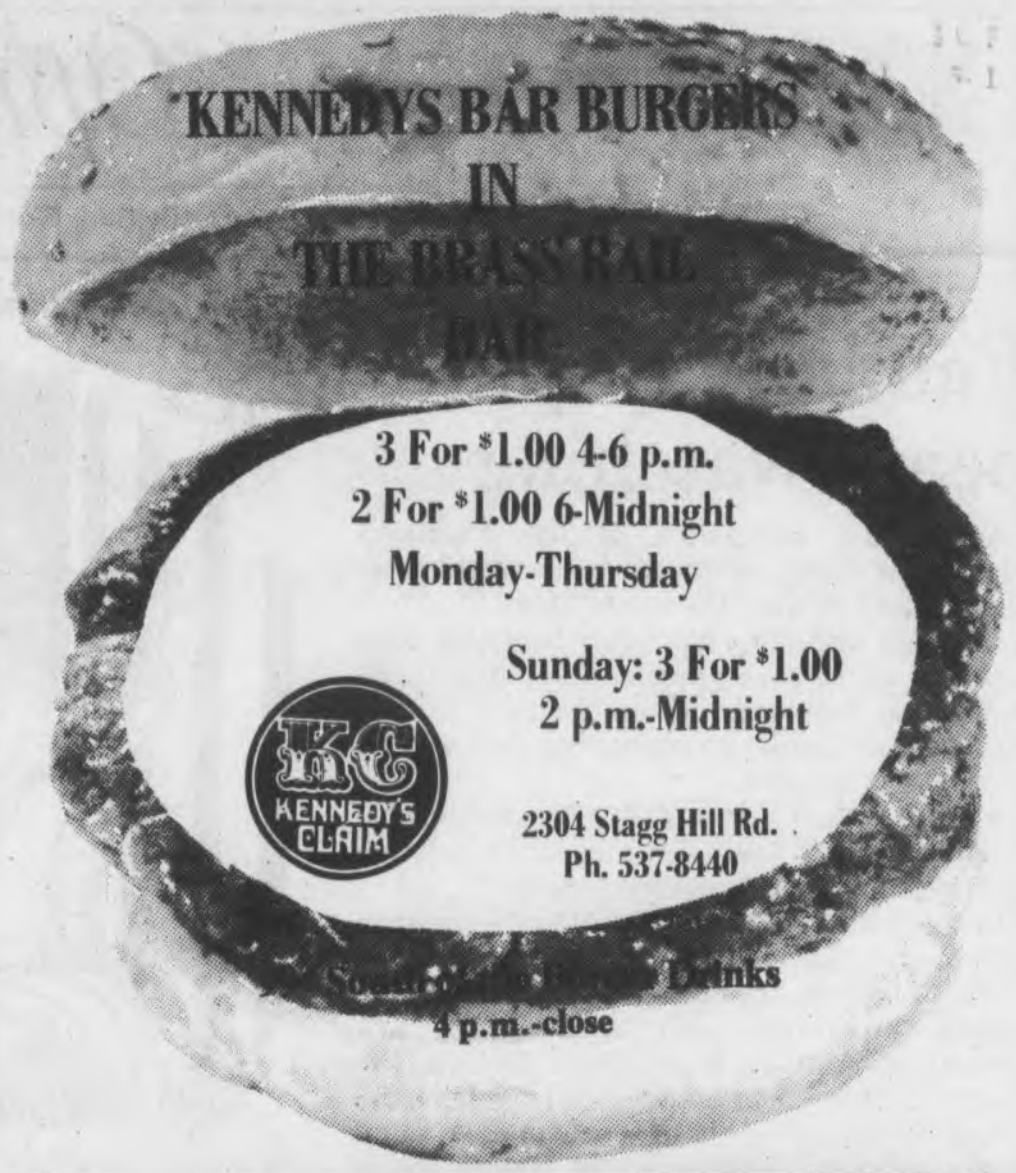
Church lawyers argued in court in Exeter last week that the entire matter is an internal problem that comes under canon law and is out of the jurisdiction of a civil court.

In a petition to dismiss the case, the diocese said bishops have the right to regulate all aspects of the teaching of Catholic doctrine, and said that authority was instituted by Christ.

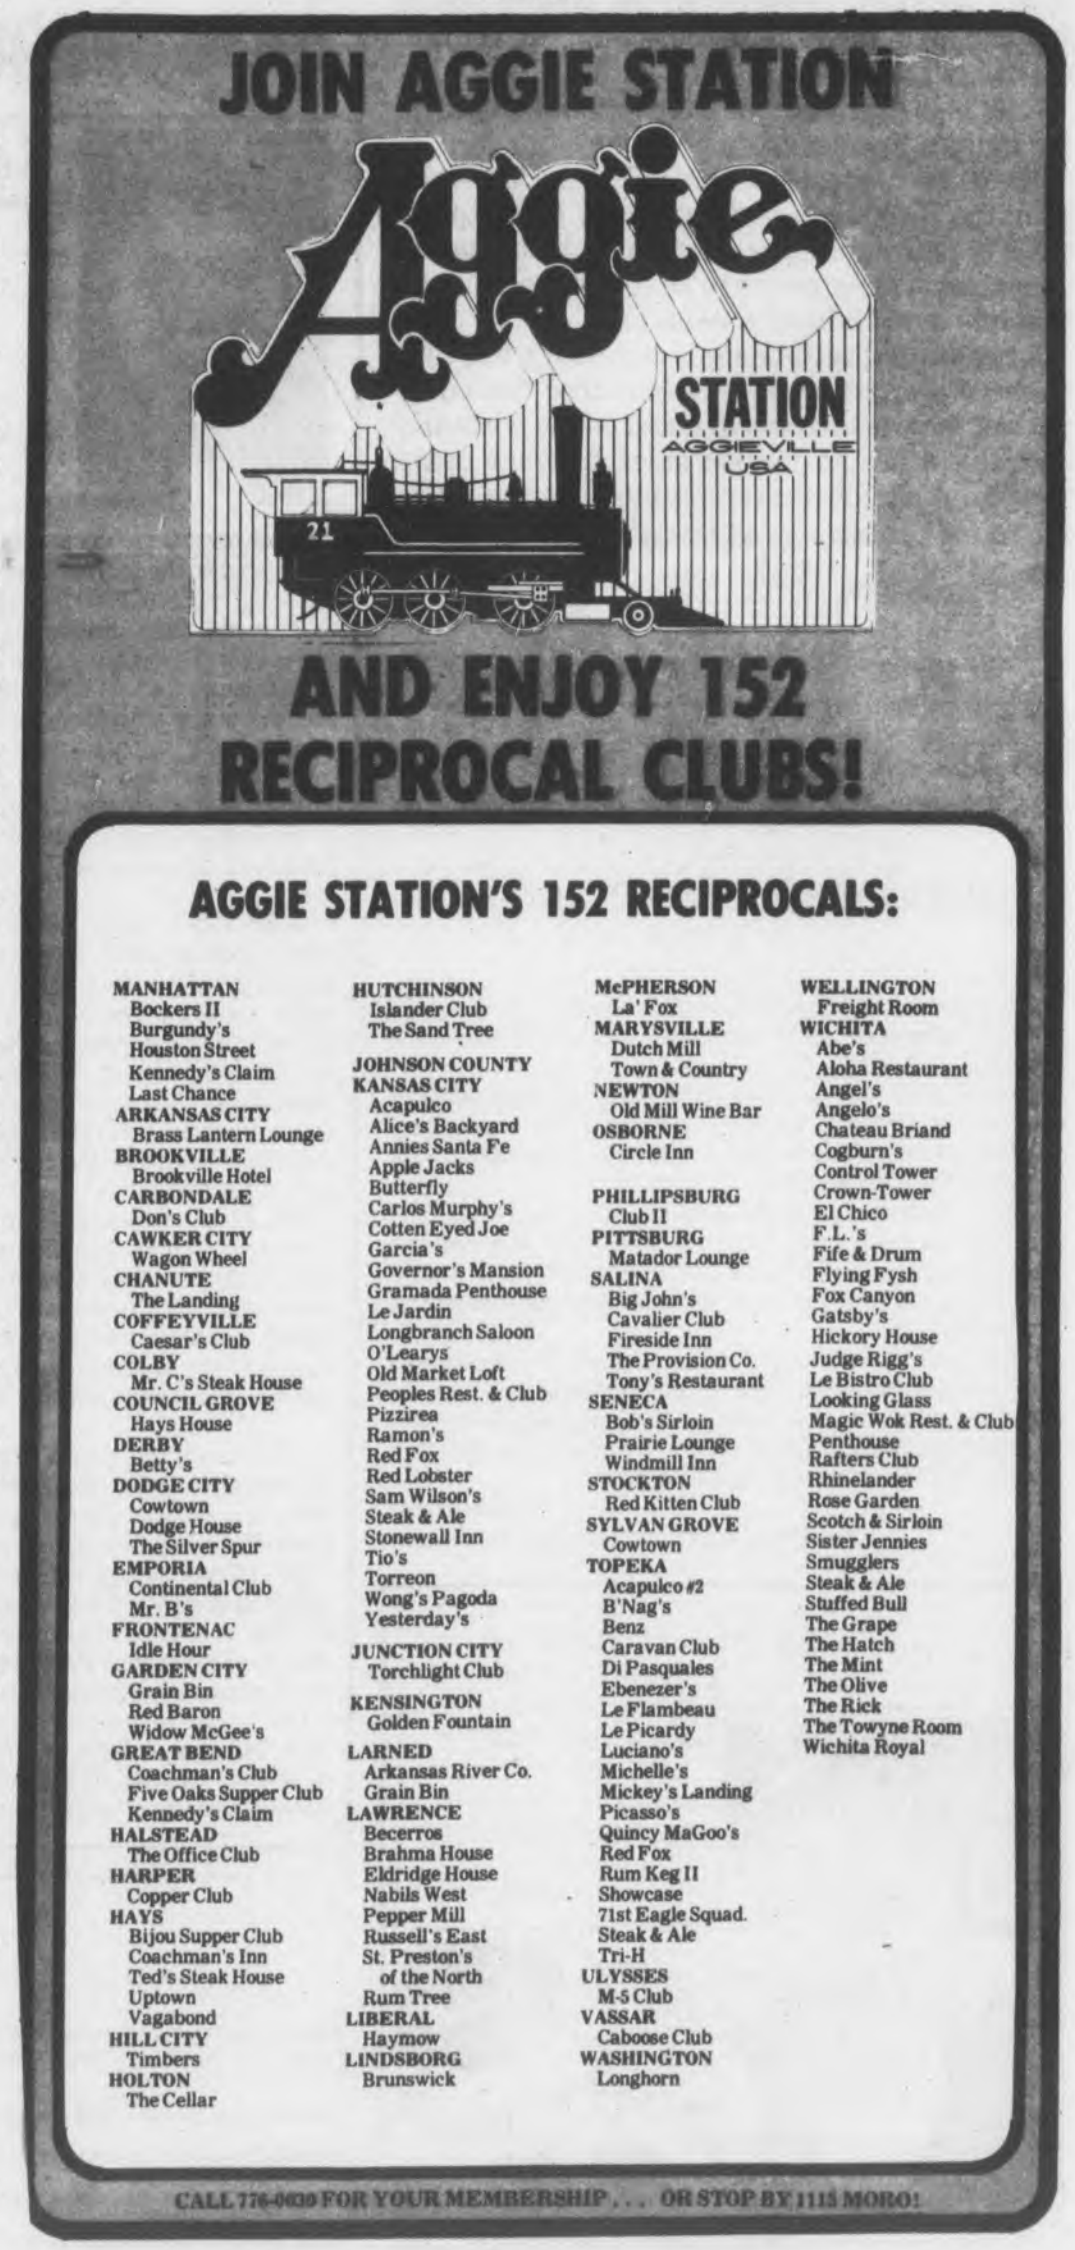
Man attributes longevity to worry-free lifestyle

LOS ANGELES — Seven years ago, Walter Casey Jones obtained a drivers' license, got behind the wheel of a motor home and began touring the country, espousing the worry-free lifestyle he says has worked for him.

He should know. He turns 110 Monday.



"Worrying never, never did anybody any good," he said a few hours before his appearance Friday on the "Tonight" show.



"I figure alcohol, cigarettes and worry are your worst three enemies, and worry is the worst of all," Jones said.

"A lot of people think that when a man is 65, he should lie down and die — that he's no more good," he said.

Falkland dispute bears watching

Argentina's occupation of the Falkland Islands has made an already tense world even more unsure of what the future holds.

Although Argentina has never been the most stable of world governments, its actions in invading the Falklands certainly should not be dismissed as simply an aberration that will go away if it is ignored.

Already a task force of British warships is steaming toward South America and a possible confrontation with Argentine forces.

In this case it is hard to take sides because both seem to have valid points.

The Falklands are one of the last vestiges of British imperialism and because they are thousands of miles from Great Britain, the English hold on them would seem to be tenuous.

And the Argentine claim seems to have some merit, although residents of the islands speak English and have said they want to remain British citizens.

But, as in many recent international disputes, the bottom line seems to be money.

There is speculation that off-shore oil wells near the Falklands could produce large quantities of petroleum (and revenue) for the nation in control. This appears to be the reason Argentina has now claimed possession.

A negotiated settlement is necessary because a direct confrontation between these two countries of the western world could cause normally peaceful allies to choose sides in what could become a major stumbling block in the quest for world peace.

Squad selection unfair

Editor,

Cheerleader selections are coming up soon but it seems that the returning girls can have their positions back without trying out.

Several girls on my floor went to the organizational meeting for tryouts. Imagine their surprise when they learned that only two full-time positions were open, with possible alternate positions.

This is totally unfair to the girls who want to try out. The cheerleading squad this year was great but who has the right to guarantee them permanant positions? Over seventy girls showed up to the organizational meeting — two girls will be selected.

I feel that during cheerleading tryouts all applicants should be on the same level. If a girl wants to be on the squad she should have to work for it. If all the girls try out, including the present cheerleaders, we can be assured that K-State will have the best squad possible.

Fundamentals in reading

The word "watchdog" is often read and heard in connection with journalism. The free press proclaims to have assumed the role of a "watchdog" for public affairs and its officials. Those seeking to uphold the vague "ethics of journalism" soon learn that watchdogs are often chained to doghouses, behind fences. The chains are those that affect every other business because journalism is just that, a business.

Frequently, the chains of communication operate through press releases, advertising packages and mounds of facts via propaganda which fill the mailbaskets of thousands of newspapers around the world.

SWITCHING JOBS, desks and mailbaskets, from Arts and Entertainment to Opinions, brings an amusing similarity and a stark difference. The badly written film press releases, touting big blondes plus posters, are replaced by news releases from the Soviet Embassy Information Department. The latter presents an interesting view of the U.S. mass media which you don't find in the Union textbooks. It raises questions concerning how correct their usage of the term "widely advertised by the U.S. mass media" is?

The highly expendable promotional albums, such as "Whatever Turns You On" by the Dells or "See Jungle, See Jungle" by Bow Wow Wow, are also replaced. While the World Anti-Communist League wants to tell the Collegian readers "Where the Chinese Communists are Headed" the Moral Majority would like us to editorially oppose bills S 1630, HR 1647 and HR 4711.

YET NOTHING seems to symbolize the business world of journalism quite like the fund-solicitation letter. In between the endless piles of phamplets appear the "Dear Friend" letters seeking money.

Mr. Harris, of the National Right to Work Foundation, would appreciate a tax deductible $500, $100, $50, $25, $15 or other to aid their battle against 12 international unions. And the Emergency Campaign to Stop the Hatch Amendment personally solicits $15 to $50 to remain "pro-choice."

One of the more interesting "Dear Friend" letters to seek Collegian dollars, as well as copy space, was penned by Ronald Reagan. The President was asking for a "most unusual sacrifice" of $120, ten dollars a month or "more if possible," for a Charter Membership in the Republican Presidential Task Force.

ON THE WHOLE the request did not seem such an "unusual sacrifice" for a "Dear Friend" letter. On the contrary, the fringe benefits offered by President Reagan far outweighed most solicitation efforts.

Besides contributing to "this once in a lifetime opportunity to maintain Republican control of the U.S. Senate" a member would receive a Medal of Merit, a lapel pin, a ceremonial flag, an embossed membership card, an inside briefing of the real stories on Capitol Hill with "The Force," their name on the President's Honor Roll of Americans and special "Action Alert" letters from Senator Bob Packwood (R-Ore.), and other national leaders.

Few television advertised specials from Ronco Corporation offer such a package.

Now, the so-called Republican newspapers may appreciate such an invitation to shape to future of American politics. And the Democratic newspapers could contribute Reagan's plea for "a glorious reality" to their bulging wastebaskets. It's simply a business decision, to buy or not to buy.

OF COURSE every business and industry has its own jargon. Today's print media prefers to term such action "endorsement." Perhaps the business transactions of the publisher's and advertising office really have little or no effect on the impartial reporting of its staff. But which effort by the newspapers do the political groups "appreciate" more, editorial or monetary support? Would readership decline if newspapers reported which "Dear Friend" letters received their reply and check?

More newspapers seem to be moving toward including pro and con opinions for major issues on their editorial pages. But in the many one paper towns how does one detect a slight tipping of the scales? Does the media itself determine what the issues are?

The only answer seems to be a cliche which is taught early in life. A cliche required to adequately wade through the press releases, advertising packages, propaganda and, wherever they fit in the picture, newspapers.

Don't believe everything you read.

Theater company re-enacts problems faced by disabled

By DARCY LINDSTROM
Collegian Reporter

An old Irish proverb says the best way to learn about another person is to walk a mile in his shoes.

Members of the Life/Song Theatre would certainly agree, Cindy Klentz, director of the group, said.

Life/Song Theatre is a community-based group that develops short theater pieces and holds workshops with "special populations," — the elderly, children, handicapped.

Members work so closely with the groups that they develop a special understanding of the problems and joys of the people, Klentz said.

"I've walked a mile in Virgean's (a cast member) shoes in the last six months and have cried and laughed and learned a lot about being handicapped," she said.

Last week, four performances of an improvisational play were performed by Life/Song Theatre, in the Purple Masque Theatre, in conjunction with the speech department. The plays were the result of six months of workshops held with members of the Topeka Resource Center for the Handicapped.

THE PLAY WAS a dramatization of the struggle of three handicapped people who come to terms with their condition, as well as the struggle of an "able-bodied" person to come to terms with the handicapped.

The play had a skeleton script, just a four-page outline, Klentz said. A written script would have presented problems for some members of the cast because their special difficulties would have prevented them from being able to read or memorize it.

One cast member, Scott Neese, learned his lines and the order of the play by listening to memory tapes over and over.

The play had a purpose for the audience, Klentz said. To educate it about handicapped persons, what they are like and how they feel.

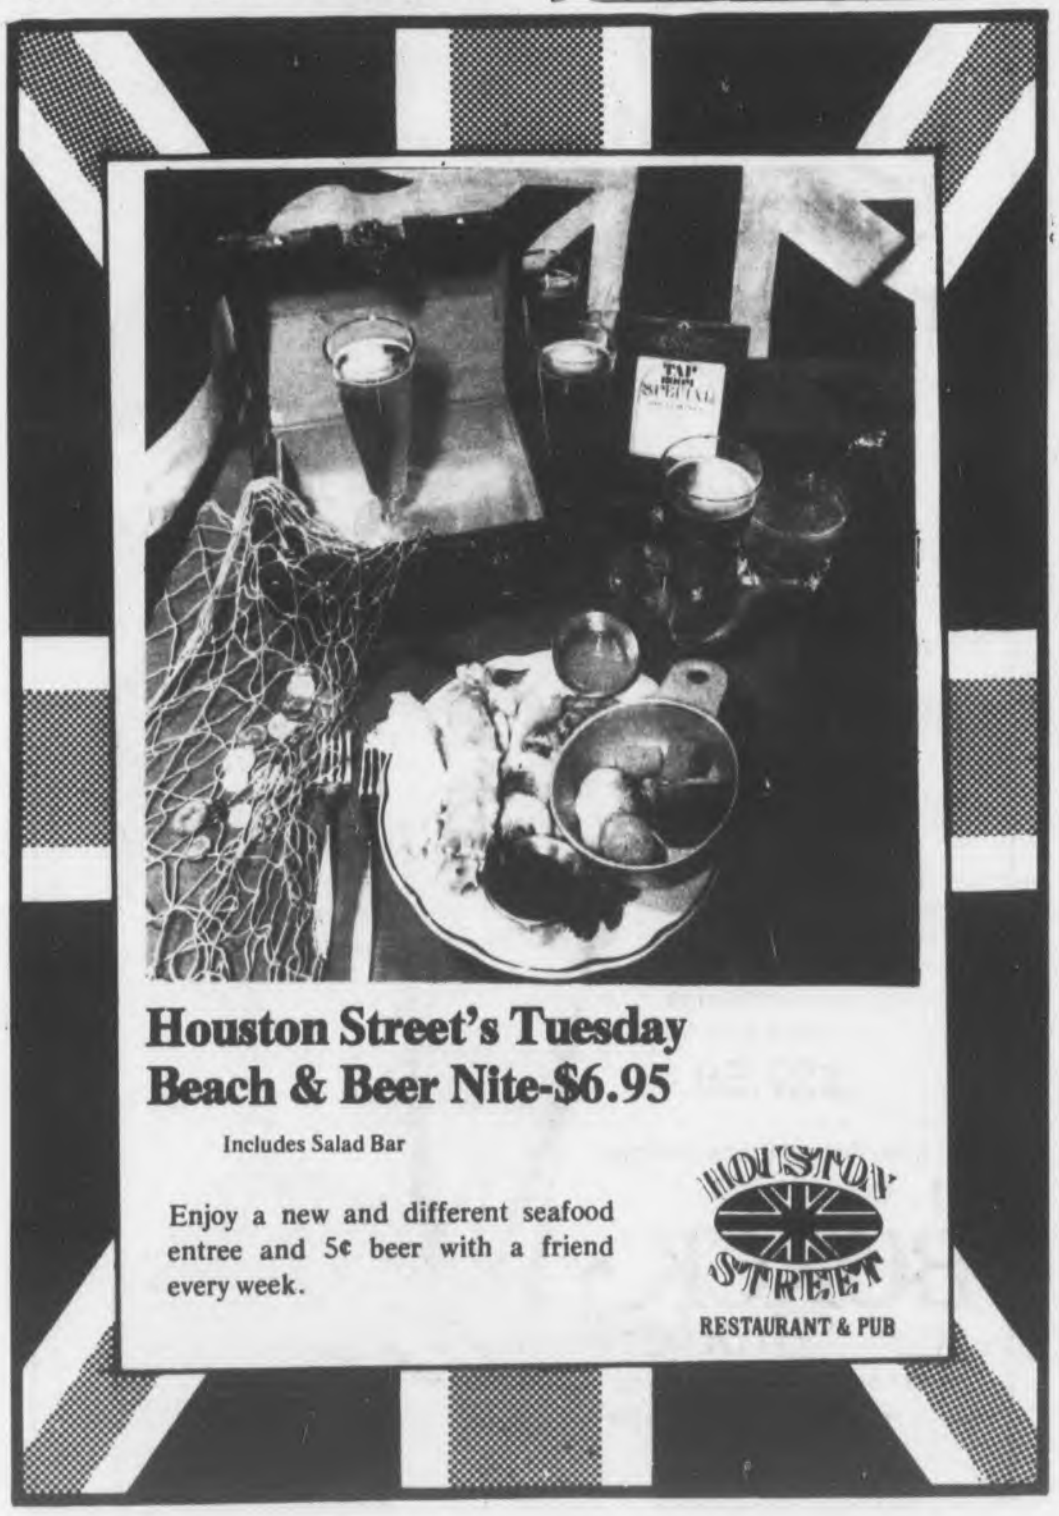
People in the audience are exposed to Laura Moor, a professional counselor, who deals with dyslexia — a problem which stigmatized her in early childhood as emotionally disturbed. They see Virgean Friedricks, a former avante-garde actress, facing herself and society after a disabling motorcycle accident. And, they view Michael Byington, legally blind since birth, expressing the rage of a handicapped person whose debilitating condition can't be diagnosed. His malady is what the handicapped call "Arthur's Syndrome," from Arthur in the book "Tell Me That You Love Me Junie Moon."

FINALLY, SANDY PECK, the "able-bodied" leader is featured in her struggle to achieve a sense of personal identity and community within the group. Peck portrayed an elderly. woman whose purpose was to help set up the handicapped person's scene and create a bit of humor, Klentz said. Some of Peck's lines came from the mothers of handicapped children she worked with, Klentz said.

The production included original music composed and performed by Jean Burnham. Some songs were written before her involvement with the play and some after her involvement with Life/Song Theatre, she said.

The song which closed the play became the group's theme song, according to Klentz and Burnham.

"Come Walk Beside Me," really showed how the group felt, Burnham said.



It was a total cooperative process that brought the show together, Klentz said.

She concluded: "We had problems, but they weren't special problems like you might think. We had personality conflicts and all the other 'normal' problems any other theater production would have."

Artists display varied wares at UFM Arts and Crafts Fair

It was a peaceful scene. A few people wandered around the airy rooms. People talked and sewed behind tables heaped with crafts.

The University For Man Arts and Crafts Fair was held Friday and Saturday. Twelve artists from Manhattan, Junction City and Riley brought crafts to sell.

Artists set up booths on the main floor of the UFM house. Crafts were piled or arranged on tables — stained glass window and table decorations, quilted vests, cloth picture frames, knitted baby clothes and clay animals.

Brochures and telephone calls alerted area artists about the fair, Janet Holcomb, fair organizer, said. They paid a $10 fee which was used to cover advertising expenses, UFM building maintenance costs and to operate the craft program, according to Holcomb. The fair was also held last spring.

"We usually don't make a whole lot of money so it doesn't go too far," she said.

The artists who participated keep the proceeds of any sales, Holcomb said.

Sharley Chang, graduate in interior design, had a table of origami, Japanese paper folding art.

Chang has lived in the United States since 1976, she said. Although she learned her craft in kindergarten, it was when she moved to the United States that she began to develop it.

Most of the figures are made with regular paper that can be bought at Varney's, she said.

Some, however, are made from patterned paper her mother sends her from Japan. The Japanese paper is of varied types — some thick and textured, some with a pattern on the original square which shows the specific animal or design to make.

K-State women win top honors, pageant titles

Two K-State women were named beauty queens in separate pageants held during the weekend. Stefani Larson, sophomore in journalism and mass communications, was named Miss Kansas-U.S.A. Sunday, and Kim Rehm, senior in marketing, was named Miss Manhattan-K-State Saturday.

Judging for the Miss Kansas-U.S.A. pageant, held at the Kansas City, Kan., Convention Center, consisted of six equally weighted categories: evening gown, personal statement, personal interview, swim suit, evening gown finals, and perceptics, a group discussion among contestants.

Larson won a trip to Biloxi, Miss., to represent Kansas in the Miss U.S.A. pageant, to be televised May 13, and an opportunity to continue to the Miss Universe pageant, plus an assortment of prizes valued at $5,000.

Rehm, a winner for the second time, won the right to compete in the Miss Kansas pageant to be held in Pratt July 8-10. If she wins, she will advance to the Miss America pageant in Atlantic City, N.J.

Rehm won a $500 scholarship and other prizes for a total of $1,250.

major building improvements in the 1970s. During that time, hundreds of millions of dollars were pumped into campus improvements for regents' institutions, he said.

The house shouldn't be "penny wise and pound foolish" until there is no longer any quality faculty, Rep. George Dean (D-Wichita), said. "Unless we continue to fund universities, our technology that sent man to the moon will go downhill," he said.

Rep. John Solbach (D-Lawrence), asked the representatives, "Are we going to maintain our educational system so it can be competitive, or allow Kansas to fall behind?"

In other action, Rep. Jessie Branson (D-Lawrence), proposed an amendment increasing OOE (other operating expenses) from 6 to 7 percent — an increase of $590,000 — for all regents' institutions except the University of Kansas Medical Center, which already had this percentage proposal.

OOE include classroom and laboratory equipment, library acquisitions, supplies, postage and telephone service, Branson explained.

Once again, Hayden opposed the amended increase.

"We have removed utilities from this (OOE) budget and that is the major cost," which is why this increase isn't needed, he said.

Branson's amendment failed 64-48. Wichita Republican Rep. Belva Ott proposed an amendment calling for an OOE increase of .5 percent. This also failed 64-48.

Rolling the ball... Finding it difficult to dribble in traffic, Jeanne Daniels (22) looks to pass the ball to a teammate during the Fourth Annual Wheelchair Basketball Benefit Game played Friday night in Ahearn Field House.

Wildcats return to Ahearn crowd to raise money for shuttle service

The only winners of the Fourth Annual Wheelchair Basketball Benefit Game, played Friday night, were those with physical disabilities.

Two hundred people were on hand to watch both the men's and women's basketball teams along with the Kansas City Purples engage in a friendly battle on the court. The Kansas City Purples are a squad consisting of players with disabilities that confine them to wheelchairs.

Gary Spani, a former K-State all-American linebacker who now stars for the Kansas City Chiefs, made a special guest appearance for the Purples. The Purples, who garnered a sparkling 17-4 record in their first season, integrated with the K-State players to form a balanced opposition.

The men's "White" team took the first half, 34-26, and the women's "White" team won the second stanza 22-21.

Tim Jankovich paced the men's White team with 10 points while Tyrone Adams and Brente Stafford, a member of the Kansas City squad, chipped in with eight and six respectively. Ted Decker, another Kansas City member, led the losers with eight points, while Greg Prudhoe added six tallies.

Priscilla Gary led a balanced attack for the women's White team with six followed by Becky Dobbins, Stafford and Lynn Crockett, also a member of the Kansas City Purples, with four points each.

The losing women's Purple squad was led by Tammy Romstad's six points while three other players added four points each: Erin Schreiber, Angie Bonner and Spani.

The game featured many humorous antics, pratfalls and mistakes which aren't prevalent during the regular season. Coach Lynn Hickey jumped off the bench at one point and sarcastically yelled at a loafing Ed Nealy for not getting down court for defense. Another incident found Jankovich, under pressure from an onrushing Parker Laketa on a fastbreak, shoot an off-balance lay-up, causing him to slip backward and land with a blow reminiscent of Charlie Chaplin.

Hickey said she enjoyed the game and recommends it continue in the future. "It gives the fans a chance to see them (the teams) do something different, like helping handicapped people," she said.

Gretchen Holden, counselor of Students for Handicapped Concerns (which sponsored the game), said the game was success due to the K-State players. "They (the Wildcats) have such a great sense of humor and the fans really loved it," she said. Game proceeds go to the operation of the K-State shuttle bus service which serves permanently and temporarily disabled students on the campus.

Outlook positive after inaugural grid scrimmage

By TIM UNRUH
Sports Editor

Working out the kinks, K-State's squadron of football players hit the gridiron in KSU Stadium Saturday for their first scrimmage of the spring season.

The scrimmage marked the final day of a weekend coaching clinic that 175 high school coaches from around the state attended. Head Coach Jim Dickey said it was the largest he'd seen in his five years at K-State.

The Wildcats will not be short on anything when the fall season rolls around. The locker rooms were packed Tuesday as 115 prospective gridders dressed for the first day of spring practice. That number includes 24 walkons, 26 returning starters, and 58 past lettermen.

Dickey said the large squad is a positive note for spring football.

DICKEY SAID the team is in much better condition than it was last spring.

"We are a good bit ahead on our running and conditioning because of the indoor facility (Brandeberry indoor workout facility) we have," he said. "We are also ahead on our team strength."

Two years ago the 'Cats had 15 athletes who could bench press 300 pounds. Last spring that number rose to 25. This season, there are 45 at that mark or better. The team leader on the bench is Captain Jack Williamson who can press 500 pounds.

Dickey said the Saturday's scrimmage showed him some good things on the offensive and the defensive side, but from his outlook, it's sometimes hard to assess the total team performance, but pointed out that quarterbacks were good protection and that his team never fumbled the ball.

"When you're a head coach, it's hard to say how the team played in a scrimmage," Dickey said. "When the defense plays well, you start worrying about the offense, and when the offense makes a big play, you wonder about the defense. I'm just waiting for the film to get back. Then we can take a good look at the total team."

THE WILDCAT offense scored on six of 12 possessions. Brad Heinrich was the leading rusher rolling up 37 yards on 37 carries. Right behind him was Mark Hundley and Greg Dageforde, each with 33 yards. Masi Toluao, K-State's leading rusher last fall, did not carry the ball.

Stan Weber, a 1981 redshirt, was the leading quarterback. He led his squad to two touchdowns and completed three of four passes for 77 yards.

Darrell Dickey, starter for the 'Cats last season, completed all three of his attempts for 23 yards, one of which was an eight-yard

Steroids

"They (steroids) are used for lifting, as a training aid," John said. "Other people don't understand why, and they think it is bad. Steroids push your body's limit higher and natural ability will never be compared to steroids."

John used steroids as a training aid because he said lifting and competing is what he is most interested in. Lifting weights has become part of his lifestyle and affects his eating and sleeping habits. He added steroids to his diet to make bigger gains in less time.

Anybody can take steroids at any level of training, John said, but he said that athletes considering it should have lifted for two years or more.

"After a certain point in training, you can only improve so much," he said.

He added that steroids spark an improvement in performance past that peak, but warned athletes younger than 20 to wait until their bodies are fully grown because steroid usage can stunt bone growth.

JOHN TAKES his steroids in shot and pill forms on six-to-eight-week cycles (using daily for six to eight weeks and then staying off for the same period of time). He said the pills work throughout his body and help to improve his squats. The shots are injected into the hip area and work more to improve his bends and strengthen his legs.

He said the pills are more toxic to his system because they have to be digested before working on the muscle. The shots are not as harmful to the body, he said, because they have secondary effects on the liver and kidney and go directly to the muscle first.

Dr. Guy Smith, Lafene Student Health Center's sports medicine doctor, said that the shots are as toxic as the pills. He discouraged athletes from using steroids, and said he thinks an athlete should compete naturally and not use the aid of drugs.

Going off a cycle can be a depressing experience for steroid users. Rob Beck, senior in foods and nutrition, said he considered using steroids but decided against it for health reasons. He also told of a friend who became depressed when he went off the cycle. The gains made with the drugs disappeared and his motivation dropped.

Beck said that he noticed that friends who used steroids experienced a psychological need as well as a physical need for them. He said many athletes train more diligently because they think they have a little bit of help.

The American College of Sports Medicine recently released a statement discouraging the use of steroids by athletes. In several studies done by the ACSM, no conclusive evidence has been found to show that steroids actually help or hinder athletic performance.

IN AN ARTICLE in the September issue of Muscle and Fitness, it said anabolic-androgenic steroids have not often been shown to cause significant improvements in strength, aerobic endurance, lean bodymass or bodyweight.

Studies such as this one have made doctors skeptical about whether steroids actually help athletic performance, Smith said. Most doctors are wary of athletes using steroids.

Smith said most doctors are more concerned about the possible harmful side effects from steroids than the potential gain.

John said he is aware of the dangers spoken of by doctors, but that he has been able to see his gains as well as experience some of the side effects. He said he believes athletes who use steroids know more about the practical uses of them than doctors.

"I think they're safe as long as you use common sense," he said.

Track team splits, fares well

They were everywhere but Manhattan. At least it seemed that way. K-State's track team split up this weekend to participate in three separate meets.

In the 55th Annual Texas Relays Friday, Doug Lytle won the pole vault with a leap of 17-8¼, just one-half inch shy of his personal best, 17-8¾. Veryl Switzer also competed in the meet winning the long jump with a leap of 25-3¾.

At the Martin Luther King Games in Palo Alto, Calif., K-State also had a good showing by javelin thrower Ray Hanson, who won with a distance of 255-6. Kelly Wenlock also competed but did not place in the meet.

Meanwhile, other Wildcats were competing in Cape Giradeau, Mo., at the Southeast Missouri Invitational. In the men's division, K-State's Brian Howie placed second in the 110-meter high hurdles with a time of 14.35 after winning the preliminaries with a time of 14.04. According to Assistant Coach Randy Cole, Howie's time is only .08 seconds shy of qualifying for the national outdoor meet in Provo, Utah, in June.96.

In the men's 1500 meters, Rick McKean and John Holliday placed fifth and sixth respectively with times of 4:00.31 and 4:00.86. In the steeplechase, Mark Sageser placed fifth with a time of 9:10.8 and in the 1600-meter medley relay K-State's tam, McKean, Sageser, Monte Johnson and Holliday, finished sixth with a time of 17:38.65.

On the women's side, the 'Cats proved their competitiveness as seven athletes placed well for K-State.

In the 1500-meter run, Janel LeValley placed third with a time of 4:40.70. In the 800-meter relay, the team of LeVally, Beets Kolarik, Ann Riedy and Nancy Freshnock finished third with a time of 9:43.81.

Kolarik placed third in the high jump with a leap of 5-6, Janice Stucky placed second and sixth in the shot put and discus respectively with distances of 43-4½ and 129-4. In the javelin, K-State's Peggy Hopkins finished fourth with a throw of 120-10 and in the 100-yard high hurdles Deb Walker finished second with a time of 14.54.

According to Assistant Coach Barry Anderson, the 'Cats have made tremendous improvements since their season opener in El Paso, Texas.

The Wildcat's next meet will be a triangular in Manhattan.

touchdown loft to Eric Bailey.

Donnie Campbell, another 1981 redshirt, completed seven of nine for 60 yards. Doug Bogue went six of eight for 55 yards and Tim Overmiller completed three of six for 52 yards.

Rusty Hill, a reserve quarterback last fall, hasn't taken any snaps this spring. Instead, he will have the chance to inflict some of the pain he once received, as a defensive cornerback. Hill, who was sidelined Saturday with a pulled muscle, said he is in favor of the move.

HILL SAID THE returning redshirts are helping both physically and mentally. He said next season's outlook is much better.

"Realistically, I thought we could win seven or eight games last season," Hill said. "I go into every season thinking we can win them all, but I know we can win every game next season.

"The redshirts returning have helped our team. They came in hungry and have really been bustin' some heads out there. Morale was good last season, but it's better now."
